Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the target gains a power bonus to damage rolls equal to your Intelligence modifier. While the target is adjacent to your spirit companion, the power bonus increases by 2. In addition, when any enemy hits the target and deals damage, you can use an immediate interrupt to end this effect and make the attack deal half damage.

Screening Branches — Shaman Utility 16

A tangled mass of branches, vines, and leaves provides defense against your enemies' attacks and soothes your allies' wounds.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Primal
Minor Action Area wall 4 within 20 squares
Effect: You conjure a wall of branches and vines. The wall can be up to 2 squares high and must be on a solid surface, and it lasts until the end of your next turn. The wall provides superior cover, but creatures adjacent to it can make ranged attacks through it without taking the -5 penalty to attack rolls.

Entering a wall square costs 2 extra squares of movement. Any ally adjacent to the wall at the start of his or her turn gains 5 + your Constitution modifier temporary hit points.

Sustain Minor: The wall persists.

Spirit's Regeneration — Shaman Utility 16

A glow of regenerative light surrounds your allies and increases in intensity while they are next to your spirit companion.

Daily ✦ Healing, Primal
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One or two creatures in burst
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, each target gains regeneration 5 while bloodied. The regeneration increases to 10 while the target is adjacent to your spirit companion.

Spirit of an Ancient Enemy

In some extraordinary cases, a shaman might gain a spirit companion that was once an ancient enemy of the shaman's ancestors or tribe, but which has been reformed, to a greater or lesser degree, through its death and bonding with the flowing spirits of the primal world. A shaman who has such a spirit companion is destined either for great things or a terrible death. If you want to adopt this option for your shaman and your DM agrees, it might generate a substantial share of the plot complications in the game. Ideally, your DM will repay you by pointing you toward occasional treasures and fantastic destinies—unless a savage death finds you and your spirit companion first.

Level 17 Encounter Evocations

Boar's Toss — Shaman Attack 17

Your spirit companion slams your enemy through the air, leaving it open for your allies' ranged attacks.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d10 + Wisdom modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares. Then move your spirit companion to a square adjacent to it, and each ally within 10 squares of the target can make a ranged basic attack against it as a free action.
Watcher Spirit: The allies gain a power bonus to the damage rolls of the ranged basic attacks equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Flesh Ripper's Claws — Shaman Attack 17

Your spirit companion slashes your foe, leaving it unbalanced and vulnerable to your ally's attack.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d10 + Wisdom modifier damage, and an ally adjacent to the target can make a melee basic attack against it as a free action. If that attack hits, the target is knocked prone.
Protector Spirit: If the target stands up on its next turn, an ally adjacent to it can make a melee basic attack against it as a free action.

Hunt and Return — Shaman Attack 17

Your spirit companion ranges ahead for a moment, attacking an enemy before retreating toward your allies.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Stalker Spirit: You gain a +2 bonus to the attack roll if no creatures are within 3 squares of the target.
Hit: 3d8 + Wisdom modifier damage, or 4d8 + Wisdom modifier damage if no creatures are adjacent to the target.
Effect: After the attack, you can move your spirit companion 4 squares.

Spirit Lance — Shaman Attack 17

Your spirit companion's form wavers momentarily as a spear of brilliant energy lances from it toward your enemy.

Encounter ✦ Force, Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Ranged spirit 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 3d10 + Wisdom modifier force damage.

HECTOR ORTIZ

Thorn Ally — Shaman Attack 17

Thorny branches from thickets in the spirit realm erupt from your spirit companion to pierce and entangle your enemy.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, any enemy that starts its turn adjacent to your spirit companion is restrained until the end of your next turn.

Level 19 Daily Evocations

Ancestors' Drum — Shaman Attack 19

A spectral drum created by your ancestors manifests in your hands, thundering until you put it aside or until its power reaches a crescendo.

Daily ✦ Healing, Implement, Primal, Thunder
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier thunder damage.
Effect: One ally in the burst can spend a healing surge.
Sustain Standard: The size of the burst increases by 1, and you make the attack again. After you use the power as a close burst 3, it can't be sustained.

Spirit of the Hunter's Soul — Shaman Attack 19

The spirit of a great hunter appears and strikes at your foe with a mighty attack. It then bonds with an ally to continue the onslaught.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 5d8 + Wisdom modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Choose an ally within range. That ally gains a +5 power bonus to damage rolls against the target until the end of the encounter. While that ally is adjacent to your spirit companion, add your Intelligence modifier to the power bonus.

Tree Father's Ward — Shaman Attack 19

You call on Tree Father to punish your enemies for attacking and to reward your allies for fighting bravely.

Daily ✦ Healing, Implement, Primal
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: One or two enemies in blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d8 + Wisdom modifier damage, and the target takes a -4 penalty to attack rolls (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Each bloodied ally in the blast regains hit points as if he or she had spent a healing surge.

Wind of Death and Mercy — Shaman Attack 19

Your spirit companion joins with a wind spirit to entwine your enemy in chilly currents. Your allies are then invigorated by this union.

Daily ✦ Cold, Healing, Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 5d10 + Wisdom modifier cold damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The first ally to regain hit points while adjacent to your spirit companion regains 1d12 additional hit points. The second ally to do so regains 2d12 additional hit points, and the third ally to do so regains 3d12 additional hit points. This effect ends after the third ally regains these additional hit points or at the end of the encounter.

Level 22 Utility Evocations

Medicines of Many Forms — Shaman Utility 22

You scatter medicinal herbs among your allies, healing body, mind, and spirit.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Primal
Minor Action Close blast 5
Target: Each ally in blast
Effect: Each target can choose to either make a saving throw, spend a healing surge, or gain 20 temporary hit points.

Natural Rebirth — Shaman Utility 22

Sensing an ally about to cross through death's veil, you call on earth spirits to keep the soul from departing. The spirits restore the ally to health, imbued with primal power.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Primal
Minor Action Close burst 20
Target: One dying ally in burst
Effect: The target regains hit points as if he or she had spent a healing surge. Until the end of the encounter, the target is immune to effects that immobilize, restrain, or slow.

Spirit of the Cunning General — Shaman Utility 22

The spirit of a legendary war leader settles on your form, inspiring your allies to mighty deeds.

Daily ✦ Primal
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, when any ally within 3 squares of your spirit companion spends an action point to make an attack and misses all targets with it, that ally regains the action point and can spend it again during this encounter.

Spirit Realm — Shaman Utility 22

You dissolve your connection to your spirit companion for a short time so that it can infuse itself into the spirits of the area, expanding its influence on the world.

Daily ✦ Primal, Spirit, Zone
Minor Action Area burst 3 within 10 squares
Special: Your spirit companion must be in the burst.
Effect: Your spirit companion disappears (if you have multiple spirit companions, they all disappear). The burst creates a zone of spirits that lasts until the end of your next turn. Any effect that refers to being adjacent to or within a certain number of squares of your spirit companion instead applies to targets within the zone. You can't use call spirit companion while the zone persists.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists.

Spirits of Recovery — Shaman Utility 22

Luminous spirits of ancestral tribal healers appear around your allies, tending their wounds.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Minor Action Close burst 2
Target: Each ally in burst
Effect: Each target can make a saving throw against an effect that a save can end. A target who saves gains 1d10 + your Wisdom modifier temporary hit points.

Level 23 Encounter Evocations

Blood-Red Bonds — Shaman Attack 23

Your spirit companion wounds your foe and then ruthlessly pursues your enemies.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, enemies take a –4 penalty to all defenses while adjacent to your spirit companion. In addition, if an enemy starts its turn adjacent to your spirit companion but does not end that turn adjacent to it, you can use a free action at the end of that turn to move your spirit companion a number of squares equal to your speed to a square that is nearer to that enemy.

Eagle's Aerie — Shaman Attack 23

Your spirit companion launches into the sky, diving on your enemies and herding them toward your allies.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Close burst spirit 3
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d6 + Wisdom modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares. The target grants combat advantage to your allies until the end of your next turn.
Watcher Spirit: Until the end of your next turn, the target can't gain the benefits of cover against your allies.

Mighty Spirit Leap — Shaman Attack 23

Your spirit companion leaps among your enemies and makes furious attacks, which inspire your allies to strike just as viciously.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One, two, or three creatures
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d10 + Wisdom modifier damage.
Effect: After each attack roll, you can move your spirit companion a number of squares equal to your speed. Roll a d6 for each target you hit and total the rolls. Until the end of your next turn, your allies gain a bonus to damage rolls equal to the result while adjacent to your spirit companion.
Stalker Spirit: Add your Intelligence modifier to the bonus to damage rolls.

Spirit of the Ram — Shaman Attack 23

Your spirit companion transforms into a cluster of leaping ram spirits, which empower your allies to charge your foes.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Close burst spirit 2
Target: Each ally in burst
Effect: Each target can charge an enemy as a free action, with a +4 power bonus to the attack roll and a +5 bonus to the damage roll. If the charge attack hits, the target pushes the enemy 3 squares.
Protector Spirit: The number of squares the target pushes the enemy equals 2 + your Constitution modifier.

Spirit of the Vengeful Mountain — Shaman Attack 23

Your spirit companion manifests the essence of the impassable mountain, forming an impenetrable barrier against your foes.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Close burst spirit 3
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, the target is restrained and can't teleport.
World Speaker Spirit: Until the end of your next turn, your allies gain a bonus to attack rolls against the target equal to your Constitution modifier.

Huntmaster's Horn — Shaman Attack 25

The towering spirit of a master of the wild hunt appears above you and blows a horn, shaking your foes' resolve and calling your allies to battle.

Daily ✦ Fear, Implement, Primal, Psychic
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each enemy in blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 5d6 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).
Effect: Each ally in the blast gains a power bonus to damage rolls equal to your Intelligence modifier, and creatures that are slowed or immobilized grant combat advantage to them. These effects last until the end of the encounter.

Shaman Pairs

A few tribes practice a deadly form of shamanic initiation. Instead of initiating a single shaman, two paired tribes each send a candidate through a series of difficult trials, with only one tribe member surviving to become a new shaman. The other tribe member then becomes the new shaman's spirit companion. This practice follows the path of the elder spirits known as the Hunter Twins (page 125).

In most paired tribes, the two would-be shamans start as friends and end as allies, understanding that the tribes' unique magic demands that one sacrifice the rest of his or her life to become a spirit companion. A few of the more warmongering or evil-aligned tribes treat the paired initiation as an outright combat challenge witnessed by both tribes, binding the loser as a spirit companion through the focused will of the entire tribe and its warlike ancestors.

Peacemaker's Lodge — Shaman Attack 25

A ring of stone spirits forms in front of you, and a calming haze washes over those inside it.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal, Psychic, Zone
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each enemy in blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 4d10 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.
Effect: The blast creates a zone of tranquility until the end of your next turn. Creatures within the zone take a penalty to attack rolls equal to your Constitution modifier. Your allies don't take this penalty while adjacent to your spirit companion.

Stormhawk's Gambit — Shaman Attack 25

You call on the generosity of Stormhawk, sending your enemies crashing down with a blast of power and lifting you and your allies into the sky with primal grace.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each enemy in blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 5d6 + Wisdom modifier damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). A flying target crashes.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, when you or any ally starts his or her turn within 5 squares of your spirit companion, that character gains a fly speed equal to his or her speed and can hover until the end of his or her next turn.

Sunder Spirit — Shaman Attack 25

You drag your foe's soul from its body and sever the connection, forcing your enemy to reestablish the link or perish. Your spirit companion then uses the foe's life force to heal your allies.

Daily ✦ Healing, Implement, Necrotic, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 3d10 + Wisdom modifier necrotic damage, and the target is knocked unconscious (save ends).
Each Failed Saving Throw: Each ally adjacent to your spirit companion regains 5 hit points.
Third Failed Saving Throw: The target drops to 0 hit points.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).
Each Failed Saving Throw: Each ally adjacent to your spirit companion regains 5 hit points.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, any bloodied ally who starts his or her turn adjacent to your spirit companion regains 5 hit points.

Level 27 Encounter Evocations

Conquering Storm Spirit — Shaman Attack 27

Your spirit companion becomes a cyclone, which distracts your enemies and gives your allies more chances to strike.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Close burst spirit 3
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, the target provokes opportunity attacks when it makes any attack.
World Speaker Spirit: Until the end of your next turn, the target takes a penalty to attack rolls equal to your Constitution modifier.

Forcing the Threat — Shaman Attack 27

Your spirit companion launches a deadly attack, forcing your enemy to pay attention to it or suffer more wounds.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 4d6 + Wisdom modifier damage, and the target is marked by your spirit companion until the end of your next turn or until your spirit companion disappears. Until the mark ends, whenever the target makes an attack that doesn't include your spirit companion as a target, the target takes 2d6 damage.
Protector Spirit: The penalty to attack rolls that the target takes from being marked by this power equals your Constitution modifier instead of -2.

Hunter in the Sky — Shaman Attack 27

You call on the spirit of the great sky hunter to slay your foe. As the spirit's shadow moves across the battlefield, your foe's attention is drawn to the danger lurking above.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Ranged spirit 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit?: 4d10 + Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, your allies gain a +2 bonus to ranged attack rolls against the target while they are adjacent to your spirit companion.
Watcher Spirit: The bonus to ranged attack rolls equals 1 + your Dexterity modifier.

Ravenous Spirit — Shaman Attack 27

Your spirit companion feasts on the enemy, gaining health for your friends.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 4d10 + Wisdom modifier damage. If the attack reduces the target to 0 hit points, you and your allies regain hit points equal to one-half your level + your Wisdom modifier if adjacent to your spirit companion.

Warthane Ally — Shaman Attack 27

An ancient leader of your people emerges from the spirit realm to strike your enemy, imparting knowledge of your foes' weaknesses to your spirit companion before returning to its honored place.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, your allies gain a +5 power bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls with at-will attack powers while adjacent to your spirit companion.

Level 29 Daily Evocations

Heart of Bedlam — Shaman Attack 29

All around you, confusion reigns as you redirect creatures' instinctual urges of violence toward opponents of your choosing.

Daily ✦ Primal
Standard Action Personal
Effect: As the first action of each of your turns until the end of the encounter, you can use a free action to cause one creature within 2 squares of your spirit companion to make a basic attack as a free action against another creature of your choice.

Spiritblood Vines — Shaman Attack 29

Patches of red and green vines spring up from the ground, tangling your enemies. You can destroy a vine to release the primal energy it holds, healing a nearby ally.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Healing, Implement, Primal
Standard Action Close burst 5
Effect: You conjure vines in four unoccupied squares in the burst. The vines last until the end of your next turn. When the vines appear, each vine makes the following attack. As a standard action, you can cause each vine to make the attack again. A creature can be hit by this power only once per round.
Target: One creature adjacent to the vine
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Wisdom modifier damage, and the target is restrained (save ends).
Sustain Minor: The vines persist, and you can destroy a vine. If you do so, one ally in that square or adjacent to it can either spend a healing surge or regain 20 hit points.

Spirit of Fiery Hatred — Shaman Attack 29

A spirit of burning hatred enters your foe and consumes it from the inside. When your enemy falls, your allies rejoice.

Daily ✦ Fire, Healing, Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d10 + Wisdom modifier fire damage, and ongoing 15 fire damage (save ends). If this power reduces the target to 0 hit points, each ally adjacent to your spirit companion can spend a healing surge.
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, when any ally adjacent to your spirit companion hits an enemy, that enemy takes ongoing 5 fire damage (save ends).

Spirit Torrent — Shaman Attack 29

With the sound of crashing waves, a great spirit rains blows on your enemy, then recedes within your spirit companion, where it waits to help your allies batter your foes again.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 7d10 + Wisdom modifier damage.
Effect: The first time any ally hits an enemy adjacent to your spirit companion, the attack deals 1d12 extra damage to that enemy. The second time any ally hits an enemy adjacent to your spirit companion, the attack deals 2d12 extra damage to that enemy. The third time any ally hits an enemy adjacent to your spirit companion, the attack deals 3d12 extra damage to that enemy. This effect ends after the third attack hits or at the end of the encounter.

Spring's Laughter — Shaman Attack 29

A fresh breeze swirls around your enemy, confounding its attacks.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: The target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws, and the damage from its damage rolls is reduced to 0 (save ends both).
Miss: The target is weakened (save ends).

Shamans and Twins

Not all ancestor spirits are spirits of adult members of a tribe. Sometimes a young shaman acquires a spirit companion that was the spirit of an ancestor who died young, so that the shaman engages with a peer. This sort of relationship is especially common in cases when one twin dies in the womb, in childbirth, or early in childhood. Shamans are always rare, but the surviving twin in such a situation is much more likely to become a shaman than any other ordinary person. The spirit of the twin might become the shaman's spirit companion, or it might join the ranks of the many other spirits that flow around the shaman during his or her lifetime. Sometimes the dead twin's spirit vanishes without explanation, leading the shaman into a lifelong quest to find this missing sibling spirit.

Disciple of Winds

"The wind carries with it a voice of power, but only those who listen closely can hear it."

Prerequisite: Shaman, call spirit companion power

Just as the gentlest wind stirs grains of sand when it travels, so too do disciples of the winds take an active role in the events and lives they come into contact with during their wanderings. As a disciple of the winds, you are a shaman of wind spirits, from the gentle breeze that brings summer's warmth to the ferocious storm that scours the land, ripping trees from the earth. You particularly honor Stormhawk, and that spirit's range of emotions and thirst for vengeance are the standard by which you measure your own actions.

Although you sometimes choose to commune with the spirits of the wind among the aeries of great mountains, you seek adventure wherever the winds carry you, embracing happenstance and luck as omens of the wind spirits. If you arrive at a castle besieged by giants, you gladly join the fight against the invaders, because the winds led you there to take part in events. Where the winds travel, you follow, and you are no mere observer.

BEN WOOTTEN

Disciple of Winds Path Features

Wind Shroud (11th level): When you use a primal healing power, you can slide the target 1 square.

Disciple of the Winds Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, each ally within 5 squares of you can shift 3 squares as a free action.

Wind's Resilience (16th level): If an enemy pulls, pushes, or slides an ally within 5 squares of you, you can slide that ally 1 square as a free action after the forced movement.

Disciple of Winds Evocations

Target: Each enemy in blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 4d6 + Wisdom modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares. The target is dazed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and you slide the target 1 square. The target is dazed until the end of your next turn.
Effect: You slide each ally in the blast 3 squares.

Everflame Guardian

"The first fire burned the hottest."

Prerequisite: Shaman

When Everflame first sparked upon the world, it left behind fires that burned without fuel, stoked only by Everflame's essence. Guided by the spirits, shamans gathered these embers and tended to them. Even though Everflame originated outside the world, with time and careful tending by these Everflame guardians, its fires became part of the natural order.

As an Everflame guardian, you embrace two equal tasks. On one hand, you search for demons, devils, primordials, and other creatures that have intruded into the world, scouring them with the fiery might of Everflame. On the other hand, you seek to ensure that new life rises in the aftermath of great calamity. Whether a volcanic eruption destroys a region, a great fire burns a forest, or a legion of monsters disrupts the natural order, you seek to nurture the world back to health, believing that no force, not even Everflame itself, can extinguish hope or life.

Everflame Guardian Path Features

Guardian of the Flame (11th level): You gain resist 5 fire. If you already have fire resistance, it increases by 5.

Everflame Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, each ally within 5 squares of you regains 5 hit points, and each enemy within 5 squares of you gains vulnerable 5 fire until the end of your next turn. In addition, each enemy within 5 squares of you that has fire resistance or immunity to fire loses it until the end of your next turn.

Renewing Flames (16th level): When you heal an ally with a primal healing power, one enemy adjacent to that ally takes 5 fire damage.

Everflame Guardian Evocations

Spark of Life — Everflame Guardian Attack 11

Flames erupt around your enemies, charring their flesh while comforting your allies.

Encounter ✦ Fire, Healing, Implement, Primal
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d6 + Wisdom modifier fire damage.
Effect: Each bloodied ally in the burst regains 5 + your Wisdom modifier hit points.

Guardian's Shield — Everflame Guardian Utility 12

You draw forth a tiny shard of Everflame. Under its halo, life flourishes.

Encounter ✦ Fire, Primal
Minor Action Close burst 2
Target: You and each ally in burst
Effect: Each target gains resist 5 to all damage until the end of your next turn. The first time any enemy deals damage to the target before the end of your next turn, that enemy takes 5 fire damage.

Elder Flame — Everflame Guardian Attack 20

You call forth a living piece of Everflame and set it against your enemies.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Fire, Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Effect: You conjure a shard of Everflame in an unoccupied square within range. The shard lasts until the end of the encounter. When any ally within 2 squares of the shard hits an enemy, the attack deals 1d10 extra fire damage to that enemy. As a move action, you can move the shard 5 squares. You can make the following attack, centered on the shard. Doing so destroys the shard.
Minor Action Close burst 2
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 4d8 + Wisdom modifier fire damage.

WARREN MAHY

Great Elder

"We never see the whole of the world, never understand it completely. But a spirit from the dawn times walks beside me, and our power does not require perfect understanding."

Prerequisite: Shaman, call spirit companion power, World Speaker Spirit class feature

Shamans know that the spirits are not truly the size of a human, an elf, or a panther. The spirits are vast, small, or whatever they are called on to be by the world's needs. Shamans know this to be true, but not all shamans can master their unconscious expectations of the spirits. Each spirit companion appears as a creature of the shaman's size because of its link to the shaman, and as allies and friends, both share an image, a reflection, within the world of spirits.

You have seen partway through this veil. As a follower of the world speaker tradition, you know that your spirit companion is vast. By seeing part of this truth, you know that your spirit companion's size approaches that of an elder spirit, having a touch of the scope and power you will acquire if you live to fulfill an epic destiny.

As an elder spirit, your spirit companion protects your allies as it has always protected the people of the world. Its knowledge, allied with your understanding of nature, is sometimes the only shield your allies require.

Great Elder Path Features

Elder Presence (11th level): As a minor action, you can make your spirit companion Large or Medium.

Great Elder Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, allies adjacent to your spirit companion gain a +2 bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn.

Elder Counsel (16th level): When an enemy attacks the Will of an ally adjacent to your spirit companion, that ally's Will can equal yours if he or she chooses.

Great Elder Evocations

Great Reaching Spirit Great Elder Attack 11

Your spirit companion reaches out to its full length and slams your enemies, catching them off guard and forcing them to hesitate for a moment.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1 (or 2 if your spirit companion is Large)
Target: One or two creatures
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, you and your allies gain a +2 bonus to all defenses while adjacent to your spirit companion.

Great Hymn of Nature Great Elder Utility 12

In the spirit world, the song is many-layered and hours long. In the natural world, you hum three bars and the spirits do the rest.

Daily ✦ Primal
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You make a Nature check. Until the end of your next turn, your allies can use the result of that check in place of their defenses while adjacent to your spirit companion.

An End to Tolerance Great Elder Attack 20

Moved to anger, the World Spirit allows none to escape.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal, Psychic
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each enemy in blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 4d6 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, any enemy that starts its turn adjacent to your spirit companion chooses either to be dazed until the end of its turn or to take psychic damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

RALPH BEISNER

Keen Eagle

"A moment. Follow her flight. Now!"

Prerequisite: Shaman, call spirit companion power, Watcher Spirit class feature

You are part of the watcher spirit tradition. Though you hesitate to speak ill of it, you have the sense that its founding members might have focused too much on watching the world and not enough on listening to the spirits. Your eagle spirit companion has always talked with you, telling you secrets not spoken of by your watcher spirit mentors.

Other shamans' spirit companions have their own advantages, such as a knack for healing or a strong sense of nature. As a keen eagle shaman, you have a bloodthirsty spirit for a companion, and each new power you learn together has a primary purpose: wounding your foes. Your spirit companion guides the attacks of you and your allies, even at great distances, and uses a subtle turn of a wing or a slashing talon to put a foe in its most vulnerable position.

JIM NELSON

Keen Eagle Path Features

Eagle Summons the Fire (11th level): You and your allies can choose creatures or squares adjacent to your spirit companion as the target of your ranged attacks and area attacks.

Keen Eagle Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can use your call spirit companion power as a free action to conjure a second spirit companion. When you attack with a spirit power, you choose which spirit companion to use for the attack; you don't make the attack through both of them. When an effect applies to creatures adjacent to your spirit companion, that effect applies to creatures adjacent to both spirit companions. The second spirit companion disappears at the end of your next turn.

Eagle's Reach (16th level): Your ranged shaman powers that have a range of 5 or 10 change to a range of 20.

Keen Eagle Evocations

Winged Spirit Strike Keen Eagle Attack 11

The spirit of a bird of prey dives on your enemy, leaving your foe vulnerable to your allies' attacks.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: Wisdom modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, any ally can score a critical hit against the target on a roll of 16–20.

Hunting Eagle Keen Eagle Utility 12

You send your spirit companion to your ally's aid. It flies around your ally's target, making that foe easier for your ally to attack.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Spirit
Immediate Interrupt Personal
Trigger: An ally adjacent to your spirit companion makes an attack roll for a ranged or an area attack
Effect: You move your spirit companion to a square adjacent to a target of the attack. The triggering ally gains a +2 power bonus to the attack roll against each target adjacent to your spirit companion.

Flurry of Spirit Talons Keen Eagle Attack 20

In a burst of supernatural speed, your spirit companion flashes among your enemies, leaving them gashed, staggered, and vulnerable to attack.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Close burst spirit 1
Effect: Until the end of the encounter or until your spirit companion disappears, you and your allies can score critical hits on a roll of 18–20 against any creature that is adjacent to your spirit companion. Then make the following attack.
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 5d6 + Wisdom modifier damage. If you score a critical hit with the attack, the target is also dazed (save ends).

Scarred Healer

"Scars carry two lessons. The first is that victory often has a price. The second is that no defeat is final."

Prerequisite: Shaman, call spirit companion power

The powerful magic you and your allies have mastered during your adventures can cure most nonfatal wounds, and even fatal wounds might be only temporary setbacks. Death is a solvable problem, and you are one of the most powerful healers that most people will encounter. Why, then, do you bear such terrible scars, as if you were a warrior who had suffered a terrible defeat?

In the history of your people, victories and defeats have always gone hand in hand. Your scars are marks of your status as one of the heroes who ensures that no defeat will be total. By accepting the painful lessons of the past and bearing their marks on your flesh, you access healing magic that other shamans can't or aren't willing to use.

The most powerful healing spirits of the world recognize your unique pattern of scars. When the world hangs in the balance, the power of these spirits is on your side.

Scarred Healer Path Features

Scar's Gift (11th level): When you use a primal healing power on a target adjacent to your spirit companion, the target regains additional hit points equal to your Constitution modifier.

Scarred Healer Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, one ally adjacent to your spirit companion gains temporary hit points equal to one-half your level + your Wisdom modifier.

Healing Paths (16th level): When any ally within 5 squares of you or your spirit companion spends a healing surge to regain hit points, he or she regains additional hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Scarred Healer Evocations

Sharing the Kill — Scarred Healer Attack 11

Your spirit companion tears into your foe, sharing its elation of the hunt with your allies.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Implement, Primal, Spirit
Standard Action Melee spirit 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Wisdom modifier damage. Each ally adjacent to your spirit companion regains 1d6 + your Wisdom modifier hit points.

Spirit's Touch — Scarred Healer Utility 12

Your spirit companion reaches out to your ally, lending some of its vitality to ward that ally from harm.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Spirit
Immediate Reaction Melee spirit 1
Trigger: An ally adjacent to your spirit companion takes damage from an attack
Target: The triggering ally
Effect: The target gains temporary hit points equal to your Constitution modifier. In addition, the target gains a +2 power bonus to saving throws until the end of your next turn.

The Burning Dance — Scarred Healer Attack 20

As your scars flare with light, your spirit companion pulses with the radiance of the sun, moon, and stars. When that radiance deflects off your burning foes, it heals your allies.

Daily ✦ Fire, Healing, Implement, Primal, Radiant, Spirit
Standard Action Close burst spirit 2
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier fire and radiant damage.
Effect: Each target takes ongoing 10 fire and radiant damage (save ends). When any target takes this ongoing damage, one ally within 5 squares of you or your spirit companion regains 10 hit points.

JIM NELSON

Seasons' Herald

"The armies of the mortal world march and conquer, but in time, each falls. The seasons march forever."

Prerequisite: Shaman, call spirit companion power

Night follows day, winter follows summer, and death follows life. These are the basic truths of the primal world. For those who understand this fact and watch closely, Great Watcher provides inspiration and guidance, revealing omens of what is to come. Shamans who have the gifts of insight and prophecy often become great political or military leaders by using these talents wisely.

As a seasons' herald, you embrace the future, whether it's promising or dreadful. You don't shy away from ill omens. Accepting what lies ahead and having the determination to prepare for it form the bedrock of your beliefs.

You follow the path of adventure out of a sense of duty to your people and to the natural world. Looking into the future to prepare for the present, you seek out evil before it develops into a larger threat. As a wandering prophet or a simple helper, you travel to those places where you are most needed to maintain the natural order, whether doing so requires stopping war, ending a drought, or preventing unnatural creatures from entering the world through a planar breach.

BEN WOOTTEN

Seasons' Herald Path Features

Watch the Omens (11th level): You and each ally within 5 squares of you gain a +2 bonus to initiative checks.

Seasons' Herald Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to allow an ally within 5 squares of you to take a standard action instead of taking an extra action yourself.

Turn of Seasons (16th level): When an enemy reduces an ally within 5 squares of you to 0 hit points or fewer, another ally of your choice within 5 squares of you regains 5 + your Wisdom modifier hit points.

Seasons' Herald Evocations

Balance of Life — Seasons' Herald Attack 11

Your spirit companion restores balance by taking from a foe what that foe took from an ally.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Spirit
Immediate Reaction Melee spirit 1
Trigger: An enemy adjacent to your spirit companion deals damage to your ally
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: The target takes damage equal to the damage it dealt to your ally.

Read the Omens — Seasons' Herald Utility 12

You scan the area, mindful of any omen that might prove useful in charting your next action.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You make an attack roll, a saving throw, a skill check, or an ability check and don't roll a 20
Effect: The next time you would roll a d20 before the end of your next turn, use the result of the triggering die roll instead.

Inevitable Winter — Seasons' Herald Attack 20

You call spirits of death and winter, commanding them to surround a foe to sap its vitality.

Daily ✦ Implement, Primal
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 3d10 + Wisdom modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: When the target saves against any effect, you can roll a d20. If your roll is higher than the target's save, the target instead fails the saving throw (save ends).

Warrior of Spring

"With spring, there is always hope."

Prerequisite: Shaman, call spirit companion power

The power of spring is in its ability to bring rebirth and hope. A warrior of spring wields this power to great effect, whether as a healer or a guardian of the primal world. As a shaman who follows this path, you are gifted with powers of primal healing beyond those of most other shamans. Your presence can allow allies to recover from the most grievous injury, or even from death itself.

Although you pride yourself in watching over your community, when adventure or the duty of a great cause calls, you are ready to act. You can heal your allies or instill hope in them, and the spirits you call on can help you defeat the greatest of threats.

As you go on adventures, your duty as a warrior of spring is clear. You carry a bundle of seeds gathered from across the lands. No matter what desolate realm you find yourself in, you're ready to scatter those seeds through it so that their verdant bounty can continue the cycle of spring.

Warrior of Spring Path Features

Revitalizing Presence (11th level): When you use a primal power to allow an ally to spend a healing surge, that ally regains 1d6 additional hit points.

Warrior of Spring Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, one bloodied ally within 5 squares of you can spend a healing surge.

Spring's Vigor (16th level): When you use a primal power to allow an ally to spend a healing surge, that ally can also spend an action point to take an extra action.

Warrior of Spring Evocations

Spring's Dawning Warrior of Spring Attack 11

The light of spring erupts from the spirit world, searing your foes and providing a beacon of hope to your allies.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Primal, Radiant, Spirit
Standard Action Close burst spirit 1
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 3d6 + Wisdom modifier radiant damage. Each ally who can see your spirit companion can make a saving throw with a +2 power bonus.

Hope Beyond Death Warrior of Spring Utility 12

Although winter might empty fields, cast leaves from trees, and freeze rivers, the world blooms anew at spring's return.

Daily ✦ Primal
Immediate Interrupt Ranged 10
Trigger: An ally within 10 squares of you fails a death saving throw
Target: The triggering ally
Effect: The target is considered to have rolled a 20 for the death saving throw.

Spring's Resurgence Warrior of Spring Attack 20

You call forth the power of spring's resurgence, lending strength to your allies with the demise of each enemy.

Daily ✦ Healing, Implement, Primal, Zone
Free Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Trigger: An enemy within 10 squares of you drops to 0 hit points
Target: Each enemy in burst centered on the triggering enemy
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 5d6 + Wisdom modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone of verdure that lasts until the end of the encounter. Any bloodied ally who starts his or her turn within the zone regains 10 hit points. When any enemy within the zone drops to 0 hit points, each ally within the zone regains 10 hit points.

WAYNE REYNOLDS

CHAPTER 4

Warden

"The rivers are my blood; the mountain wind, my voice. My body is the earth, and from the power of the primal spirits, I draw strength to fight the foes of nature."

You are the rock that stands against the storm, protecting the world from those that would destroy or corrupt it. You are a warden, and your duty is to protect your allies and the natural order. For you, it is an honor to preserve the world against chaos and depravation.

Other heroes trust to the strength of armor and weapons, or to the might of spells and prayers. However, as a warden, you know that steel, arcane magic, and even the might of the gods can't stand for long against the power of nature. The strength you draw from land and sky, forest and river drives your need to defend and heal your land and allies—your role reflecting that of the primal spirits who are the protectors of the world. The evocations you summon up can unleash destructive energy that drops foes at your feet. More important, your primal fury fuels your transformation into a guardian form, granting you powerful abilities and attacks.

This chapter supports the warden with the following information.

- Playing a Warden: The origins of the warden class, its burdens and powers, and your role both in the world and at the game table.
- New Builds: As a life warden, you can share your reserves of healing power with your allies. Or you can choose to be a storm warden, moving your enemies around the field of conflict.
- New Class Features: Two new options for your Guardian Might class feature bestow the benefit of your healing on your allies, or let you hinder and control your foes in the thick of combat.
- New Powers: A wide range of evocations support the new warden builds, and grant existing builds even more versatility.
- New Paragon Paths: Seven new paragon paths let you customize your warden's advancement, whether by mastery of the elements or creating ever-stronger connections to the primal spirits that grant you power.

PLAYING A WARDEN

Still and silent as the towering oaks, a gnarled warrior watches for signs of aberrant activity in the forest. Filled with the righteous fury of the primal spirits, a weathered champion swings a wooden cudgel to smite the foes of nature. Drawing on the strength of the earth beneath her feet, a warden becomes like stone—immovable, impassive, and steadfast.

A warden is the quintessential protector, a manifestation of nature's desire to protect itself from corruption and harm. As a warrior whose powers channel the primal spirits, you take on those spirits' mission, protecting the natural world and helping it thrive.

The Newcomers

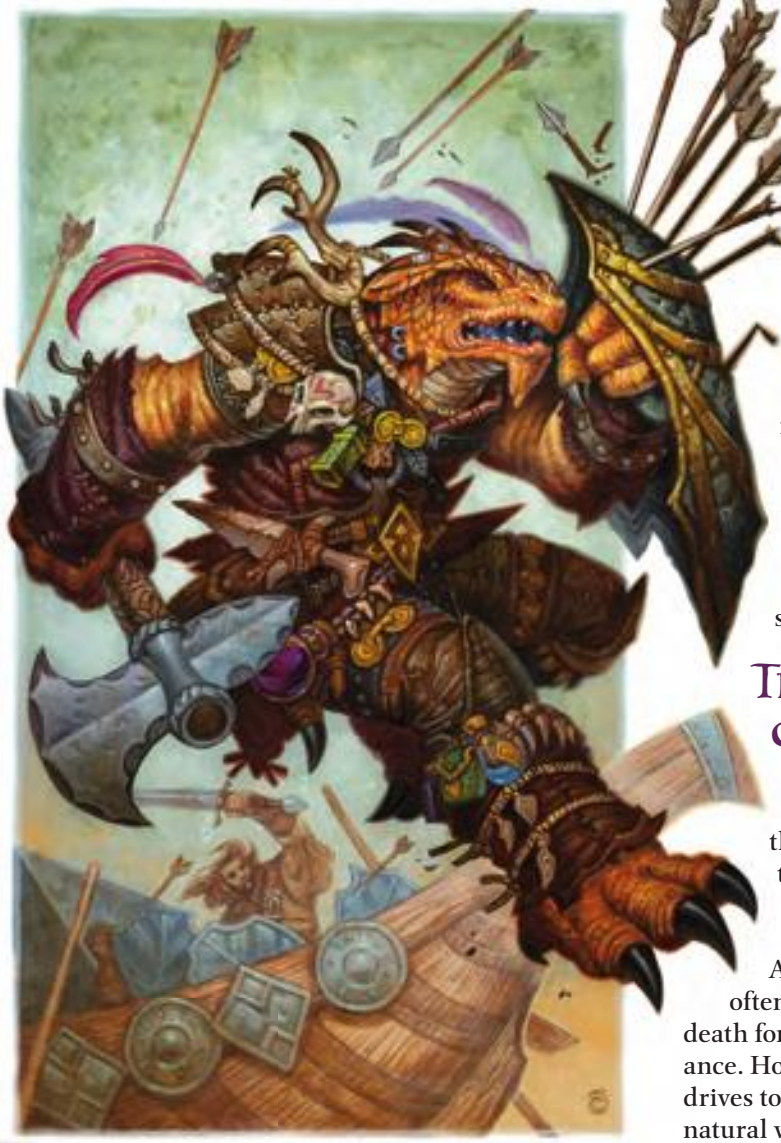
A warden is defined by his or her commitment to defending the natural world, but this commitment is more than simple tradition. The truth of the wardens' origins is not secret, but neither is it well known outside the narrow orders of those who wield primal power.

The oldest ancestor spirits say that barbarians, shamans, and druids have been a part of the natural order for all time. Throughout the histories of all races—and perhaps before the first peoples had even taken shape—barbarians have raged at the forefront of combat, druids have hunted alongside the beasts whose shape they take, and shamans have spoken for the primal spirits that watch over the land. However, wardens are a more recent order, forged in response to the progress of history—and the threats that recent events have unleashed.

Over the course of countless centuries, the rise of civilized and monstrous empires spread violence and war across the world. In reaction to the threat posed by the ambitions of emperors and kings—and by the powerful magic their forces wielded—the primal spirits worked subtly within the sentient races to create a new type of champion.



CHRIS SEAMAN

You and your kind are that champion—as potent in a fight as any barbarian, channeling powers of transformation in the manner of the druids, and calling on the magic of the primal spirits to produce mighty evocations of combat and healing. The warden's powers of protection and defense give you the same role and responsibilities toward your allies as the primal spirits have toward the natural world. Your warden powers fill a niche addressed by none of the other primal classes. As a symbol of your defensive prowess, you rely on the strength of the shield that other primal heroes cannot naturally integrate with their own fighting styles.

The Burden of Defense

Your life as a warden is likely to be defined by how you balance the responsibilities thrust upon you. You might feel the constant tug of obligation to the people of your homeland, even when your life as an adventurer takes you far from the place of your birth. As a member of an adventuring party, you often mean the difference between life and death for friends who cannot match your endurance. How do you balance what might be conflicting drives to protect your homeland, your party, and the natural world?

Traveling to new places—and particularly to other planes—comes easier to the druid, the barbarian, and even the shaman than it does to many wardens. Your obligation to defend your homeland and the wider natural world might make it difficult for you to leave that homeland or world behind. However, eventually you must accept that your destiny lies beyond the lands of your birth, and that your mandate to defend the world will inevitably set you against foes from beyond that world.

Your devotion to your people likely translates to an unfailing dedication to the allies in your adventuring party. Some wardens take this unconscious role even further, adopting strangers who appear to be in need of defending. Though barbarians, druids, and shamans typically remain closely tied to their own ancestors and patron spirits, wardens can tap into the spiritual power that surrounds and protects any people, defending strangers as fiercely as they do the members of their own families.

Warding Circles

In many of the wild and dark places of the world, wardens stand at the center of small, loose-knit organizations known as warding circles. Some warding circles are dedicated to preserving certain geographical regions, while others focus on defending the world and its inhabitants against particular kinds of threats, but all owe their inspiration to a group of elder spirits known as the Monster Slayers (page 125). Sidebars throughout this chapter give examples of prominent warding circles.

A typical warding circle has only one or perhaps two wardens at its center. Six or seven other members round out the circle. In exceptional circumstances, these other members might also be heroic characters; this occurs most often when a player character warden establishes a warding circle and calls on fellow adventurers to join the circle's membership. Other circles are made up of more ordinary folk (whose statistics might be drawn from the Monster Manual or Monster Manual 2 entries for humans, elves, gnomes, shifters, dwarves, goliaths, half-orcs, and other races).

A warding circle typically operates in a limited geographical area and has no contact with other circles unless its territory overlaps with that of another one. No hierarchy or overarching organization links circles to each other, even those that share a common tradition and name. For example, the Circle of Summer's Shield that protects the settlements along the Nentir River has no connection to the similar Circle of Summer's Shield that patrols the distant Icepine Wood, far to the north. The two circles have similar beliefs, practices, and traditions—probably dating from a time when the power of Nerath facilitated easy communication between such far-flung circles.

Wardens' Meditations

Unlike a shaman, you are not in constant contact with the primal spirits that are the source of your power. Your link to the spirit world is strongest when you are in a guardian form. In your guardian form, you invite the primal spirits to enter your body and make it theirs, and in that moment of transformation you learn much of their wisdom and their will.

Consequently, you might make an effort to use one of your guardian forms at least once a day. Even if combat doesn't make that transformation necessary, you adopt a guardian form to meditate and commune with the spirits. When you do use a guardian form power in combat, you might linger in that form as long as possible once the battle is over, savoring your intimate communion with the spirits for as long as it lasts.

Quiet contemplation isn't the only form of connection with the spirits that you might enjoy in guardian form. Depending on the form you assume, you might howl with the icy winds of a terrible blizzard, leap among the flames of a forest fire, or fly among the clouds in a summer thunderstorm, all in an effort to draw closer to the primal spirits of those natural forces.

When wardens gather, it's not uncommon for them to greet each other with a shift into guardian form, spend a few moments in shared communication with the spirits, and then launch into a furious melee, unleashing the full power of the spirits upon each other. Such ceremonial combats are rarely fatal, instead serving to draw the gathered wardens together in a common purpose and invoke the spirits' participation in their activities together.

Wardens and the Wild

A warden feels most at home in the wilderness, stalking among the trees, scaling broad cliff faces, and navigating narrow canyons. Why does your warden character feel so drawn to the wild places of the world? Perhaps you encountered a primal spirit at some point in your childhood or youth—an awesome experience of the spirit's presence and power that set you on the path toward becoming a warden. Perhaps you were born and raised in a wilderness area and simply find such places, far from the noise and bustle of civilization, comforting and familiar.

A warden rarely stays in one place for long, preferring to experience the broad range of environments that nature has to offer. Maybe you want to challenge your own mental and physical limitations, pushing them to extremes as you cross glaciers and deserts alike. Or you might be drawn by the possibility of discovering ancient primal secrets extending back to the early days of creation. Traveling the world might be a form of spiritual journey for you. Regardless of what drives you to explore, you are at home in the wildest places of the world.

This section presents two new builds, the life warden and the storm warden. Each build has a new Guardian Might option associated with it, either of which you can choose when you make your warden.

Life Warden

By drawing deep on the primal currents flowing through all things, you wield the power that was the first spark of life in the mortal realm. With that power, you shelter the world from its harshest enemies, bolstering your allies even as you defend the land.

Your bond to the land is such that life flourishes when you draw on the primal magic you command. Injuries mend, sickness passes, and your allies fight with renewed vigor. Your spear, shield, and armor might be your obvious tools of war, but your ability to ignite the spark of life in the face of a deadly enemy is your greatest talent.

Your foes assail you again and again, but their efforts mean nothing. Your primal magic mends the injuries they cause and strikes them down to end their violence once and for all.

New Class Feature

When you choose your Guardian Might, you can choose Lifespirit instead of another option, such as the ones in Player's Handbook 2.

Lifespirit: While you are not wearing heavy armor, you can use your Wisdom modifier in place of your Dexterity or Intelligence modifier to determine your AC.

In addition, when you use your second wind, an ally within 5 squares of you can spend a healing surge and make a saving throw.

Suggested Options

Strength is your most important ability, governing your attacks and the beneficial power that your successful attacks unleash. A high Wisdom benefits your Will while also increasing your AC, and Wisdom is the cornerstone of many of the benefits granted by your powers. This build reinforces your leadership role, and powers that channel benefits to your allies are your best choice.

Suggested Class Feature: Lifespirit*

Suggested Feat: Lifespirit Vigor*

Suggested Skills: Endurance, Heal, Nature, Perception

Suggested At-Will Powers: *earth shield strike, resilience of life

Suggested Encounter Power: *warden's sacrifice

Suggested Daily Power: *form of the faultless tracker

*New option presented in this book

KEREM BEYIT

Storm Warden

The strength of the storm is the epitome of primal power, from the screaming winds and relentless snows of the highest mountains to the lashing rains and blistering lightning of a summer thunderstorm. Although all wardens draw power from nature, the storm warden has the strongest connection to nature's wrath.

You are the sword of the rumbling storm, an avenging warrior whose primal magic swirls around your chosen enemies like the gathering winds of a hurricane. Your draw your enemies close to you, keeping them near with primal magic to prevent them from escaping your wrath. Once a foe falls into your magic's grasp, it cannot escape.

The storm simmers around you, ready to rumble to life when your foe draws near. When the storm surges to life, it cuts off your enemy's escape and forces it into a fight it cannot win. By your blade or by the primal winds you command, your foe's aggression comes to an end.

New Class Feature

When you choose your Guardian Might, you can choose Stormheart instead of another option, such as the ones in Player's Handbook 2.

Stormheart: While you are not wearing heavy armor, you can use your Constitution modifier in place of your Dexterity or Intelligence modifier to determine your AC.

In addition, when you use your second wind, you slide each enemy marked by you and within 2 squares of you 1 square, and each enemy marked by you is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Suggested Options

As with all wardens, Strength is your most important ability score. Constitution should be your next best score, since it improves your AC and the benefits of many of your warden powers. As a storm warden, you lean toward controller as a secondary role, and your powers should draw on the savagery of the elements to punish your enemies, particularly those marked by you.

Suggested Class Feature: Stormheart*

Suggested Feat: Stormheart Push*

Suggested Skills: Athletics, Endurance, Intimidate, Nature

Suggested At-Will Powers: strength of stone, *tempest assault

Suggested Encounter Power: *gale strike

Suggested Daily Power: *form of mountain's thunder

JIM NELSON

GUARDIAN MIGHT

Whatever manifestation of Guardian Might you choose, this class feature is more than simply a pair of game benefits—it's a representation of your connection to the natural world.

Each form of Guardian Might allows you to use a different ability score—either Wisdom or Constitution—instead of Dexterity or Intelligence to determine your Armor Class. In the rules of the game, that's an incentive to keep you in light armor. But in the world of the game, it reflects how the primal spirits shield and protect you from harm. They toughen your skin to ward off blows, swirl around you in gusts of wind that deflect attacks, or infuse you with life-giving power to heal your wounds before you even feel their effects.

The other part of Guardian Might is an additional effect that takes place when you use your second wind. All characters can draw on reserves of strength and health within themselves by using their second wind. When you do so, however, you're not just drawing on power within yourself, but on the life of the primal spirits that surround you in the earth and sky. When you draw on that power, the spirits respond. They ward you against further attack (Earthstrength), make you a greater threat in your enemies' eyes (Wildblood), aid your allies (Lifespirit), or gust in furious winds to send your enemies staggering (Stormheart).

NEW POWERS

Many of the powers in this section are tailored for the life warden and the storm warden. However, wardens of any build can make good use of the options presented here, expanding their versatility on and off the battlefield.

Level 1 At-Will Evocations

Resilience of Life — Warden Attack 1

The might of your attack boosts the vigor of an ally fighting at your side.

At-Will ✦ Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and an ally adjacent to you gains temporary hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Level 21: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Tempest Assault — Warden Attack 1

When you strike with lightning, a pulse of thunder pounds your target's companion.

At-Will ✦ Lightning, Primal, Thunder, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier lightning damage, and one enemy within 2 squares of you that is marked by you, other than the target, takes thunder damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Level 21: 2[W] + Strength modifier lightning damage.

Level 1 Encounter Evocations

Gale Strike — Warden Attack 1

Your attack unleashes a primal wind that batters foes driven to engage you.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and each enemy marked by you, other than the target, takes damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Stormheart: You also slide each enemy marked by you 1 square.

Grasping Winds — Warden Attack 1

You draw on the spirit of the storm to drag foes closer for your next attack.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you pull each enemy within 3 squares of you 2 squares.

Rending Fury — Warden Attack 1

You tear into the target with two fast strikes, crippling its ability to respond to any foe but you.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC. Make the attack roll twice and use either result.
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls for attacks that don't include you as a target. If both of your attack rolls would hit, the penalty equals -5.
Wildblood: The penalty to attack rolls equals your Wisdom modifier, or 1 + your Wisdom modifier if both of your attack rolls would hit.

Circle of the Dark Wing

The Circles of the Dark Wing hunt those who would break the cycle of life with the blasphemy of undeath. Wardens and other characters within a Circle of the Dark Wing hunt down liches, vampires, and other free-willed undead. They seek out and destroy tomes and other references that detail the secrets of creating or becoming undead, and they oppose the dark work of necromancers wherever such individuals are found. Members of the circle wear a black cloak to mark their affiliation.

Though the members of these circles follow no single path, the Dark Wing contains many heroes willing to go to extremes in the pursuit of their goals. The fanaticism of these zealots has made outlaws of all circle members in some areas—particularly those lands that have heard of the burning of the Grand Library of Tyrath. The priests of Ioun who kept the library had long ago taken into their safekeeping several volumes of dark lore from the legendary city of Moil. One Circle of the Dark Wing decided that burning the site to the ground was the best way to destroy the books and the dark secrets they held.

Most who follow the spirit way—including many other wardens—reject the fanaticism of the Circle of the Dark Wing. Moreover, based on the circle's chosen emblem, many wonder openly what relationship might exist between the order and the Raven Queen.

Circle of the One Pack

The warden who forged the first Warding Circle of the One Pack believed that all worldly creatures are connected in a complex web of life, from the lowliest ant to the most powerful mage. However, he believed that this web remains intact only as long as creatures of other planes remain sequestered from the world.

Members of the Circles of the One Pack wear no symbol of their allegiance, the better to surprise their foes. They wander on their own or in small bands, always on the lookout for signs marking the presence of planar beings in the world—from news of far-off wars, to the rise of evil cults, to undue influence by gods, primordials, fiends, and archfey. Circle members can be friendly toward planar visitors that want to live in harmony with the world (most eladrin, for example). However, otherworldly creatures that seek to subvert or dominate worldly realms are confronted and eliminated.

Those who have heard of the Circles of the One Pack are likely familiar with one circle's victory against an insane cleric of Torog. Laying claim to powerful magic, this mad priest set out to bore a tunnel to the heart of the world and unleash his deity's wrath. Wardens from the circle infiltrated the cleric's operations, slaying him and his legion of monstrous followers in a battle that has become the subject of legend and song.

Circle of Summer's Shield

The Circles of Summer's Shield patrol the forests, deserts, and mountains where remote towns and villages stand against encroaching darkness. Through the tireless work of the members of a circle, a rampaging elemental that might level a settlement or the hobgoblin raiders set on enslaving a remote freehold are kept at bay.

For the members of these circles, the spread of civilization in the form of frontier settlements is as much a part of the natural order as the flow of rivers and the growth of forests. Especially in the long aftermath of the fall of Nerath, holding back the darkness that spreads between the far-flung outposts of civilization requires exceptional bravery. The wardens, rangers, sorcerers, barbarians, and druids of a Circle of Summer's Shield are up to the task.

Members of this circle display a yellow disk representing the sun somewhere on their shield, armor, or cloak. They typically work alone or in small groups, meeting at ancient monuments at the winter solstice to share news and prepare for the next year.

Form of the Crushing Mountain — Warden Attack 15

Miss: Half damage, and you pull the target 1 square.

Form of the Hunting Tiger — Warden Attack 15

You assume the aspect of a tiger, boosting your speed and agility, especially when your allies are under attack.

Daily ✦ Polymorph, Primal
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You assume the guardian form of the hunting tiger until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain a +2 bonus to speed and Reflex. In addition, when any enemy marked by you makes an attack roll against any of your allies, you can shift 2 squares toward that enemy as a free action.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following weapon attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC. Make the attack roll twice and use either result.
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. If both of your attack rolls would hit, the attack deals 10 extra damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Form of the Sand Sentinel — Warden Attack 15

A vortex of burning desert sand surrounds you, boosting your resilience and that of your allies and allowing you to swing your weapon to create a blast of fire.

Daily ✦ Fire, Polymorph, Primal
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You gain 10 temporary hit points, and you assume the guardian form of the sand sentinel until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain a +2 bonus to Fortitude. In addition, when you hit any enemy, an ally within 5 squares of you gains 5 temporary hit points.

Daily ✦ Primal
Minor Action Close blast 5
Target: Each ally in blast
Effect: Each target gains concealment until the end of your next turn.
Sustain Minor: The effect persists, but it ends on one target of your choice.

Ancestors of War

In these times, those who follow the spirit way are as likely to live in towns or villages, settled and civilized, as they are to wander in tribal groups and follow traditional ways. Occasionally, ancestor spirits grow angry with their descendants, believing that this sedentary life has made them soft and weak. In their anger, they withhold their support and power, while urging those who commune with them to demonstrate their worthiness to receive the ancestor's support. They drive their descendants to war in pursuit of glory.

Though it happens rarely, it's not unknown for a young man or woman who demonstrates an affinity for the primal spirits to become suddenly violent, having fallen under the sway of a warlike ancestor. Some of these individuals become criminals, seeking out the descendants of ancient tribal enemies and killing them brutally in mismatched combat. Others become adventurers—often wardens or barbarians—who seek to please their warlike ancestors and win glory by slaying monsters that threaten their civilized homes.

Sun Fire Guardian — Warden Utility 16

Enemies that try to strike your ally are blinded by golden light.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One ally in burst
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, when any enemy marked by you makes an attack roll against the target, that enemy is blinded until the end of the turn during which it makes the attack roll.

Warden's Refusal — Warden Utility 16

The spiritual energy you wield knocks back a foe attempting to gain the advantage on your ally.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Immediate Reaction Close burst 5
Trigger: An enemy marked by you ends its movement within 5 squares of you and is flanking your ally
Target: The triggering enemy in burst
Effect: You slide the target 1 square.

Flames of Life — Warden Attack 17

With your weapon wreathed in primal flame, your attack channels healing energy to an ally.

Encounter ✦ Fire, Healing, Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One or two creatures
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier fire damage, and an ally within 5 squares of you regains 5 hit points.
Lifespirit: Add your Wisdom modifier to the hit points the ally regains.

Leap of the Relentless Hunter — Warden Attack 17

When a foe moves too close to your ally, you cross the battlefield in the blink of an eye to make a savage attack.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee 1
Trigger: An enemy marked by you enters a square adjacent to your ally within 5 squares of you
Effect: You shift your speed to a square adjacent to the triggering enemy. Then make the following attack.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Wildblood: You gain a bonus to the attack roll equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 1 square to another square adjacent to you.

Circle of New Kin

Warding circles are typically not long-lived organizations, and few members of any individual circle expect it to last forever. However, the Warding Circles of New Kin are even more ephemeral than most.

For a single season, the members of a Circle of New Kin adopt a settlement or a tribe as if its members were their own blood. A Circle of New Kin dedicates itself to seeking out and destroying whatever threatens its temporary community, although the abilities of circle members to root out bad leadership, overcome taboos, or change people's outlook are limited.

Warding Circles of New Kin draw on the assistance and example of an elder spirit named Blood Cousin (page 122), an entity dedicated to seeing followers of the spirit way set aside their conflicts and work together for the benefit of all. Even with such power behind them, however, members of a Circle of New Kin must maintain a delicate balance in what they do. Relationships among disparate peoples are often complicated by old grudges, minor disagreements, communication barriers, and other obstacles, and circle members who attempt to broker peace between feuding groups sometimes leave even bloodier conflicts behind them when they eventually move on.

Form of the Imperious Phoenix — Warden Attack 29

Your body is suffused with the protective radiance of the phoenix, allowing you to escape an enemy's attack in a restorative burst of primal fire.

JASON A. ENGLE

Child of the North Wind

"My weapon strikes with the north wind's savage bite. You aren't mighty enough to stand against it."

Prerequisite: Warden

You are part of a tradition that considers the north wind to be your spiritual parent, and you revere the spirits that first breathed life into the world. Members of your tradition can be found wherever the north wind blows.

As a child of the north wind, you are a pillar of strength in your party, your courage as unceasing as a gale. When you are embattled, you call on the ferocity of windstorms to aid your attacks. When your ire is aroused, the air might gust around you, just as the strongest winds might fall silent in response to your calm.

Child of the North Wind Path Features

North Wind Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you also gain a benefit until the end of your next turn: When you hit any enemy, you either deal 5 extra damage to that enemy or knock it prone.

North Wind Vortex (11th level): When you reduce any enemy to 0 hit points, you slide each enemy marked by you 1 square as a free action.

Staggering Critical (16th level): When you score a critical hit with a melee attack, each enemy marked by you is knocked prone.

Child of the North Wind Evocations

Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target 2 squares. The target and each enemy adjacent to it are then marked until the end of your next turn.

North Wind's Embrace Child of the North Wind Utility 12

You call down a primal gale that protects you or an ally.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Primal
Standard Action Close burst 5
Effect: You conjure a protective whirlwind in 1 square in the burst. The whirlwind lasts until the end of your next turn. While within the whirlwind's square, you or an ally gains resist 10 to all damage and a +2 power bonus to all defenses.
Sustain Minor: The whirlwind persists, and you can move it your speed.

Form of the Northern Whirlwind Child of the North Wind Attack 20

Your body takes on the form of the wind that howls around you, protecting you as it buffets your foes.

Daily ✦ Polymorph, Primal, Teleportation
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the guardian form of the northern whirlwind until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain resist 10 to all damage. In addition, when you pull, push, or slide an enemy, you can increase the distance of the forced movement by 1 square. When you use your Nature's Wrath class feature, you can mark each enemy within 2 squares of you instead of each adjacent enemy.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following weapon attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: Each enemy marked by you in burst
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You slide each target 1 square and then teleport to a square adjacent to one of them.

KEREM BEYIT

Earth Shaker

"My strength is the strength of the earth. There is no shame in your falling, but you would be foolish to attempt to rise."

Prerequisite: Warden

Regardless of the combat tricks you have learned during your adventuring career and the tactics with which you have surprised your enemies, a part of you yearns for direct and uncomplicated applications of might. The path of the earth shaker appeals to you because it matches strength to strength—your mastery of weapons augmented by the power of the earth beneath your feet, working together to oppose the raw might of dragons and behemoths, demons and deities.

The strength of earth that you draw on allows you to move through the ground at speed, even as your attacks bypass an opponent's armor to strike at the body within. Your connection to the natural world allows you to seek out targets behind obstacles or even within the ground, and your attacks can knock your foes down.

Leave the subtleties of strategy and complex tactics to others. Instead, you keep faith with the oldest spirits of rock and earth, letting their grim determination guide you in your mission to defend the world from forces that would despoil it.

JASON A. ENGLE

Earth Shaker Path Features

Full Impact (11th level): You gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls against Fortitude.

Surging Earth (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action while you are in guardian form, each enemy you hit with a primal attack power before the end of your next turn is knocked prone.

Certain Gravity (16th level): Your at-will warden attacks can target Fortitude instead of AC.

Earth Shaker Evocations

Shake the Earth — Earth Shaker Attack 11

Your attack emits a pulse of thunder that strikes around obstacles and can wrench burrowing creatures from the ground.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Thunder, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 4
Target: Each enemy in burst
Special: Solid obstacles do not block line of effect for the burst.
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier thunder damage. If the target is burrowing, you slide it 4 squares to the square nearest to it that is within your line of effect.

Tread the Earth — Earth Shaker Utility 12

You dive within the earth and move through it quickly, gaining advantage over unsuspecting enemies.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Move Action Personal
Effect: You burrow twice your speed. Each enemy adjacent to you at the end of your move grants combat advantage to you until the end of your next turn.

Form of the Primeval Bulette — Earth Shaker Attack 20

You take on the armored form of the monstrous bulette, granting you increased vitality and allowing you to burrow through the earth.

Daily ✦ Healing, Polymorph, Primal
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the guardian form of the primeval bulette until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain a burrow speed equal to your speed and a +3 bonus to Fortitude. In addition, whenever you spend a healing surge, you regain 20 additional hit points.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Close burst 2
Effect: Before the attack, you burrow your speed. You must burrow at least 2 squares.
Target: Each creature in burst
Attack: Strength + 4 vs. Fortitude
Level 26: Strength + 6 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d8 + Strength modifier damage, and you knock the target prone. If the target is already prone, it takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and you knock the target prone.

Emerald Guardian

"As long as I draw breath, no stain on this world will last."

Prerequisite: Warden

As an emerald guardian, you are nature's stalwart protector, wandering the world in search of corruption and purging it. You and your fellow guardians staunchly oppose those who bend magic to sinister ends, and much of your efforts are dedicated to containing such threats. You seek to restore the balance that is central to the prosperity of all living things.

The primal power of life infuses an emerald guardian. Wherever you go, blight fades, flowers blossom, and the power of nature is reinvigorated. As an emerald guardian, you lend this healing presence to your allies, helping them withstand enemy attacks.

Emerald Guardian Path Features

Distracting Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, one ally adjacent to you before or after you take the action can shift his or her speed as a free action.

Primal Blessing (11th level): When you succeed on a saving throw at the start of your turn, one ally adjacent to you can make a saving throw with a +2 bonus.

Emerald Fury (16th level): When you hit an enemy with your warden's fury power, you push that enemy 3 squares, and then one ally adjacent to that enemy gains 10 temporary hit points.

Emerald Guardian Evocations

Defiler's Doom Emerald Guardian Attack 11

A target that flees from your first attack is drawn back to face a second.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Teleportation, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage. If the target is not adjacent to you at the end of its next turn, you teleport it to a square adjacent to you and make a melee basic attack against it as a free action.

Preservation of the Wild Emerald Guardian Utility 12

The spirits of nature destroy lingering magic at your command.

Daily ✦ Primal
Standard Action Close burst 3
Effect: All conjurations and zones in the burst are destroyed. In addition, ongoing necrotic damage ends on each creature in the burst.

Form of the Life-Giver Emerald Guardian Attack 20

You appear to increase in size as you take on the form of the legendary life-giver, granting vitality to your allies.

Daily ✦ Healing, Polymorph, Primal
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the guardian form of the life-giver until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, your size is Large. In addition, you gain resist 20 necrotic. Any ally that starts his or her turn within 3 squares of you regains 5 hit points.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following weapon attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Melee weapon + 1 reach
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you knock the target prone. The target is stunned (save ends).

Each Failed Saving Throw: One ally within 3 squares of the target can spend a healing surge.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

Each Failed Saving Throw: One ally within 3 squares of the target can spend a healing surge.

JIM NELSON

First Hunter

"Run all you like, for you cannot hide."

Prerequisite: Warden

The bond between hunter and prey is as old as life itself. This relationship is second nature to you—a way of life that helps you work with other hunters, combining all your skill to bring down even the deadliest quarry. By learning and applying the secrets of the first hunter, you have honed your warden powers for maximum efficiency with spears and other thrown weapons. Whether you fight from the front or strike from the side, your allies can rely on you.

If you finally become the prey, let your hunter beware. You walk with the spirits of ancestral hunters at your side, and foes that corner you will feel the bite of your weapon.

First Hunter Path Features

First Hunter Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to make an attack, one of your allies gains combat advantage against the target of the attack until the end of your next turn.

Spear's Master (11th level): You can use any one-handed simple or military weapon as a thrown weapon with a normal range of 5 and a long range of 10. When you throw such a weapon as a ranged basic attack, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier. In addition, if the target is adjacent to one of your allies, you gain a +2 bonus to the attack roll.

Hunters Together (16th level): The first time you hit an enemy each round, choose one ally. The next ranged attack that ally makes against that enemy before the end of your next turn gains a bonus to the damage roll equal to your Constitution modifier.

First Hunter Evocations

First Hunter's Spear First Hunter Attack 11

You throw your weapon at your foe, hitting it so hard that it's distracted when your ally attacks.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a thrown weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and one of your allies gains combat advantage against the target until the end of your next turn.

Marked Prey First Hunter Utility 12

When an enemy tries to slip away, you and a companion hunter close in for the kill.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: An enemy marked by you ends its turn farther from you than where it started its turn
Effect: You and one ally can each shift half your speed as a free action to squares closer to the triggering enemy.

Form of the First Hunter First Hunter Attack 20

You transform to resemble an ancient predator. You then hinder your foes and make a target vulnerable to your allies' attacks.

Daily ✦ Primal, Polymorph
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the guardian form of the first hunter until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain a +2 power bonus to saving throws. In addition, each enemy marked by you is slowed until the mark ends.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following weapon attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a thrown weapon if you make a ranged attack.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, your allies gain combat advantage against the target, and they gain a bonus to damage rolls against it equal to your Constitution modifier.
Miss: Half damage.

ERIC BELISLE

Icewrought Sentinel

"Submit, or feel the wrath of the season of death!"

Prerequisite: Warden

Nature sleeps when winter falls, resting until the warmth of spring creeps across the land once more. Though forests grow quiet and few creatures stir, the warden's duty endures when the land is at its most vulnerable.

An icewrought sentinel harnesses winter's power for the world's defense. Whether you are drawn to this path through a natural affinity for wintry wastes or a spiritual connection to the season of darkness, your first step on the path to becoming an icewrought sentinel brings about changes in your body. Your flesh feels cool to the touch. Your eyes become a deep blue but turn frost-white when you are angry, and your lips and extremities take on a faint blue cast. When you use your warden evocations, snow swirls in the air around you as lines of frost form and quickly vanish on your skin.

Icewrought Sentinel Path Features

Cold Snap Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to make an attack, each enemy that is adjacent to you or marked by you takes cold damage equal to one-half your level. In addition, you gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls with cold powers until the end of your next turn.

Frigid Embrace (11th level): You gain cold resistance equal to 5 + one-half your level.

Winter's Winds (16th level): When you hit an enemy with a primal cold power, you slide that enemy 2 squares after the attack is resolved.

Icewrought Sentinel Evocations

Rime Shackles Icewrought Sentinel Attack 11

Your weapon strikes with bitter cold that freezes the target in its tracks.

Encounter ✦ Cold, Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier cold damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn. On your next turn, if you hit the target with a primal cold power, the target is immobilized until the end of its next turn.

Icewrought Armor Icewrought Sentinel Utility 12

A shell of ice spreads across your ally, offering protection even as it freezes a foe that dares to strike.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Minor Action Close burst 3
Target: You or one ally in burst
Effect: The target gains a +2 bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn. If the target is hit by a melee attack before the bonus ends, the attacker is immobilized until the end of its next turn, and the bonus ends.

WAYNE REYNOLDS

Form of the Icewrought Sentinel Icewrought Sentinel Attack 20

A protective sheath of ice covers you and spreads to hinder your foes' movement, coating your weapon to blind a foe when you strike.

Daily ✦ Cold, Polymorph, Primal
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the guardian form of the icewrought sentinel until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain a +2 bonus to AC and Fortitude. In addition, your enemies cannot charge or run if they start that movement within 2 squares of you, and each square within 2 squares of you, wherever you move, is difficult terrain for your enemies.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following weapon attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier cold damage, and the target is blinded (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is blinded until the end of your next turn.

Radiant Serpent

"The spirit of the couatl burns brightest."

Prerequisite: Warden

You raise your eyes and heart to the stars and to the spirit of the shining, winged serpents that helped tame the primordials. You have chosen the couatl as a spiritual ally, embracing that legendary creature's power so thoroughly that you assume its very form. You emulate your shining ally by rising above the battle with a flourish of power or by passing through your enemies like a radiant spirit.

Like couatls, you understand the necessity of sacrifice. The coils of your power can trap enemies that would otherwise harm your allies, but you must be willing to take those allies' hurts on yourself. If your own survival is jeopardized as you protect your friends, so be it.

Radiant Serpent Path Features

Radiant Glow (11th level): You gain radiant resistance equal to one-half your level and a +2 bonus to saving throws against effects that immobilize or restrain you. In addition, whenever you take radiant damage, your attacks deal extra radiant damage equal to one-half your level until the end of your next turn.

Radiant Serpent Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action while you are in any guardian form, you become insubstantial and gain phasing and a fly speed equal to your speed until the end of your next turn.

Mantle of Sacrifice (16th level): When you score a critical hit against an enemy, that enemy cannot attack any target except you until the end of your next turn.

Radiant Serpent Evocations

Radiant Coils — Radiant Serpent Attack 11

Coils of light wrap around your target and burn it with radiant energy if it moves.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Radiant, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you mark the target until the end of your next turn. If the target moves before the end of your next turn, it takes 2d8 radiant damage.

Shining Pass — Radiant Serpent Utility 12

Each ally you pass by is cloaked in a radiant glow, which allows you to share your own resilience.

Daily ✦ Healing, Primal
Minor Action Personal
Effect: When you pass through an ally's space before the end of your turn, you can spend a healing surge on that ally's behalf as a free action. You spend the healing surge but regain no hit points, and the ally regains hit points as if he or she had spent a healing surge. No ally can benefit more than once from a single use of this power.

Form of the Radiant Couatl — Radiant Serpent Attack 20

You take on a serpentine appearance as radiance surrounds you, granting you the movement and resilience of the great couatl.

Daily ✦ Healing, Lightning, Polymorph, Primal, Radiant
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the guardian form of the radiant couatl until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain a fly speed equal to your speed, and you can hover. You gain a +5 bonus to saving throws against ongoing damage and against effects that immobilize, restrain, or slow you.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Area burst 2 within 20 squares
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Strength + 4 vs. Reflex
Level 26: Strength + 6 vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d10 + Strength modifier lightning and radiant damage. One ally in the burst can spend a healing surge.
Miss: Half damage.

BEN WOOTTEN

Tribal Champion

"You want them? You go through me first."

Prerequisite: Warden

All your life you have known you were destined for greatness, as did the ancestor spirits of your tribe's great warriors. You owe your prowess in combat to the heroes whose blood flows in your veins. When you recover your strength in combat, these guardian spirits flash into sight for a moment, defending you from your enemies so that you can fight on.

The ancestral spirits that watch over you might represent any of the heroic classes of your people. The barbarian's strength drives the fury of your attacks, just as the shaman's wisdom inspires your tactics. However, in your determination to defend your allies and the world around you, you remain a warden through and through.

Tribal Champion Path Features

Allied Champions (11th level): When you use your second wind as a standard action, each enemy marked by you takes psychic damage equal to one-half your level + your Strength modifier.

When you use your second wind as a minor action, one enemy marked by you takes psychic damage equal to your Strength modifier.

RALPH BEISNER

Tribal Champion Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can choose a guardian form granted by any of your daily powers. Until the end of your next turn, you assume that form and gain all its effects, but you cannot use the form's attack. This use of the form does not expend the use of the power that grants it, and you can assume a form granted by a power you have already used today.

Ferocious Defender (16th level): When an ally adjacent to you is bloodied for the first time in an encounter, you gain a +1 power bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

Tribal Champion Evocations

Fell the Mighty Tribal Champion Attack 11

Taking on a foe more powerful than you only increases the fury of your attack.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC. If the target's current hit point total is higher than yours, you can score a critical hit on a roll of 19-20.
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If this damage makes the target's current hit point total lower than yours, you also knock the target prone.

Pure Power Tribal Champion Utility 12

You draw on the power of the heroes who watch over you, increasing the potency of your guardian form's attack.

Daily ✦ Primal
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You hit with a weapon attack granted by your guardian form
Effect: The attack deals 2[W] extra damage.

Form of the Tribal Champion Tribal Champion Attack 20

The shades of countless ancestors flow through you as you fight, defending you from harm and debilitating your foes.

Daily ✦ Primal, Polymorph
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the guardian form of the tribal champion until the end of the encounter. While you are in this form, you gain a +1 power bonus to all defenses. In addition, each enemy marked by you takes a -4 penalty to attack rolls (instead of -2) for any attack that does not include you as a target.

Once during this encounter, you can make the following weapon attack while you are in this form.

Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, each enemy marked by you takes a -8 penalty to attack rolls (instead of -4) for any attack that does not include you as a target.

CHAPTER 5

Primal Options

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

Whether you're a barbarian, a druid, a shaman, or a warden, you'll find an assortment of features in this chapter to help expand your options in both combat and noncombat encounters. Players with characters who are multiclassing into a primal class will also find new opportunities in this chapter.

From the material in this chapter, you can learn about the important elder spirits that primal characters revere, and you can choose a vivid background to help enhance your character's story. You can acquire new rituals that let you wield the forces of nature, and you can pursue epic destinies that transform you into an embodiment of primal power. Equip yourself with all the tools to bring your primal character to life.

- The Spirit Way: This section contains important background information about following the spirit way—the rhythm and ritual of life in cooperation with the primal spirits.
- Primal Spirits: This part of the chapter contains brief descriptions of two dozen of the Great Elders, some of the most important of the numberless primal spirits that inhabit the world.
- Primal Backgrounds: Several new backgrounds for your character are introduced, to supplement those in Player's Handbook 2.
- Feats: This chapter presents feats by tier, including new options for every primal class. Characters of any class can take the new tribal feats to better coordinate the efforts of their group.
- Epic Destinies: Eight new epic destines aimed at primal characters offer new paths to immortality.
- Rituals: The rituals in this chapter provide more options for wielding the power of nature.

The complex relationship between the primal spirits and those who follow them is something like a religion, something like a philosophy, and something like a pattern of familial obligations. However, though in some aspects the followers of the spirit way resemble the faithful worshipers of Moradin, Corellon, or Melora, the primal spirits are not gods.

Worship of the gods means paying homage and offering sacrifice to the superior beings whose mythical actions created the world and whose power influences even the afterlife. By contrast, the spirit way is a broad set of principles in which even the greatest primal spirits are seen as companions and allies. As a follower of the spirit way, you commune with powerful beings—distant ancestors, beast archetypes, and the sentient essences of places of power—beings whose primal energy permeates the world and whose strength can aid you if your goals and deeds are worthy.

The primal spirits do not hold themselves separate from the world or from the mortals who communicate with them. Rather, these spirits are thoroughly intertwined in the lives of people who follow their way. When a barbarian channels the rage of an ancestral war band, those warriors might be the subjects of stories he learned as a child. A shaman who acquires a spirit companion might discover it to be the spirit of a bear slain by the shaman's grandmother—or perhaps even the spirit of the bear and the spirit of the grandmother combined.

Most spirits are subtle creatures whose influence on the world is felt only indirectly by those who follow them. However, followers of the spirit way do sometimes come into contact with beings possessed of dangerous levels of power. Spirits such as the World Serpent and Whisper should be met with great care or not met at all.

In the Beginning

Those who follow the spirit way believe that the primal spirits flowed through the world beginning at the moment when there was a world to move through and creatures to inhabit it. Perhaps their existence was a natural consequence of the world's creation. Maybe the gods created the primal spirits—intentionally or inadvertently—when they imbued their creation with permanence. Some say the primal spirits created themselves, others that the primal spirits were the original archetypes the gods used when they shaped the world.

In any event, although they were present from the beginning of creation, those first primal spirits lacked the ability or the will to communicate with the earliest sentient beings, and the first mortals could not hear the spirits in the same way they heard the orders and threats of the gods and the primordials.

The gods helped set the world right, creating order and shaping life and living things according to their own terms. But then the gods stepped away from the world to fight the Dawn War against the primordials. While the gods and the primordials waged great battles in their far-off realms, the primal spirits of the world found their voice.

When the Dawn War spilled over into the mortal realm, spirits such as Stormhawk helped keep the world from being destroyed. Tree Father, Great Bear, and the Hunter Twins gave aid to the desperate peoples of the world, allowing them to survive in those devastating times.

The war between the gods and the primordials was nearly over when Khala, god of winter, attempted to seize the world for herself. The spirits realized that even though the gods had fought to save the world from the primordials, the gods' power would inevitably threaten the world in the end. While the gods smashed Khala's armies in the Astral Sea, the primal spirits rose up and destroyed her winter fortresses in the mortal realm. When their war was done, the gods looked to the world in victory—only to discover that the primal spirits had managed to seize what the gods had fought for.

By the power they wielded in the mortal world, the spirits declared that both gods and primordials were banished from direct contact with the world. With the gods ensconced in the Astral Sea above and the surviving primordials bound or lost in the Elemental Chaos below, the world would exist as a place of balance—a realm of life and death and the never-ending cycle of the seasons. Weakened by war and unwilling to destroy the world to spite the spirits that had claimed it, the gods relented.

In all the uncounted years since the end of the Dawn War, the decree of the primal spirits has held. The gods and the primordials can influence the world, but not even the most powerful deities or demon princes can project their full power into the mortal realm without attracting the unleashed wrath of the primal spirits.

The primal spirits use much of their power to maintain the barriers they established between the world and the older realms. However, they share this power with their allies—the people who follow the spirit way. When mortals die, some join the deities in their astral dominions. Others dwell within the world, becoming one with the primal spirits, which protect the balance and order of nature and all living things.

What Matters Most

As a follower of the spirit way, you have certain priorities. What matters to you as a primal character might include many things, but the spirits teach that your first two priorities should always be protecting the natural world and preserving the people you're connected to.

The Natural World

The most important task for a follower of the spirit way is to protect the natural world and the cycles of nature. Only in the most extraordinary circumstances should this put you into conflict with expanding civilization. Rather, the opposing forces that you need to protect the world from include rampaging primordials, marauding demons, the corrupting influence of the Far Realm and its denizens, undead that violate the natural cycle of birth and death, and—on rare occasions—the gods.

Only when the schemes of a god (usually an evil one) or a god's followers involve conquering the world, violating the first edicts of the primal spirits, does the obligation to protect the natural world bring you into conflict with the gods. Similarly, only when the spread of civilization means the utter devastation of nature in a large region—cutting or burning down a vast expanse of woodland, leveling mountains, stopping up rivers at their source—do the primal spirits feel threatened, and devastation on this level is beyond the capabilities of most civilizations in the D&D world.

The People

The spirit way teaches that all people are interconnected. You have learned that all people are your kin, as if you were a member of a great tribe that includes members of all races across the world. That "tribe" or family also includes the primal spirits. Even the terrifying World Serpent, whose power could potentially destroy the world, is like an elder member of this extended family, a force to be respected and learned from.

Different followers of the spirit way understand the nature and scope of their familial obligation differently. Some have a narrow view, looking to a literal tribe of related clans as the limit of their community. They feel no responsibility for the welfare of those outside the tribe, even for other followers of the spirit way. Others take the broader view that they believe the elder spirits intend: All who follow the spirit way, all who respect and nurture the world and live in harmony with the spirits—even, perhaps, all living things—are part of a great tribe, part of their obligation and responsibility, part of their family. For if all followers of the spirit way are kin to the primal spirits and look up to them as wise elders, then it follows naturally that they are all kin to each other, far-flung and different as they might be.

Following the Spirit Way

As a powerful primal hero, you understand the place of the primal spirits in the world and their influence over it. Your primal power demonstrates your interaction with the spirits on a day-to-day basis. If you are a shaman, you talk with spirits at will, and sometimes they talk to you against your will. If you are a barbarian or a warden, the spirits of ancestors, of great beasts, and of the elements flow through you even when they are not revealing themselves through your powers. If you are a druid, your direct connection to the primal spirits might manifest itself primarily during rituals and combat, but your magic is wholly defined by the flow of power through the spirit world. For the masses of ordinary people, though, interactions with the primal spirits are both more subtle and often more complex.

Local Spirits

Those who follow the spirit way most commonly venerate one or more of the spirits that inhabit prominent geographical features, plants, animals, and other natural phenomena in a particular area. The most common primal shrines in the world are those erected at the sites where great spirits are thought to live: on the slopes of a volcano, at the source of a mighty river, or in a grove dominated by a huge, ancient oak tree. The common folk offer tokens of sacrifice and implore these spirits for blessings in hunting, exploration, and farming.

Ancestors

The veneration of ancestors is a common component of the spirit way, particularly in a tribal context, where family ties are important. People offer small sacrifices to the spirits of their ancestors as a sign of piety, out of respect for deeds the ancestors performed in life, and to implore the spirits' guidance. Some sacrifices are entirely symbolic, while others are a part of ritual magic meant to unlock the secrets and power that the ancestor spirits are willing to share.

Great Elders

For most followers of the spirit way, local spirits and direct ancestors are the most important primal spirits—the members of their immediate family, as it were. The majority of primal characters' evocations call on these relatively minor spirits as well. However, greater spirits than these inhabit the world. They are the great elders whose power and influence extends across the world. Primal characters call on these spirits with some of their evocations, and the followers of the spirit way recognize the great elders as the oldest, wisest, and most powerful members of their extended family. See "Primal Spirits" on page 121 for more information about the great elders.

Communicating with Spirits

Just as many temples throughout the world have priests who are not clerics but who nevertheless learn to perform magical rituals, it's not uncommon for wise elders who tend primal shrines to call on the spirits by means of ritual magic. These elders were sometimes born with a remarkable sensitivity to the presence of primal spirits, but some developed their gifts with age and increasing wisdom. These primal practitioners often know rituals to implore the spirits' guidance and aid, including rituals such as Brew Potion, Commune with Nature, Bloom, and Speak with Nature that might be useful to player characters.

Community

Many of the rites and ceremonies observed as part of the spirit way are all about community—recognizing, celebrating, and solidifying the ties that bind people, ancestors, other spirits, and the world itself together. All are part of a living whole, the spirit way teaches, interconnected and interdependent. The primal spirits are members of the same great family—not overlords or rulers, but elders who are respected for their wisdom and power. For that reason, their presence is invoked for rites of passage—marriages and births, funerals, and other observances of life's transition—for they are part of the community that recognizes and ritualizes those transitions.

The huge number of spirits in the world means that different people and groups have different ways of interacting with those spirits. The passage of seasons, the phases of the moon, migration patterns, marriage and childbirth—all of these events might be marked by personal meditation, simple rituals performed in the home, or elaborate ceremonies involving everyone in a community.

Primal Points of Light

Under the rule of the now-fallen empire of Nerath, members of many different races and cultures were brought together in a vast and unified civilization. Before Nerath's rise, cultures that followed the spirit way tended to live in tribal structures and nomadic patterns. Now, in the wake of Nerath's fall, it's not uncommon to find a primal shrine located in a grove at the edge of a village or ancestor veneration taking place in the heart of the greatest cities that remain.

However, some of the older tribes in the world resisted assimilation into Nerath's civilization, and some newer tribes have moved back into the wilderness since its fall. The wilderness beyond the scattered city-states and baronies of Nerath's heirs is a dangerous place, but these tribes bring the strength of numbers, dedication to their way of life, and the power of primal magic to bear in their defense, and many manage not just to survive, but even to thrive.

Some of the lands claimed by these tribes are points of light just as much as are more civilized areas, places where travelers can find safe shelter and protection from the wild world beyond. Others are little different from the lands roamed by tribes of orcs or gnolls, where few travelers dare to venture and even fewer survive.

A windswept plateau might be a safe haven for members of a specific tribe. However, adventurers who aren't informed of the plateau's hazards by the tribe's ancestor spirits will find great danger at such a site, particularly if those ancestor spirits take a dislike to them. A forest that is home to tribes of barbaric elves might seem safer than an unsettled wood, but that sense of security can vanish quickly beneath a hail of elven arrows. Groups that contain primal characters might be able to befriend a distrustful tribe by communicating with the local spirits. However, the elders of an isolated tribe might not want adventuring types coming through their territory and corrupting people with their outsiders' ways.

EVA WIDERMANN

This is not to say that relationships between civilized lands and primal tribes are automatically hostile, however. In fact, in some lands, a bond of friendship between civilized and primal cultures creates some of the brightest points of light in the world. When a city-state or a barony encourages relations of trust and respect with a tribe on its border, the tribe acts as a buffer zone, a first line of defense against threats from the hostile darkness. Supported by the civilized land's armies and magic, that tribe likewise can respond to greater threats than it could stand against alone.

Eladrin cities surrounded by elven forest tribes are a common model of this type of relationship. Likewise, dwarven cities of the mountains sometimes enter into alliances with tribes of goliath and human followers of the spirit way, increasing the safety and prosperity of all.

Primal Shrines

As a rule, sites sacred to the spirit way do not resemble the temples to deities built by civilized people. Shrines appear throughout the world, often well hidden or designed to blend in with their natural surroundings. Spirit way shrines are often impromptu sites, carved out from the natural world and adorned with tribal relics.

A shrine in the wilderness might take the form of a natural niche on a cliff face, flanked by carefully balanced columns of stone; a carved rock rising from the rapids of a swiftly flowing stream; a string of feathers flying from the tops of a tall tree; or an ancient log set with tokens and offerings to encourage the renewed cycle of life.

Primal shrines are seldom intended to last forever; instead, they are designed to succumb to the effects of weather and time. Forest shrines quickly vanish beneath each new season's growth. Shrines of stone are eroded over long years or scattered by the blunt force of earthquakes and storms. For the people who built it, the disappearance of a shrine is a sign that the spirits have moved on, seeking other sites where the next shrines will rise.

Those who visit or stumble upon a primal shrine typically spend a short while offering a greeting to the spirits of the area. Most people do not receive a noticeable response, although some might be blessed with a brief tingling sensation as the spirits of the shrine flow through them. Heroes might receive an audible greeting. However, extensive verbal communication with the spirits isn't normally possible without the aid of a ritual, such as Commune with Nature or Speak with Nature. The spirits know much about the lands surrounding their shrines, and the right ritual allows characters to pierce the veil between the mundane world and the spirit world and learn from their wisdom.

Followers of the spirit way commonly leave an offering when they visit a shrine. Such a token can be a small item of natural beauty (such as a shell, a feather, or a semiprecious stone), an intricate carving, or a personally significant relic. In several tales of fable and legend, heroes often find a much-needed item beside an out-of-the-way shrine, set there by the spirits for their use. However, to followers of the spirit way, taking any item from a shrine without the express invitation of the spirits is an abhorrent act.

Those who live in towns and cities and follow the spirit way establish a variety of shrines to local spirits and ancestors. Many urban shrines are similar to those found in the wilderness—erected from natural materials and not intended to last. It is not uncommon to find small shrines dedicated to ancestor spirits inside the homes of followers of the spirit way.

Places of Power

Places of power are longer-lasting than shrines because they have been chosen by the spirits rather than created by those who follow them. Places of power are typically centered on sites where a strong natural or magical phenomenon has attracted the interest of the spirits. Most places of power feature some form of natural shelter or a location where a ritual can be performed without interruption.

Permanent, manufactured shelters and other structures are rarely added to a place of power, even if the folk who follow its spirits live in permanent dwellings elsewhere. Occasionally, a place of power is adorned with boulders, great logs, or even a cliff face carved with representations of the spirits who commonly return to the site—something like a druid's or a shaman's totem, but on a much larger scale.

The following examples of places of power might spark ideas for sites that are important to your character.

Witchlight Tree

Though this ancient tree is long dead, its dry branches still stretch to the sky, towering above the surrounding forest. The trunk of the tree is hollow, and on the nights of the full moon, glowing wisps of light float down inside. A group of elves and shifters gathers at the Witchlight Tree every month, standing inside the enormous trunk as the witchlights descend. The elves and shifters believe the lights are manifestations of forest spirits who come to bring their blessings to the gathered.

Echo Cavern

In a cave behind a roaring waterfall, the voices of the ancestors are carried on the echoing wind. The cave is too small for more than one or two people to occupy it at a time. A community of humans and halflings gathers outside the cave for rites of passage, during which it sends young adults into the cave one at a time. As the youths enter, they are ritually purified by passing through the curtain of water. Once inside, they meditate on the sound of the rushing water and the voices in the echoes. They emerge the next morning as adults, carrying some fragment of the ancestors' wisdom with them.

Speaking Mounds

On an ancient battlefield, a series of burial mounds are scribed with scenes from long-forgotten battles. No community gathers regularly at the Speaking Mounds, but individuals of many different races visit the site to seek the wisdom of the ancestors buried there. The mounds are said to shift or speak in the presence of druids or shamans, though only those nearby can witness this reaction.

Everspring Grove

A circle of ancient trees in the heart of a sprawling forest, Everspring Grove is home to powerful spirits of the wood. The trees keep their green leaves throughout the fall and winter, the temperature inside the circle is always comfortably warm, and berries grow year-round on bushes among the trees. A few tales speak of heroes lost in the forest in winter, in danger of freezing, who find warm shelter and food in the heart of Everspring Grove. The grove is a meeting place for a group of elves, and also a crossing point where eladrin and gnomes enter the world to pay respects to the primal spirits of the place.

The Standing Stones

This large circle of monumental stones began as a temporary shrine, but survived for long centuries by virtue of the spirits' interest in the place. Earth and storm spirits are attracted to the ring of stones, and dwarves and goliaths gather there to venerate the spirits.

Taboos

Occasionally, a spirit places a taboo upon the people who venerate that spirit—some kind of restriction or prohibition that might seem nonsensical or overly burdensome to outsiders. It's not a common occurrence, but it happens, particularly when the spirit's followers have been hit hard by war or social unrest. In these cases, a taboo is seen as an imperfect solution to a deeper problem, a spiritual shield against deeper corruption that would further weaken the spirit's followers.

Taboos in such cases might include restrictions on travel, on interacting with certain races, on eating certain foods, or on marrying into certain family lines. Those who violate the spirits' prohibitions might be required to undergo a ritual of purification, while major transgressions are sometimes punished with temporary or permanent exile.

More than one primal hero first became an adventurer after rejecting the taboos of his or her people. In the larger context of the campaign, heroes are sometimes expected to be taboo-breakers—powerful enough to ignore even the worst effects of breaking a taboo and able to perform the magical tasks and quests necessary to eliminate a taboo for those who can't break its power themselves.

Helpful heroes sometimes discover that what appears at first to be a useless or even culturally debilitating taboo is in reality an unwritten response to a long-forgotten danger. For example, people forbidden to travel outside a particular river valley might have originally done so to avoid the wrath of a jealous and powerful river spirit that has since been displaced. Taboos and the quests to eliminate them are unlikely to play a major part in most campaigns, but they can provide a useful backdrop to the lives of the people who follow the spirit way.

Gods and Spirits

The gods are sometimes known by different names in isolated cultures that follow the spirit way. For example, Kord is called Wild Storm Father by some goliath tribes, and Melora is known as Great Mother in certain remote regions. However, characters who learn the lore of such folk can easily note that those people speak of Wild Storm Father and Great Mother differently from how they speak of Stormhawk or Dark Sister. The latter are treated as familiar allies or even family; the former are more powerful and distant monarchs.

The primal spirits are not gods. They are plentiful beyond counting, unlike the limited pantheon of gods. They do not demand worship, and their power is limited to the natural world. Followers of the spirit way do not limit their veneration to a single spirit in the way that some people devote themselves to the worship of one deity. Even so, some people confuse the primal spirits with deities, referring to the spirit way as "the old faith"—as if, somehow, worship of the pantheon of gods was destined to supplant and replace reverence for the primal spirits.

In fact, most of the time the spirit way and the worship of the gods do not conflict. The gods have no vested interest in stamping out the spirit way, and the primal spirits certainly feel no need to argue against the teachings of the gods—indeed, they rarely argue much of anything. The gods exist in their astral dominions, the spirits in the mortal world, and each is worthy of respect, veneration, or worship as appropriate to its station. Those who follow the spirit way often blend that path with the worship of gods such as Corellon, Kord, Melora, Sehanine, and even Bane or Zehir. As long as the practice of primal magic and the proper relationship with the spirits are maintained, both ways can easily coexist.

PRIMAL SPIRITS

The gods in their majesty are distinct individuals. In contrast, even the greatest primal spirits do not possess single discrete forms. The primal spirits permeate the world, flowing through its natural features with an intensity that depends on a spirit's relationship to a particular place or object. The power that a primal spirit manifests in the world varies according to the season, the weather, the terrain, and the lingering effects of events that have marked a location in the past.

Many primal spirits are strictly connected to a specific location in the world, or are devoted to protecting a particular family or tribe. Above them stand the great elders—powerful spirit entities that are known across the entire world. The great elders discussed later in this section are only a few among many. Scores of great spirits are thought to exist, though their true numbers might never be known.

JOHN STANKO

Unlike a deity, a primal spirit does not go by only one name or use a single universal symbol to represent itself. One tribe might depict the World Serpent as a snake swallowing its own tail, and another might show the World Serpent twining around and through a tree symbolizing the mortal realm. Yet another group might think of the World Serpent as a snake-skinned goliath whose serpentine lower body disappears into the earth. The gods' powers are tied to specific images and holy symbols, but the primal spirits do not care how they are depicted, as long as they and the world they protect are shown respect.

As a rule, the power of the primal spirits is greatest in the world, but player characters who wield primal power are at no disadvantage when their adventures take them to the planes and beyond. Heroes carry their power with them, so that they are never cut off from the source of their strength. Primal powers wielded by player characters function normally in the Feywild and the Shadowfell, in the Astral Sea and the Elemental Chaos, and in the Underdark. However, lesser mortals who follow the spirit way might be uncomfortable traveling into places where the voices of nature and the ancestors seem distant.

Spirits and the Spirit World

The primal spirits are not creatures that people can interact with in a typical fashion. Most of the time, they're invisible and intangible, present in the world but not part of its physical substance. The greatest primal spirits seem to be truly immortal: Mortals can't harm them, and even gods and primordials are hard-pressed to destroy them—at least, by any means short of destroying the world. Lesser spirits fade in and out of existence, though. Local spirits die when the natural features they're connected to are killed or destroyed, and ancestor spirits fade, it is said, when they are forgotten by their descendants.

Primal characters' evocations can cause the spirits to manifest, typically as conjurations, but only a fool would think of these magical manifestations as anything but the merest fragment of the spirits' true power. Manifested in a conjuration, though, a spirit can physically affect the world. The reverse isn't true: Creatures in the world might be able to harm the conjuration, but not the spirit itself.

Shamans and mystics sometimes speak of "walking in the spirit world" as if the primal spirits inhabited some other plane of existence, such as the Feywild or the Shadowfell, but that language is misleading. The primal spirits live in the world, not removed from it. The "spirit world" is one way of describing the primal spirits' substance and nature; they lack physical substance, yet they have form to those who have eyes to see it. When mortals enter the spirit world, their senses and consciousness are altered so they can perceive the spirits. Sometimes this alteration occurs during sleep or deep meditation, when a shaman dreams of a journey away from his body and into the spirit world where primal spirits express their will or deliver warnings. At other times, a mystic experiences a transformation of vision while remaining fully conscious and in her body. She simply sees the spirits present in the world around her, often suffused with a golden glow.

In this altered state of awareness, the world seems more alive—every tree and mountain has its spirit moving within it, the sky throngs with beast and wind spirits, the ground itself eddies with the currents of spirits flowing through it. Even when a mortal can perceive the spirits in this way, it's normally impossible to affect them, to touch or harm them in any way.

There are legends, however, of powerful individuals or artifacts that allow mortals both to see into the spirit world and to kill the primal spirits that inhabit it. These legends tell of terrible destruction resulting from the death of the primal spirits whose life sustains the natural world, but they invariably end with a grisly demise for the foolish mortal who dared to abuse such power. Some describe the World Serpent devouring the offender, others tell of Fate Weaver trapping the mortal in her web, and others speak of the Primal Beast appearing to rend and tear the flesh of the upstart. If there is an appropriate use for such power, it must be wielded carefully to avoid angering such powerful elder spirits.

The Great Elders

Unless otherwise described in this section, each of the great elders is a mighty being whose power courses through the entire world. No elder spirit is omniscient or all-powerful, but each has facets that connect it to the powers, the rituals, and the activities of primal heroes of any class.

The following discussion of the great elders among the primal spirits is not exhaustive. For the most part, it focuses on those elder spirits relevant to player characters and other heroes. Moreover, although the pantheon of gods has remained more or less finite since the devastation of the Dawn War, no complete accounting of the elder spirits that dwell within the world has ever been made.

Your DM might expand this collection of elder spirits, and you should feel free to suggest additions to the roster that are relevant to your character's abilities and background.

Always Falling

Always Falling is a spirit of water in motion, strongest around rivers and waterfalls. River spirits have a way of mixing together, and an alliance with Always Falling allows a character to come to a quicker understanding with local spirits and other characters' ancestor spirits. It is said that Always Falling has met everyone in the world worth meeting, although it takes him time to recall specific encounters.

Blood Cousin

The primal spirit known as Blood Cousin is dedicated to maintaining harmony between disparate tribes, and she is instrumental in the creation of Circles of New Kin (see page 105). Blood Cousin is regarded as a force for innovation among the tribes, and new traditions among those who follow the spirit way are often attributed to her followers. In her name, friends of different families, tribes, or races sometimes adopt each other as blood cousins, pledging cooperation and support for each other's people. It is said that Blood Cousin once lived as a barbarian, and members of that class believe that she favors their kind.

Blood Cousin is variously said to have been born a human, an elf, or a dragonborn, but she was subsequently reborn many times into ancient tribes of different races. In each tribe, she taught the same initiation ceremonies, showing her people that they could welcome newcomers into the tribe without weakening it or disturbing the ancestor spirits. Tribes that follow her example are referred to as Blood Cousin tribes; even the most insular of these tribes sometimes adopt particularly worthy outsiders, whether from their own or another race.

Carver

Carver lives in the final moments of each wave as it breaks along the shore. However, his name and presence are invoked even far from the ocean, for this spirit represents the ceaseless rolling power of nature that carves the world into its ever-changing shape. Of the primal classes, barbarians and wardens are the likeliest to be drawn to Carver's combination of power and grace. For coastal tribes, Carver is a symbol of bounty and change—the ocean constantly wearing away the land even as it supplies sustenance and casts its treasures on the shore.

The Deep Winds

The world below the world is still part of the primordials' original raw creation. Since the Underdark operates by ancient laws unrefined by the touch of the gods, much of that mysterious land falls outside the primal spirits' aegis.

However, vast sections of the Underdark are composed of rock descended from the world above or areas shaped by Torog's blood or Lolth's power. The Deep Winds are great elder spirits that dwell in such areas, where they are revered by the rare followers of the spirit way who live so far below ground. Some outcast drow, for example, call on the Deep Winds to protect and guide them in the Underdark.

The Deep Winds flow strongest in the Shallows, but their fastest route of travel through the Underdark is along the King's Highway forged by Torog's blood. The Deep Winds are also fond of following the paths of great primal heroes (including player characters) as they navigate the dangerous depths.

Unlike the ageless great spirits of the surface world, individual spirits of the Deep Winds sometimes become lost and perish in the Underdark's ancient labyrinths.

Earth Wheel

Though many followers of the spirit way plant crops, some stay constantly on the move and subsist only on what nature has to offer. The elder spirit named Earth Wheel provides for such tribes, offering bountiful food to sustain them on their journeys. When these tribes are in harmony with Earth Wheel's turning, their travels become part of the area's natural pattern. With the spirits of that area in harmony, whole fields of herbs, berries, and fruits ripen just in time for the arrival of the tribes that depend on them.

Their relationship with Earth Wheel inspires some tribes to maintain consistent migration patterns; these tribes show little tolerance for outsiders who impinge on the territories and routes they have marked out. Tribes that rely on Earth Wheel to supplement their hunting activities are more accepting of strangers. Tribes that depend solely on Earth Wheel for their survival treat their bounty as a sacred trust and can be dangerous if challenged.

Everflame

Most primal spirits of flame are young—burning bright for a time, then flickering away to be replaced by new spirits. Unlike other spirits, these flame spirits make a point of introducing themselves when they communicate with mortals, since they know how unlikely it is that they will speak with the same characters a second time.

But not all flame spirits are so ephemeral. Everflame is an ancient flame spirit who has taken on a unique protective role. This elder spirit is a guardian who ensures that great fires blaze strongly enough to eventually burn themselves out. Flame is a cleansing force in the world, but only once it stops can the natural balance reestablish itself. Everflame whips the lesser flame spirits on, ensuring that they burn out quickly instead of learning how to live forever.

Along with the World Serpent and Stormhawk, Everflame was one of the elder spirits who did the most to burn away the god Khala's false winter. Unlike hearth spirits and the legion of shorter-lived flame spirits, Everflame seldom has shrines. Places of power dedicated to him are more common, and are often found near volcanoes and elemental flame vents that erupt with deadly force.

The common folk have little contact with Everflame, since simple cooking fires and bonfires have no need of his power. However, among tribes of the spirit way that burn their dead, Everflame is invoked so that a pyre will burn quickly. Player characters and other heroes commonly know of Everflame, and they might call on his power in the course of their adventures.

TOMAS GIORELLO

THE BIRTH OF EVERFLAME

In the days when gods and primordials fought, the primordials sought to cover the world in flames. The fire would burn the forests, kill the people, and leave the world nothing but a pile of ashes to be scattered on the winds of the Elemental Chaos.

The primordials unleashed their flame, and it began to devour the great forests that stood at the dawn of time. The people fled in terror and despaired, for they had no hope of stopping the fire.

But then, a great thing happened.

Where the fire devoured earth and wood, plants and beasts arose among the ashes. The fire turned and stomped back over the fresh sprouts, but they arose again wherever fire had rampaged before.

Around and around the fire raced, but it was never able to burn one place before life once again arose in another.

And then the fire realized its place and leapt upon the wind to become one with the world. The world survived, and even when the flames claim tree after tree, it remains true that life follows death as surely as death follows life.

Fate Weaver

The great elder called Fate Weaver is also known as Grandmother Spider, and the choice of name corresponds with a people's optimism regarding their future. Those who face great challenges or peril speak of Fate Weaver, invoking a sense of impartial fate and a belief that their troubles are beyond the cares of the spirits. Those who are more content with their prospects—or who are intent on maintaining a positive outlook regardless of circumstance—think of Grandmother Spider, patiently weaving webs that connect all living things in providence.

Aside from her role in spinning the webs of fate, Fate Weaver is also a protective spirit. Shamans call upon her to protect allies or tangle enemies in her spirit webbing (see the Fate Weaver's shield and tendrils of the Fate Weaver powers in Player's Handbook 2).

Fate Weaver is also said to have spun the webs that bind the planes together, keeping the Feywild and the Shadowfell tightly linked to the world. It is because of Fate Weaver's web that events in the world often echo across the Feywild and the Shadowfell, and that bond also enables the primal spirits to extend their power out from the world into those other planes. Travelers who know Fate Weaver's patterns, it is said, can use the strands of her webs to cross between the worlds.

The Grandmothers

The Grandmothers are an extended group of female ancestor spirits. They are accorded collective elder spirit status because many scattered groups of people know them by the same name, and because Grandmothers of widely separated groups are capable of sharing information and memories. The Grandmothers are on good terms with most other ancestor spirits, though they are often at cross-purposes with Old Grandfather.

Great Bear

Great Bear is a powerful warrior and protector spirit who defends the world in the way that a she-bear ferociously defends her cubs. The common folk think fondly of Great Bear, and they show a certain amount of reverence for the natural beasts that share her form. These include cave bears and dire bears (as a creature of the Feywild, the deadly owlbear is not accorded the same respect, even among elves). For those who respect Great Bear, hunting a bear is undertaken only with humility and the proper sacrifices. However, no issue is made of those who defend themselves from a wild bear's unprovoked attack.

During pregnancy and childbirth, some mothers call on ancestor spirits such as the Grandmothers, or gentler spirits of water and earth such as Always Falling. However, sometimes the spirits tell an expectant mother that the child she bears is destined to become a great hero. Those mothers are inclined to call on Great Bear to ensure that their children follow in the protector's path to defend the world from harm.

Bear shamans call upon Great Bear with regularity (see especially the Great Bear guardian power in Player's Handbook 2), and the Great Bear shaman paragon path in Player's Handbook 2 reflects the shaman who emulates Great Bear as a stalwart protector. Druids and barbarians also have powers that call on Great Bear's might (roar of terror in Player's Handbook 2 and clawed ancestor rage in this book).

Great Current

Great Current is a single name shared by a multiplicity of water spirits who move the deep waters of the sea. Many coast-dwellers and seafarers honor Great Current. A few tribes of the spirit way live on giant, raftlike islands that are spawned from the living islands of the great ocean, and for them, Great Current is the source of life and their livelihood.

Great Watcher

Great Watcher is a mysterious, formless spirit said to see and hear everything that takes place on the surface of the world. She carries the winds of change across the world, paints the leaves in autumn, and brings omens and signs of the future to those who know how to watch. She is revered for her prescience and insight, and shamans call upon her when they try to discern what the future holds.

Those who understand nature's constant change emulate Great Watcher by observing that change without being swallowed up by it. Detachment and balance are the ideals that Great Watcher embodies, and her followers strive to emulate them.

The shaman power Great Watcher spirit in this book grants a fragment of Great Watcher's insight to the shaman's allies, while the seasons' herald paragon path in this book gives a shaman Great Watcher's powers of prophecy and insight.

The Hunter Twins

The Hunter Twins were a mortal brother and sister who should have been born just before the Dawn War. While still in the womb, they realized that if they both came into the world, their mother would die. To prevent this fate, they struck a bargain. One of the two children was born, growing up to become the world's greatest hunter. The other child's spirit slipped into the world to take the form of many animals, so that its twin would have prey to hunt. When the mortal twin died, the two traded places, and so the twins have taken turns as hunter and hunted for all time.

Depictions of the Hunter Twins typically show a male wearing an antlered headdress alongside a she-wolf or a female barbarian wearing a wolf skin. These spirits are popular among all the primal classes, who draw on the twins' strength for their transformative, beast form, and hunting powers.

Hunter of Winter

In the form of a great white tiger, the Hunter of Winter is said to hunt in the midst of fierce blizzards and ice storms. Some seek to emulate the ferocity of this elder spirit, while others ask it to drive prey to them, to provide food in the depths of winter.

The barbarian power white tiger rage in Player's Handbook 2 calls on the Hunter of Winter.

The Monster Slayers

The Monster Slayers are a group of heroic ancestor spirits that warriors and heroes of all tribes look up to. The story of the Monster Slayers is told in variant forms in many different traditions. Though each version invokes a different set of ancestors and local spirits, the common core of these tales provides adventurers with a well-understood place among the cultures that follow the spirit way.

Countless peoples count Monster Slayers among their ancestral spirits, and most folk who follow the spirit way have at least a passing relationship with ancestor spirits that were once adventurers. When a child turns his or her eyes to the threats of the wide world, parents remember Monster Slayer ancestors and support the child's dream of adventure. Like the Monster Slayers of old, heroic adventurers fight for the security and preservation of the world.

A few followers of the spirit way, however, do not revere the Monster Slayers or welcome those who follow in their footsteps. Some bitter shamans claim that the Monster Slayers released the monstrous scourge in the first place, simply as a test of their own skill. Others tell stories of adventurers who brought destruction to their people by angering monsters in the wild, drawing the monsters' wrath and vengeance. Still others speak of powerful magic that turns great heroes into monsters themselves.

The Monster Slayers' Quest

Long ago, after countless generations of struggle, all the many peoples of the world succeeded in defeating the monsters that had long preyed on the folk of the spirit way. With the magic the people had created in harmony with the primal spirits, these creatures were trapped or banished far from the mortal realm.

The elder spirits were pleased at this outcome. However, convinced that the mortal races no longer needed their aid, they settled down in their favorite places instead of flowing through the world as a whole. While the elder spirits resided on the tops of mighty mountains, in ancient trees, or in the deepest rivers, mortal generations quickly passed by in relative peace.

When things changed for the worse, some blamed Whisper. Others named malicious gods or devils jealous of the mortal races' prosperity. In any case, the monsters that had been bound or trapped by the followers of the primal spirits gained new power and intelligence. Able to communicate with each other in their places of banishment and binding, they learned to coordinate and control their power to break their chains. Gaining new knowledge of tactics and stealth, they attacked the people with renewed strength. With no history to guide them and no elder spirits to draw on, the people were quickly overcome.

The Monster Slayers were primal heroes who left their homelands to travel throughout the world, hunting the monsters that had escaped from their confinement. On the way, the Monster Slayers met other heroes and relearned the magical secrets that had once defeated the monstrous threat. They codified that knowledge in order to train others, and their teachings helped shape the spirit way into its present form.

In the end, the Monster Slayers' trials awoke the elder spirits, who understood that they must leave their rest and return to their ceaseless movement through the world.

Old Grandfather

Old Grandfather claims to be the first ancestor spirit—a battered and embittered mortal who endured a hard life and death and who has complained about both ever since. Old Grandfather is much less helpful than other ancestor spirits, most of whom are dedicated to maintaining dignity in and respect for their family lines. As a result, no group, tribe, or race claims a connection to him.

In truth, Old Grandfather's original race is long gone, which inspires his role as a sort of ancestral gadfly for clans and tribes across the world. Fortunately, his spirit can't be everywhere at once, and most folk have learned that the better Old Grandfather is treated, the sooner he tires of having nothing to complain about and moves on.

Player characters who become involved with Old Grandfather fare better than common folk. The grumpy old spirit resents his descendants for not living up to the standards he believes he set. However, as PCs rise in power as primal heroes, Old Grandfather becomes less annoying and considerably more helpful. He might even offer assistance to epic-level primal heroes in exchange for a favor—a secret task he has been unable to complete through all his long years.

The Primal Beast

The spirit known as the Primal Beast plays a part in the power of every primal class. Countless other beast spirits are at large in the world, but the Primal Beast taps into an ancient, raw strength that is the equal of any magic of the gods.

The Primal Beast is a predator from the dawn era, when the first sentient races were just another kind of prey for the mighty beasts. The Primal Beast has no love of mortals. The heroes who can call on this spirit are treated as fellow predators—lesser members of a hunting pack that can tear gods to shreds and feast on their remains. Lesser mortals do as little as possible to draw the Primal Beast's attention, and adventurers who flaunt their connection to this mighty spirit might quickly find themselves feared and shunned.

Fear of the Primal Beast has a far-reaching influence on the lives of many people who follow the primal spirits. By tradition, some folk of the spirit way do not raise herd animals as food, for all primal tribes tell tales of how the Primal Beast sends the world's greatest predators against such herding folk. To the Primal Beast, animals are for hunting, for riding, or for companionship, and tribes that attempt to upset that natural order pay the price. Those people who do raise livestock tell stories of great ancestral heroes who won a reprieve from the wrath of the Primal Beast, or perhaps a divine sanction that protects them from the Primal Beast's wrath.

Many druid powers call on the Primal Beast, starting with wild shape and culminating in the primal archetype power in Player's Handbook 2. Several other classes also have powers that draw on this mighty spirit: blood hunger rage and rage of the Primal Beast for barbarians, both in Player's Handbook 2, and form of the shifting ancestor for wardens, in this book, as well as the warden paragon path bloodwrath guardian in Player's Handbook 2.

The Soul Serpent

A great snake said to guard the gate of dreams, the Soul Serpent has gleaming, iridescent scales and glowing eyes that shift colors with its ever-changing mood. Mortals passing through the gate of dreams become like spirits, no longer bound by time and space, and able to interact with the primal spirits face to face. Likewise, some primal evocations draw spirits through the gate of dreams so they can take physical form in the world. The Soul Serpent watches over these passages, coiled in a perpetual state of watchful dreaming.

The power form of the Soul Serpent in Player's Handbook 2 allows wardens to call on the strength of the Soul Serpent.

Stoneroot and Moradin

The god Moradin, the legends say, carved the mountains from the primordial earth. Dwarves who follow the primal way tell the tale of the first mountain he shaped.

Moradin wanted to craft a monument that would be visible anywhere in the world, a towering symbol of the gods' power that would inspire worship and obedience and serve as a testament to his artistry. He worked the stone of the living earth into a mountain that touched the sky, even as its roots sunk far into the depths of the earth. He named the mountain Stoneroot.

But Stoneroot was not merely a monument, not just an object crafted by Moradin's hand. Like the rest of the newly birthed world, it had its own spirit—perhaps a bit of Moradin's breath that permeated the stone. The mountain's peak was draped in a cloak of snow, rains flowed down its sides and formed mighty rivers, and a host of lesser spirits were born in Stoneroot's mighty shadow. Moradin's favored creatures, the Firstborn of the dwarves, tunneled into the sides of the great mountain, and Moradin himself built a temple at the frozen summit where he could dwell among his followers from time to time.

During the Dawn War, a host of giants and titans marched upon Stoneroot and laid siege to the Firstborn in their great halls. Moradin came to their defense, but the titans called upon their master, Vezzuvu, the primordial known as the Burning Mountain. God and primordial clashed at the feet of Stoneroot, but Moradin was outmatched and fled, seeking the aid of his fellow gods.

At Vezzuvu's mighty hands, the Firstborn dwarves were scattered and Stoneroot was smashed to rubble. The great primal spirit of the mountain, though, escaped the primordial's wrath and to this day wanders the world, pushing the mountains to ever greater heights even as they sink their roots deeper into the earth.

Stoneroot

The elder spirit Stoneroot embodies the ageless forces that thrust mountains toward the sky. Every proud mountain spirit owes allegiance and fealty to Stoneroot, and the peoples of the mountains venerate his strength and endurance. Even in areas far removed from the mountains, followers of the spirit way acknowledge Stoneroot's power as a source of stability, invoking his name to summon the strength of the earth.

Stormhawk

Stormhawk fought the gods and the primordials during the Dawn War, and he was the primary force that demonstrated to both factions that the world could stand against them. Adventurers and other heroes favor Stormhawk for his focus and for his power when he is pushed to anger. The common folk respect Stormhawk for his wisdom and instinct, though they have few reasons to call on him in daily life.

As a spirit of transformation that understands the place of stealth and perseverance in combat, Stormhawk is popular among druids, even as the fury that he summons for his battles echoes the barbarian's rage. To shamans and wardens, Stormhawk is an all-encompassing force—a spirit whose great wings take him past all points of the world in a heartbeat.

Three shaman powers in this book call on Stormhawk: Stormhawk's fury, Stormhawk vigilance, and Stormhawk's gambit. In addition, shamans who adopt the disciple of winds paragon path in this book wield Stormhawk's power.

Tree Father

Tree Father is an ancient and trusted spirit whose days of might and power are largely behind him. However, he is still called on and respected for his gifts of wisdom, as well as for his association with hunting and with the great forests. Other primal spirits and gods claim a part in the creation of the trees, but Tree Father's accomplishment lies in the forging of bonds between trees and other living things to create the forest.

Tree Father is popular among all races except elves, whose own legends provide an alternative history of the great forests of the world. In lieu of conversing with Tree Father, elves who follow the spirit way interact with a host of forest spirits. Elves think of most forests as female and know the spirits in that form.

Two shaman powers in this book, Tree Father's bounty and Tree Father's ward draw on the power of this elder spirit.

Stormhawk Takes Flight

This is a story of Stormhawk, and of how he taught the world to defend itself against elementals and immortals.

In the early days of the war of gods and primordials, the world remained untouched. Battles raged across the Astral Sea and over the Elemental Chaos, but the mortal realm was left alone. When that changed and war came to the world, the suffering was great.

One day, five younger gods and one great primordial tumbled into the world while locked in battle. Fire scorched the woods. Acid melted mountains. Astral stone and primordial iron carved huge scars through earth and sky. The people ran in terror.

As the gods and the primordial battled, none noticed the white cloud that drifted above them. The gods did not see the cloud grow black as mountains tumbled. The primordial ignored the rain as it hammered against it, pleading for peace. As the cloud took the shape of a great hawk, lightning flashed a warning from its eyes. Thunder boomed from the great bird's beak, demanding peace, but the gods and the primordial fought on.

Driven by rage, the great hawk swooped through the battle, scattering those who brought war to the world.

The lightning spoke: "I warned you once. Not again." In a great blue-white flash, the gods and the primordial were blinded.

The thunder spoke: "I asked for peace. You would not listen." With a terrible roar, the storm drove all other sound from the combatants' ears.

The rain spoke in tap-tap-tapping drops that the elemental and the immortals could understand in their blinded and deafened state: "I asked before. Now I am telling you." And the rain beat down on them in waves, pummeling all memory and reason from their minds.

Stormhawk dipped its beak into each god and the primordial, ripping out the choice bits before throwing those enemies back into the worlds from which they had come.

Tree Father Creates the Forests

In the earliest days, the land was rich with herds of great beasts. The people hunted easily and ate well. The people ate and ate, and the beasts died and died at the points of hunters' spears and arrows. Too soon, there were hardly any beasts left to hunt.

Tree Father saw this and knew that something had to be done. He pulled the hair from his thick, green beard and spread it over the earth. By the weave of his power, the scattered stands of trees that spread across the land grew close together and were intertwined. Soon, there were forests of great trees, with more spreading all the time. The beasts ran into the forest and hid from the hunters.

In time, the beasts grew more numerous, and everyone knew that was a good thing. But hunting was tougher than it had been, for catching prey in the forest was hard work.

The people cried out to Tree Father: "You hide away the meat for our fires. Our children grow weak, and the people grow fewer. Take away these forests, so that we might find our prey once again."

But Tree Father only smiled and shook his head.

Soon, the war of gods and primordials began. The people fled from the plains into the forests. There, Tree Father's boughs and leaves kept them hidden. And so it was that the people relearned old lessons. The world is for all things, and when anyone can be prey for stronger hunters, it is good to know places to hide.

Whisper

The elder spirit Whisper goes by different names and aspects across the world; Dark Sister, Fox Woman, and Little Dragon are among the most common. Whatever her name, Whisper makes trouble. Her voice is the rustling leaves and the wind through the grass. She weaves many tales—some true, most not. In stories, she plays tricks on deities, primordials, hapless ancestors, and the other elder spirits.

Some believe that Whisper had a hand in the return of the primal monsters, the threat of which brought the Monster Slayers into being. However, many also believe that Whisper first warned the gods that the primordials were set to destroy the world, or that it was she who tricked the primordials into taking their battle with the gods to other realms, sparing the world from destruction.

No one fully trusts Whisper, and those who bear her marks—typically tattoos of the moon and stars, a fox's eyes, or a dragon's tail—often live as loners, away from the suspicious eyes of others in the tribe. Shamans admire Whisper because she hears things she shouldn't, and because she is sometimes willing to share that forbidden knowledge. Barbarians revere her ability to drive folk to anger and rage with her subtle taunts, while druids respect her guise as the cunning fox. Wardens are less likely to draw on Whisper's power, though the rare wardens who can maintain a sense of humor alongside their sense of duty and obligation are sometimes influenced by her example.

The World Healer

When the war between the gods and the primordials ended and the primal spirits banished both opposing forces from the world, the World Healer moved across the face of the earth like a gentle wind. Where untamed primordial energy had warped the world, dissolving it back to its raw elemental state, the World Healer reshaped and repaired it. Where divine power had scorched the world, consuming forests in fire and drying seas with blinding light, the World Healer restored life and health to the injured land. Even now, the World Healer helps the world recover from tragedy and devastation, reinforcing the natural cycle of rebirth and renewal.

Shamans sometimes call on this elder spirit for their mightiest evocations of healing, such as spirit of the World Healer in Player's Handbook 2.

The World Serpent

The World Serpent is one of the best known of the great elders. When Khala tried to seize the mortal realm in her wintry grip, she sent her strongest exarch to forge an alliance with the primordial lord of ice. The World Serpent was watching. When those foes met, he wrapped his coils around Khala's exarch and the primordial lord, crushing them to a broken mass that Everflame burned away as a dark warning to the gods.

The deity Torog is said to have been trapped in the Underdark during the Dawn War because of the power of the primordials' curses. However, disciples of the World Serpent suspect that their spirit played a part in the deity's imprisonment, and that even now, he lies coiled around the earth and Torog's Underdark alike. His allies, the Deep Winds, move secretly through the darkness while the World Serpent lingers above, patiently awaiting the moment when Torog extends his power too far and slips into the World Serpent's grasp.

Most common folk have little reason to call on the World Serpent unless they live in regions prone to earthquakes, or from where they can see the scaly ridges of his shed skin, shaken loose as mountain ranges at the dawn of time. In contrast, primal heroes of all types are drawn to the World Serpent's power. The disciple of the World Serpent paragon path in Player's Handbook 2 allows a shaman to become the ultimate protector of the balance of the natural order, following in the path of this elder spirit. The barbarian's World Serpent rage and the shaman's spirit of the World Serpent (both in Player's Handbook 2) are among the most powerful evocations available to primal characters. But even low-level shamans can call on the World Serpent's earth-shaking might with the coils of the World Serpent power in this book.

The World Tree

The most ancient primal spirit of the forest, the World Tree is closely associated with Tree Father, but they are not the same spirit. The roots of the World Tree extend to the foundation of the earth, circulating life and primal power throughout the world. In fact, some shamans say that the World Tree is the spirit of the world itself–not any particular aspect of it, but the entire creation, its interconnected inhabitants and precariously balanced environments.

Some say that Corellon planted the World Tree and in that way seeded all the forests of the primeval world. Other legends say that Corellon or Tree Father, or the god and the spirit working together, gathered seeds from the World Tree and spread them across the world to plant the first forests.

Only characters who adopt the World Tree Guardian epic destiny in this book can call on the might of this ancient and powerful spirit, as they strive to protect it–and the world itself–from destruction and corruption.

PRIMAL BACKGROUNDS

The following material expands on the background system presented in Player's Handbook 2, with a focus on geographical backgrounds. These backgrounds speak to powerful archetypes of primal characters in legend and fiction, such as the stalking barbarian from the frigid north or the druidic sage who studied herbs and animals in quiet contemplation before being thrust into a life of adventure.

Like the backgrounds in Player's Handbook 2, the backgrounds in this book fall into these categories: geography, society, birth, occupation, and racial backgrounds.

Geography

These backgrounds give examples of wild places from which primal heroes might originate. The exact location of the homeland in relation to the rest of the world is up to you and your Dungeon Master. The land of your birth or upbringing might be a previously unexplored or forgotten stretch of countryside. It might be an isolated region in the Feywild. Or you might have been born in a region of an existing realm recently suffused with primal energy.

These backgrounds include both associated skills and associated languages, which are usually the languages of the races most commonly found in each geographical area.

If you are using a published world, such as the Forgotten Realms or the Eberron campaign setting, you can easily adapt the primal homelands described here to a setting-specific location. For example, the Wrathwood could represent the Reaching Woods in Elturgard or the Grove of the Guardian Trees in the Eldeen Reaches. Similarly, the Sea of Dust might be the Dust Desert of Raurin or a region in the Demon Wastes on Khorvaire. Although primal homelands can exist anywhere in the world, be sure to work with your DM to find a suitable location.

Blazestone

Rivers of fire, molten rock, toxic plumes venting from broken earth

Rugged peaks and belching volcanoes characterize Blazestone. In this forlorn region, toxic clouds rain ash across a barren landscape. Black glass crunches underfoot, while singed trees clack and clatter whenever the infrequent breeze blows hot air across the wastes. In spite of the hostile environment, a life can be lived here, though it is a tough and unforgiving one by any standard. The people of Blazestone make the most of scarce resources as they scratch out an existence among the broken terrain spilling down from the fiery peaks.

If you are a native of Blazestone, you are accustomed to hardships and danger, and you rely on toughness to carry you through your adventures. Genasi are common here, and goliaths, dwarves, and humans also call these forlorn lands home. Barbarians and wardens make the best Blazestone adventurers.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Endurance
Associated Languages: Giant, Primordial

Bleakmire

Creeping vines, insect clouds, endless brooding wetlands where death is never far away

Mist-shrouded wetlands, the Bleakmire is an ominous moor, where tall grasses conceal brackish waters and where gnarled trees struggle for the light just visible through the perpetual haze. Plague, vermin, and poisonous creatures teem in the Bleakmire, making it a dangerous place to explore. Patient crocodiles, disease-carrying insects, blood-sipping bats, stalking predators, and poisonous reptiles conspire to make intruders pay for their trespass.

You grew up in the sodden expanse of the Bleakmire, avoiding the many perils that lie in wait for the unwary. Humans subsist in the Bleakmire in the greatest numbers, but elves, half-orcs, and halflings live here, too. If kobolds are available as a player character race, you might consider that as your racial choice. Bleakmire characters are often insular and protective, traits exhibited by many wardens, but any primal class works well for this homeland.

Associated Skills: Endurance, Stealth
Associated Language: Draconic

Bloodtangle

Towering trees, savage carnivores, torrential rains mingling with debilitating swelter

Far to the south sprawls the Bloodtangle, a fecund expanse of rain forest sheltering an impassable landscape teeming with life. The trees grow tall and close together, their hundred-foot-high canopy blocking sunlight from the dank forest floor. Streams wind among the trunks, while bogs, quicksand, and flash floods take travelers by surprise. With hosts of poisonous wildlife, silent predators, and vicious natives, the Bloodtangle is no place for the unprepared. The people of the Bloodtangle are known for their use of venoms extracted from stinging insects, toxic amphibians, and venomous snakes.

You are at home in the unforgiving Bloodtangle. Human and elf are good racial choices for this homeland, but goblins, bugbears, hobgoblins, and kobolds are also appropriate if those are used as player races in your game. Barbarians and druids are excellent class choices, and you might consider multiclassing into ranger to reflect your superior hunting techniques.

Associated Skills: Heal, Nature
Associated Languages: Draconic, Goblin

Broken Lands

Great canyons and towering earth spires, spectacularly striated rock, dry and thirsty soil

The Broken Lands are an arid region marked by dramatic natural features: ravines, rock spires, and steep slopes with colorfully patterned striations. Vegetation is sparse, and rainfall is infrequent but intense. Drakes and lions hunt a variety of prey through the canyons. The cliffs, loose soil, and patches of slick clay make traversing the Broken Lands difficult, so travelers are rare and roads are unknown. The people of the Broken Lands, mostly dwarves and orcs, war with each other for what few resources the dry land has to offer.

You were born in the Broken Lands and grew up accustomed to hardship. The ways of the world beyond your homeland are strange to you, and you're marked by a strong competitive streak. Barbarians are the most common primal characters from the Broken Lands, but druids and shamans are also good options.

Associated Skills: Endurance, Intimidate
Associated Languages: Dwarven, Giant

Frostfell

Relentless tundra, colliding icebergs, sudden whiteouts, and sunshine that offers no warmth

Far to the north, beyond lands even partially civilized by mortals, stretches the wintry realm of the Frostfell. This frozen land, trapped in ice and blanketed by snow, is dimly illuminated by brief light that brings no succor. Little grows in the frigid wastes, and the temperature rarely climbs above freezing. Blue mountains sheathed in rime march across the horizon, while winds scour fields, disturbing the snow and revealing below it ice many feet thick. The people of the Frostfell carve ice castles from icebergs floating in the frigid seas.

You come from the frozen lands of the Frostfell and bring the traditions and methods of your people with you. Your homeland's harsh environment requires sturdiness or adaptability from its people. As a result, dwarf and human are good racial choices. For your class, consider druid or shaman.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Endurance
Associated Language: Dwarven

Howling Plains

Screaming winds, merciless horse riders, endless grasslands anchoring the dome of the world

To an outsider, the leagues of grasslands seem empty, but that is far from the truth. Birds nest in the undulating stalks. Wild horses run beneath the clear skies. Nature spirits live in every blade of grass, beneath every rock, and within the springs and streams that crisscross the landscape. Primal laughter is carried on the howling winds that give these plains their name. The people of the Howling Plains ride fleet-footed steeds across the rolling plains, following the movements of antelope and other migratory animals and avoiding the depredations of goblins.

You hail from the Howling Plains and have been initiated in the ancient rites practiced there. A member of any primal class can originate in this homeland, but barbarians and shamans are best suited.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Endurance
Associated Language: Goblin

Maelstrom

Crashing waves on a stony shore, brooding storm clouds, rushing rivers spilling into an unruly sea

The Maelstrom is a never-ending whirlpool of the sea, shrouded in constant storms, spewing thunder and mist as it inundates the surrounding lands with rain. Overlooking the spinning vortex is a great rocky shore, a nesting place for birds and tortoises. The stony beaches are home to scuttling crabs and scavenging gulls. To those living in its shadow, the Maelstrom is the birthplace of all living things. To outsiders, it is an insatiable vortex that swallows all things. The people who dwell in the shadow of the Maelstrom venture into the stormy waters on its verge to fish or to salvage wrecked vessels.

You were forged in the storm and quenched by the sea. Halflings are the most common race from this region, but genasi, specifically the stormsoul, watersoul, and windsoul manifestations, claim this homeland as well.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Intimidate
Associated Language: Primordial

Sea of Dust

Exposed barrens, shifting dunes, ruins of an ancient era buried in a vast wasteland

The Sea of Dust was once a verdant land, destroyed by unchecked magic in a storm of hatred and destruction. The power released in these cataclysmic rituals erased the ruling civilizations, reducing their cities to rubble and their fertile lands to areas of waste. Yet even in the wake of this devastation, life continues—testimony to nature's resilience. The nomadic peoples of the Sea of Dust band together, seeking to heal the land ravaged by their ancestors.

Having long roamed the Sea of Dust, you have become inured to its challenges. Dragonborn and tieflings are the most likely races to come from this homeland, but humans as well as firesoul and windsoul genasi are found here, too. Barbarians and shamans are the best class choices.

Associated Skills: Endurance, Nature
Associated Languages: Draconic, Primordial

Thunderpeaks

Booming thunder, cloud-shrouded slopes, mountains so tall they scrape the sky

Spine of the world, the Thunderpeaks have long been deemed insurmountable by travelers. No pass threads between the peaks, no road climbs their dizzying heights. Worse, black storm clouds gather overhead, herded by inexplicable wind currents, to lash the peaks with lightning and constant rain. The Thunderpeaks offer a glimpse into the raw and often violent nature of primal power. Intrepid souls who scale their heights soon taste its potency.

Goliaths make the best Thunderpeaks characters, although dwarves and dragonborn can also emerge from this homeland. Barbarians are an obvious choice for character class, but wardens serve as well.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Dungeoneering
Associated Languages: Dwarven, Giant

Underwild

Twisting corridors, subterranean gardens, fearsome horrors that have never seen daylight

The Underdark crawls with vile abominations that shun the rays of the sun. Populated by creatures such as drow and mind flayers, the place is known for its violent and cruel denizens. Still, not all areas are overrun by such sinister inhabitants. Certain places, far from the frequently traveled corridors, are filled with eddies and swirls of primal power, spawning new life out of the ruins of old. Such places are called the Underwild, and in them fungus forests, sweeps of phosphorescent mold, and slime pools gather primal energy for use by those who have the courage to seize it. Those who discover the Underwild also find abundant food, water, and other resources to help them survive the otherwise desolate Underdark.

Originating from the Underdark, you have seen its wonders and its wickedness. Drow is the best racial choice for this homeland, and the dark elves make interesting barbarians and druids. Of course, any race that has strong ties to the Underdark can work as well.

Associated Skills: Dungeoneering, Perception
Associated Languages: Deep Speech, Elven

Wrathwood

Emerald shadows, tall trees, a profusion of sun-dappled sylvan splendor

Blanketing a secluded valley, steeped in ancient magic, is the Wrathwood. This brooding forest has never felt the bite of an axe or the flame's hungry touch, for the woodland defends itself. One does not live in the Wrathwood without the permission of the trees; even the animals and insects sheltering beneath the boughs show deep reverence for their homeland. The Wrathwood does not welcome sentient beings, but those who show deference to and respect for the trees are tolerated and might even be allowed to make their homes in the cool shadows cast by towering redwoods.

You have a special connection to the Wrathwood and carry the lessons of your homeland with you as you venture into the world. Elves, eladrin, gnomes, and other races with strong connections to nature hail from this homeland. Any primal class can originate in the Wrathwood, though druids are the most common.

Associated Skills: Perception, Stealth
Associated Language: Elven

Combining Backgrounds

Remember that you can choose multiple backgrounds for your character, and you can mix and match backgrounds from this book, Player's Handbook 2, and other sources.

Consider this example: Quinn is a razorclaw shifter druid. He knows little about his birth, but his player knows that Quinn was born among a remote tribe of savage shifters—little different from lycanthropes in their savagery. Quinn's father was human, though, and the tribe abandoned him when he was born. The primal spirits watched over him during his infancy, inspiring a pride of lions to protect and raise him. When he was three, one of the lions carried him through miles of wilderness to the nearest human settlement and left him near the village. A local farmer found and raised him, recognizing the touch of the primal spirits upon him and caring for him out of respect for the spirits. As he grew, Quinn demonstrated a special empathy for all forms of life and a true healer's touch.

Quinn's player chose three background elements: isolated (society), found in the wild (birth), and farmer (occupation). Quinn gains a +2 bonus to Heal checks.

Society

The society background element in Player's Handbook 2 describes social and economic status in the broadest terms. These additional backgrounds tell more specific stories about your character's social origin.

Disgraced

You are the child of a tribal chieftain, raised with the expectation that you would one day take on that position. After years of training, the time came for you to complete the great hunt, in which you would slay a mystic red stag and take your place at your father's side. Tracking the beast was easy, but when you found the stag, you could not bring yourself to slay it. It met your gaze, and it seemed to speak to you, though you've never been able to express what it said in words. You returned to your tribe in disgrace, your failure seen as a sign of weakness. The chieftain and the other members of the tribe declared that you were not fit to rule, and you were banished, told not to return until you had redeemed your honor.

What did the stag communicate to you? How can you regain your honor? Do you want to return and claim your rightful title, or is the adventuring life more appealing to you now?

Perhaps political rather than primal factors led to your banishment. Were you falsely charged with a crime you didn't commit? Were you expelled on the whim of your jealous father or mother? Or did you renounce your people voluntarily?

Associated Skills: Arcana, Diplomacy

Failed Thane

Once you were a leader of your people—perhaps a thaneborn barbarian using your magnetism and power to bend them to your will, or possibly a wise shaman or druid guiding them with your insight and magic. However, your leadership brought them to disaster. You might have urged them into a war they couldn't win, coaxed them to migrate to land that couldn't support them, or angered the primal spirits by defying a taboo. The consequences were disastrous, and the remnant of your people banished you in hopes of appeasing the angry spirits. Now you live with the weight of that failure on your conscience. Are you repentant, or do you defiantly believe you did the right thing? Perhaps your decision was an unpleasant alternative to a far worse fate. What will happen if your destiny leads you into a similar decision, when the lives of your adventuring companions are at stake?

Associated Skills: Diplomacy, Insight

Isolated

You have lived most of your life isolated in the wilderness, and you're unfamiliar with the customs of those who dwell in cities and villages. Perhaps you were raised by preternaturally intelligent animals in the wild, under the tutelage of the primal spirits, or you might have been born in a very remote tribe. You're accustomed to the natural order and to nature's form of justice. You enjoy a deep connection to the primal spirits, and you might never have heard of the distant gods of the Astral Sea. You are reverent toward plants and animals, and might call them friends far more readily than you extend that term to other humanoids.

How and by whom were you raised? How do you react to civilization once you encounter it? With wide-eyed wonder or grim disdain?

Associated Skills: Endurance, Nature

Birth

These background elements speak to the harsh realities of life in the wilder places of the world.

Found in the Wild

You were discovered wandering in the wilderness at a very young age, and you have little memory of your early past. You spent your youth working on a farm not far from the area where you were found. That life might have been enough for you, for you've always felt a deep connection to the earth. However, when your new homeland was attacked by goblin raiders and its citizens were murdered, you felt a presence within your blood that called you to action, and you have been following that call ever since.

Who took you in when you were found? Was that person a loving foster parent or a cruel taskmaster? What experiences in your youth nurtured your apparently inborn connection to the primal spirits, and how has that connection flourished in your adulthood?

Associated Skills: Heal, Streetwise

Primal Omen

Great Watcher sent signs to herald your birth: patterns in the sky or in the flights of birds, whispers in the leaves of the forest, rumblings in the earth, or a song in the thunder. The omens were said to point to the primal spirits' favor, and no one was surprised when you mastered the evocations of your class. However, just before her death, your mother tried to tell you that there was more to the omen—something more troubling, perhaps even sinister. She couldn't get the words out, and no one else knew or was willing to tell you what the elders had said about your birth. You left your home partly to prove that you are the master of your own destiny, and you still don't know what destiny Great Watcher foresaw for you.

Associated Skills: Arcana, Nature

Refugee

You were once a champion among your people, but your life changed when your community was attacked by trolls. You fought bravely, and it was only through your prowess that you were able to survive. You escaped to a nearby settlement and from there made your way through the world for a time. Yet you never forgot what happened to your people, and you have sworn vengeance against the creatures responsible.

Are there other survivors of your people? Do you know where they are? Do you hope to reunite them?

Associated Skills: Intimidate, Thievery

Occupation

Primal characters often have occupational backgrounds that involve spending time in the wilderness.

Renegade

You have spent many years walking the roads, and though many know you, few know your origin. You are the lone survivor of a mystic enclave that possessed a terrible secret. The only way you have found to avoid those who might try to seize the knowledge you have is to keep moving, always just ahead of your pursuers. You use your allies among the primal spirits to help you stay one step ahead of your enemies. However, it's a hard life always being on the move, and you wonder how long you can keep it up.

Associated Skills: Arcana, Streetwise

Revered Elder

You are no brash youth embarking on a life of adventure before settling into a respectable adulthood. Your younger days are behind you, though your body and mind are still strong thanks to the favor of the spirits. You have communed with the spirits all your life, and until recently you used their wisdom to guide your people. You might have been the head of a family following the spirit way in the midst of a town or city, or you could have advised the chieftain of a vast tribe in the wilderness. Perhaps you sat on a council of elders in a village, or even led that council.

But something changed, and the sedate life of an elder is no longer possible for you. What happened to spur you into adventure? Did you have a vision that summoned you to a dangerous place? Did a younger member of your family venture into a dungeon and never return? Perhaps you lost your ability to easily slip into the spirit world and commune with the spirits, and you want to find out why.

Associated Skills: Insight, Nature

Sage

You have dedicated your life to a careful study of nature, learning its cycles and rhythms. You see the world in a very different way from others, and for that reason, people come from far and wide to seek your wisdom on matters of nature. You have read the spirits' signs and omens, and you know something is coming that no one is prepared for. You might be alone in this knowledge, but the fact that you have the knowledge suggests that you can help avert whatever disaster is imminent.

Associated Skills: Arcana, Nature

Wild Hunter

Ordinary hunters stalk deer and other game quietly, and they prefer to strike from a distance with javelin, sling, or bow. But you are no ordinary hunter. You seek the nastiest dire tiger or bulette in the area and beat it to death with your club to tenderize the meat. You might be protecting your people by driving off dangerous predators, or you might kill these monsters just to prove your strength. As a wild hunter, you are truly happy only in areas populated by dangerous prey such as mastodons and behemoths.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Nature

Racial Backgrounds

Racial traditions color the way that primal heroes interact with the primal spirits and might shape the way you build your character. These backgrounds reflect the specific primal slants of different races. Some of them have less to do with the events of your past than with the beliefs or traditions of your people.

A few races don't have background entries here. For goliaths and shifters who have primal classes, the racial backgrounds in Player's Handbook 2 are appropriate. If you want to play an elf who has strong ties to the primal spirits, consider the wild elf background in Player's Handbook 2. Human characters should consider geography, society, or other background elements from that book or this one.

Deva

Spirit Soul: You believe that your race has a dual essence, that upon your death one part of that essence reincarnates in a new body while another joins the great cloud of primal spirits. The spirits of your past incarnations are like your ancestors, and you seek to commune with them above all other primal spirits, striving to assimilate all the wisdom you have acquired in your past lives.

Associated Skills: Arcana, History

Dragonborn

Dragon Totem Warrior: In the way that some barbarians adopt totem animals that embody the qualities they aspire to, you look to the qualities of drakes and dragons as a model for your own ferocity. You might come from a tribe of dragonborn that serves a living dragon ruler, or perhaps you venerate a long-dead dragon spirit that once ruled your ancestors. Gray dragons and cobalt dragons are the most common totem dragons for dragonborn characters, because they are the most rapacious hunters among dragonkind.

Drow

Underdark Survivor: You never saw the lightless depths beneath the earth as a place of death and unmoving stone. To your eyes, it teemed with life—not just the life of fungi and crawling things, but the whispers of the Deep Winds and other primal spirits. Even the terrible spider symbol of Lolth you saw as an echo of the Fate Weaver, a being of far greater wisdom than the dread and demented Spider Queen. Your beliefs and strange behavior earned you exile from your home city, but you didn't mind much—you always felt more at home in the wild caverns anyway.

Associated Skills: Dungeoneering, Nature

Dwarf

Earth Steward: It is your duty to safeguard the natural stone and be a steward for the gifts the spirits offer to your people. You call upon the dwarf ancestors and the spirits of rock and mountain, seeing both groups of spirits as the venerable elders of your people. The riches of the earth are not to be used for personal profit or glory, but for the good of the people.

Associated Skills: Endurance, History

Eladrin or Gnome

Primal Fey: The primal spirits inhabit and protect the natural world. The echo planes—the Feywild and the Shadowfell—are not entirely cut off from the spirits' power, but the spirits are much weaker there, where other powers hold sway. You are native to the Feywild, where arcane magic courses through every leaf and blade of grass. You always felt an affinity for and a sensitivity to that magic, a constant awareness of its hum through the wild places of your home. Then you visited the world, and your ear naturally listened for the same vibrant hum. You found it, but it was different—it was the song of the primal spirits. You found that you could naturally communicate with those spirits and call on their power.

Associated Skills: Arcana, Nature

Genasi

Primal Soul: Many genasi gravitate toward the places in the world that reflect the elemental nature of their own being; earthsoul genasi live in mountainous regions, while watersoul genasi live by the sea. For you, however, this natural attraction led to a far deeper communion. Your nature is closely tied to the Elemental Chaos, but in the world you found powerful spirits inhabiting the same features that called to your elemental soul. Your earthsoul spoke to the spirit of the great mountains. Your firesoul called to the spirits dancing in the volcano's heart. Your stormsoul sang as the storm spirits thundered in the sky. Your watersoul found its kindred in the spirits of wave and current. Your windsoul howled in harmony with the spirits of the air. You recognized your kin, and they recognized you, gifting you with power and wisdom.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Nature

Half-Elf or Half-Orc

Spirit of Two Worlds: You are the child of a city-dwelling human and either an elf from a particularly wild tribe or an orc from a relatively civilized one. You inherited a keen awareness of nature and an affinity for the primal spirits from your nonhuman parent, and a fondness for civilization and a reverence for the gods from your human parent. You see no conflict between these two worlds, and you move easily between the rites you use to invoke the spirits' favor and the prayers you offer in the temples of the gods. You venerate your elf or orc ancestors and seek deeper understandings of your human side's primal roots. Some people—perhaps even one of your parents—might pressure you to choose one path or the other, but for now, you choose to walk them both.

Associated Skills: Nature, Religion

Halfling

Free Spirit: The ultimate symbol of primal power, to your eyes, is the ever-changing, relentless rush of water. The spirits you evoke are nature spirits of lakes, rivers, and rain, or animal spirits of fish, waterfowl, and songbirds. Water is everywhere, a sign of freedom that encourages you to stay on the move. You might come from a halfling tribe that wanders a marsh, a river, or a coastline. Or you could come from a city, where artificial pools and aviaries are your only connection to the spirits you revere.

Associated Skills: Athletics, Nature

Tiefling

Feral Exile: After the fall of Bael Turath, thousands of tieflings wandered through the wild. Your ancestors discovered the primal magic in the wildest places of the world, long ignored by the arcane magicians of the empire, and adopted a new lifestyle suited to the savage wilderness. More than many other primal characters, you might be drawn to the ferocity and bloodthirsty nature of some beast spirits, and you might be more at home in desolate, blasted wastelands than in verdant swamps or forests. Is primal magic a means by which you hope to atone for the evil of your ancestors? Or do you view it as a tool to acquire power of your own—power that might one day exceed that of Bael Turath?

Associated Skills: Arcana, Intimidate

The feats presented here are tailored for primal characters, although a few of them can be used by characters who use any power source.

You must meet a feat's prerequisites, if any, to take the feat. If you ever lose a prerequisite for a feat, you can't use the feat until you meet the prerequisite again. A feat that has a class as a prerequisite is available only to members of that class, including characters who have joined the class through a class-specific multiclass feat.

Tribal Feats

The core of primal power rests in understanding the connections that bind all living things. Groups that have such an understanding learn to strengthen their bonds of blood and friendship, and they are capable of extraordinary coordination based on a deep familiarity, trust, and kinship, rather than hours of training. Tribal feats represent such coordination.

A tribal feat grants a bonus to you that increases if your allies also have the feat. An adventuring party that uses these feats might feature similar tattoos, carry totems or charms, or adopt a symbol that adorns their shields, cloaks, and armor.

Heroic Tier Feats

Feats in this section are available to characters of any level who meet the prerequisites.

Agile Form

Prerequisite: Druid, wild shape power

Benefit: When you use wild shape to change from your humanoid form to beast form, you shift 1 square.

Human Nature Lore

Prerequisite: Human, any primal class

Benefit: Whenever you make an Endurance check or a Nature check, you can roll twice and use either result.

Hurl Weapon

Prerequisite: Barbarian

Benefit: You can use any one-handed off-hand weapon as a heavy thrown weapon. Normal range for weapons you wield this way is 5 squares, and long range is 10 squares.

Impaling Thrust

Prerequisite: Warden

Benefit: Whenever you score a critical hit with a heavy blade or a spear, you can choose to treat the critical hit as a normal hit. If you do so, the target is immobilized until the start of your next turn.

Improvised Missile

Prerequisite: Barbarian

Benefit: You can use improvised melee weapons (not including unarmed attacks) as heavy thrown weapons with a normal range of 5 squares and a long range of 10 squares.

In addition, whenever you use an improvised melee weapon this way, you gain a +2 feat bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls.

Inner Compass

Prerequisite: Trained in Dungeoneering or Nature

Benefit: You always know which way is north. When making a Dungeoneering check or a Nature check to find your way in a natural environment, you can roll twice and use either result.

Invigorating Spirit

Prerequisite: Shaman, healing spirit power

Benefit: When you use healing spirit, each ally adjacent to your spirit companion can shift 1 square as a free action.

Lifespirit Vigor

Prerequisite: Warden, Lifespirit class feature

Benefit: You can grant a saving throw to a second ally within 5 squares of you when you use your second wind.

Longtooth Spirit Shifter

Prerequisite: Longtooth shifter, any primal class

Benefit: While you are under the effect of your longtooth shifting racial power, the regeneration you gain increases by 2.

Manifest Healing

Prerequisite: Genasi, any primal class

Benefit: When you use a genasi racial power, you gain 5 temporary hit points. The temporary hit points increase to 10 at 11th level and 15 at 21st level. If you have two or more elemental manifestations, the temporary hit points increase by 5.

Markings of the Elements

Prerequisite: Goliath, any primal class

Benefit: Whenever you use your stone's endurance racial power, you can choose cold, fire, lightning, poison, radiant, or thunder. If you do so, you gain resistance to that damage type instead of resistance to all damage, and the resistance increases by 5.

Markings of the Predator

Prerequisite: Goliath, any primal class

Benefit: When you bloody a creature, you gain a +1 bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn.

Midnight Stalker [Tribal]

Benefit: You gain a +2 feat bonus to Stealth checks. This bonus increases by 1 for each ally within 10 squares of you who has this feat, to a maximum of +5.

Precise Fangs

Prerequisite: Shaman, Stalker Spirit class feature

Prerequisite: Shaman, Protector Spirit class feature

Benefit: When you hit with your spirit's shield power, the attack deals 1d8 extra damage.

Quick Stow

Prerequisite: Druid, wild shape power

Benefit: When you use wild shape to change from your humanoid form to beast form, you don't automatically drop handheld items that aren't implements. Such items become part of your beast form. However, you gain no benefit from a handheld item, such as a shield, that must be wielded to be functional, and you can use only the properties and powers of the item that don't require you to make an attack with it.

Raging Bloodcut

Prerequisite: Barbarian

Benefit: When you hit a target with any rage power, you have the option of reducing the damage to that target by 1[W] before you roll damage. If you do so, the target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends).

At 11th level, you gain the option of reducing the damage by 2[W] to increase the ongoing damage to 10. At 21st level, you gain the option of reducing the damage by 3[W] to increase the ongoing damage to 15. You can't take away more damage dice than the power has. For example, if a power normally deals 2[W] damage, you can't reduce the damage by 3[W].

Razorclaw Spirit Shifter

Prerequisite: Razorclaw shifter, any primal class

Benefit: While you're under the effect of your razorclaw shifting racial power, when an enemy damages you with an attack against AC or Reflex, you can shift 1 square as an immediate reaction.

Spirits of the Primal Dragons

Prerequisite: Dragonborn, any primal class

Benefit: The first time you are bloodied during an encounter, your attacks deal 1d8 extra damage until the end of your next turn. This damage is the type you initially chose for your dragon breath racial power.

Staggering Smash

Prerequisite: Any primal class

Benefit: Whenever you daze or stun an enemy with a primal power, you push that enemy 1 square.

Stinging Swarm

Prerequisite: Druid, Primal Swarm class feature, wild shape power

Benefit: Once per round when an enemy damages you with a melee attack while you are in beast form, that enemy grants combat advantage to you until the end of your next turn.

Stone Step Spirits

Prerequisite: Dwarf, any primal class

Benefit: While you're not wearing heavy armor, you can ignore 1 square of difficult terrain when you move and ignore all difficult terrain when you move as part of a charge.

Stormheart Push

Prerequisite: Warden, Stormheart class feature

Benefit: When you use Stormheart to slide an enemy, you can push the enemy 2 squares instead of sliding it.

Strengthening Spirit

Prerequisite: Shaman, healing spirit power

Benefit: When you use healing spirit, each ally adjacent to your spirit companion gains temporary hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Strong-Willed Summoning

Prerequisite: Druid

Benefit: When a creature you summon uses an instinctive action to attack, it gains a +1 bonus to the attack roll.

Sudden Call

Prerequisite: Shaman

Benefit: You can use your call spirit companion power as a free action on your turn.

Thunderborn Rage

Prerequisite: Barbarian, Thunderborn Wrath class feature

Benefit: The thunder damage of your Thunderborn Wrath increases by 5.

Vigorous Spirit

Prerequisite: Shaman, healing spirit power

Benefit: When you use healing spirit, the target regains additional hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Watcher Spirit Adept

Prerequisite: Shaman, Watcher Spirit class feature

Benefit: Allies gain a +2 bonus to Insight checks and Perception checks while adjacent to your spirit companion.

Watchful Guardian
Prerequisite: Druid, Primal Guardian class feature, wild shape power
Benefit: While you are in beast form, you and each ally adjacent to you gain a +2 feat bonus to attack rolls when making opportunity attacks.

Watchful Owl [Tribal]
Benefit: You gain a +2 feat bonus to Perception checks. This bonus increases by 1 for each ally within 10 squares of you who has this feat, to a maximum of +5.

Wild Bull Rush
Prerequisite: Druid, wild shape power
Benefit: While you are in beast form, you gain a +2 feat bonus to bull rush attack rolls, and you can bull rush targets of any size.

Wild Sage
Prerequisite: Trained in Nature
Benefit: You gain a +5 feat bonus to Nature knowledge checks and to monster knowledge checks to identify a natural creatures.
In addition, choose one of the following rituals: Dowsing Rod, Portend Weather, or Traveler's Camouflage. You master that ritual and can perform it once per day without a ritual book and without expending components.

Wildblood Fury
Prerequisite: Warden, Wildblood class feature
Benefit: When you use your second wind, you gain a bonus to damage rolls against each enemy marked by you equal to your Wisdom modifier until the end of your next turn.

World Speaker Spirit Adept
Prerequisite: Shaman, World Speaker Spirit class feature
Benefit: You and your allies ignore difficult terrain while adjacent to your spirit companion.

Paragon Tier Feats
A character must be at least 11th level to select any of the feats in this section.

Arcing Throw
Prerequisite: 11th level, warden
Benefit: When you use a spear as a thrown weapon, the target doesn't gain cover from its allies.

Bolstered Swarm
Prerequisite: 11th level, druid, Primal Swarm class feature, wild shape power
Benefit: When you use wild shape to change from your humanoid form to beast form, you gain 5 + your Constitution modifier temporary hit points. The temporary hit points increase to 10 + your Constitution modifier at 21st level.

Bolstering Guardian
Prerequisite: 11th level, druid, Primal Guardian class feature
Benefit: When you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points with a druid attack power, one ally adjacent to you gains temporary hit points equal to your Constitution modifier.

Benefit: When you use wild shape to change from your humanoid form to beast form, you can shift a number of squares equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Reckless Rage
Prerequisite: 11th level, barbarian
Benefit: When you attack an enemy with a rage power, you can take a –2 penalty to the attack roll against that enemy to deal 1[W] extra damage to it.

Retributive Spirit
Prerequisite: 11th level, shaman, call spirit companion power
Benefit: When your spirit companion is destroyed, the creature that destroyed it takes a –2 penalty to all defenses until the end of your next turn.

Scattering Swarm
Prerequisite: 11th level, druid, Primal Swarm class feature, wild shape power
Benefit: While you are in beast form, if you take damage from an area or a close attack, you can shift 2 squares as a free action.

Sentinel Spirit
Prerequisite: 11th level, shaman, Watcher Spirit class feature
Benefit: Allies gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls when making opportunity attacks while adjacent to your spirit companion.

Shielding Spirit
Prerequisite: 11th level, shaman, Protector Spirit class feature, healing spirit power
Benefit: When you use healing spirit, each ally adjacent to your spirit companion gains a +2 bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn.

Spirit's Eyes
Prerequisite: 11th level, shaman
Benefit: Whenever you make a Perception check while your spirit companion is present, you can roll twice and use either result.

Stormheart Thunder
Prerequisite: 11th level, warden, Stormheart class feature
Benefit: When you use Stormheart to slow an enemy, that enemy gains vulnerable 5 thunder until the end of your next turn.

Thirsty Blade
Prerequisite: 11th level, barbarian
Benefit: When you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points with a charge attack using an axe or a heavy blade, each enemy adjacent to you at the end of the charge takes damage equal to your Strength modifier.

Thundering Bull Rush
Prerequisite: 11th level, any primal class
Benefit: When you bull rush, you can target two creatures adjacent to you. If you hit and push both targets, you choose which vacated space you shift into.

Thunderous Cry
Prerequisite: 11th level, barbarian, war cry power
Benefit: When you use war cry, the targets grant combat advantage to you until the end of your next turn.

Two-Handed Grasp
Prerequisite: 11th level, any primal class

Prerequisite: 11th level, druid, wild shape power
Benefit: Once per encounter, when you use wild shape, you regain the use of your second wind if you have already used it during this encounter.

Warning Guardian

Prerequisite: 11th level, druid, Primal Guardian class feature

Benefit: Any ally adjacent to you doesn't grant combat advantage for being flanked.

Wellspring of Life

Prerequisite: 11th level, warden, Font of Life class feature

Benefit: When you succeed on a saving throw granted by your Font of Life, each ally adjacent to you gains a +1 bonus to saving throws until the end of your next turn.

Wildblood Retribution

Prerequisite: 11th level, warden, Wildblood class feature

Benefit: When you use your second wind, if any enemy marked by you makes an attack that doesn't include you as a target before the start of your next turn, you can make a melee basic attack against that enemy as a free action during your next turn.

Withering Roar

Prerequisite: 11th level, barbarian, Thaneborn Triumph class feature

Benefit: When you use your roar of triumph power, you choose for each target either to grant combat advantage until the end of your next turn or to take the -2 penalty to all defenses.

Epic Tier Feats

A character must be at least 21st level to select any of the feats in this section.

Earthstrength Might

Prerequisite: 21st level, warden, Earthstrength class feature

Benefit: When you use your second wind, you can make a melee basic attack as a free action.

Far-Reaching Grasp

Prerequisite: 21st level, warden, warden's grasp power

Benefit: Your warden's grasp is a close burst 10 instead of a close burst 5, and the range of the trigger increases to 10 squares.

Grave Spirit

Prerequisite: 21st level, shaman, Stalker Spirit class feature

Benefit: When an enemy adjacent to your spirit companion drops to 0 hit points, each ally adjacent to your spirit companion regains 10 hit points.

Guardian Resurgence

Prerequisite: 21st level, druid, Primal Guardian class feature

Benefit: When an ally adjacent to you uses his or her second wind, that ally regains additional hit points equal to your Constitution modifier.

Benefit: You gain the barbarian class feature Rampage.

Warden's Endurance [Multiclass Warden]

Prerequisite: Defender of the Wild feat

Benefit: Once per encounter, you can make a saving throw against one effect that a save can end at the start of your turn. On a save, the effect immediately ends, preventing it from affecting you on your current turn. If you fail the saving throw, you still make a saving throw against the effect at the end of your turn.

EPIC DESTINIES

Your epic destiny brings you in tune with the world you strive to protect, making your connection to the primal world unbreakable. Those who achieve primal epic destinies become known as great spirits by the lesser spirits and by the tribes and people who revere and acknowledge the power of primal spirits.

Fang of the World Serpent

When the slumbering World Serpent awakes, its fury incarnates—in you.

Prerequisite: 21st level, any primal class

The role of the primal spirits is to protect and preserve the world. Even the World Serpent, whose coils could crush a god and whose fangs could pierce a primordial, exists to protect the natural order and balance of the world, not simply to destroy. Though the motions of the World Serpent's mighty coils can shake the earth, he enfolds the world to shield it from harm, not to crush away its life.

You, though, are a living embodiment of the World Serpent's anger. His venom courses through your veins, and your sinews carry the strength of his coils. You are meant to face some terrible foe—a demon prince or a primordial, perhaps, or even a destructive god who seeks the world's demise. The World Serpent has invested you with his power for a single purpose: to destroy that threat and preserve the world's balance.

Immortality

You were born for this one purpose: to carry the World Serpent's wrath to the enemies of the world. When that purpose is accomplished, what fate awaits you?

Striking Serpent: The power of the World Serpent burns within you, and that power need not return to him when your mortal life has ended. When the greatest threat to the world's existence is finally defeated and your Destiny Quest is complete, your spirit joins the world you fought so hard to protect. You become a new elder spirit—Striking Serpent—ready to invest a new champion with your power when another threat to the world arises.

Fang of the World Serpent Features

Serpent's Fury (21st level): When you hit an enemy with a primal melee attack power, your next melee attack against that enemy before the end of your next turn deals extra damage equal to your Strength modifier.

Rampant Slaughter (24th level): When you bloody an enemy or score a critical hit with a primal melee attack power, you can make two melee basic attacks as a free action. Only one of these attacks can target the creature you bloodied or scored a critical hit against.

Serpent's Resilience (30th level): Any creature that scores a critical hit against you must make the attack roll again with a –5 penalty. If the second attack roll would hit, the attack is indeed a critical hit. Otherwise, the critical hit becomes a normal hit, and you can spend a healing surge as a free action.

Fang of the World Serpent Power

Serpent's Retaliation — Fang of the World Serpent Utility 26

Your enemies' strikes fuel the fury of your counterattacks.

Daily ✦ Primal, Stance
Minor Action Personal

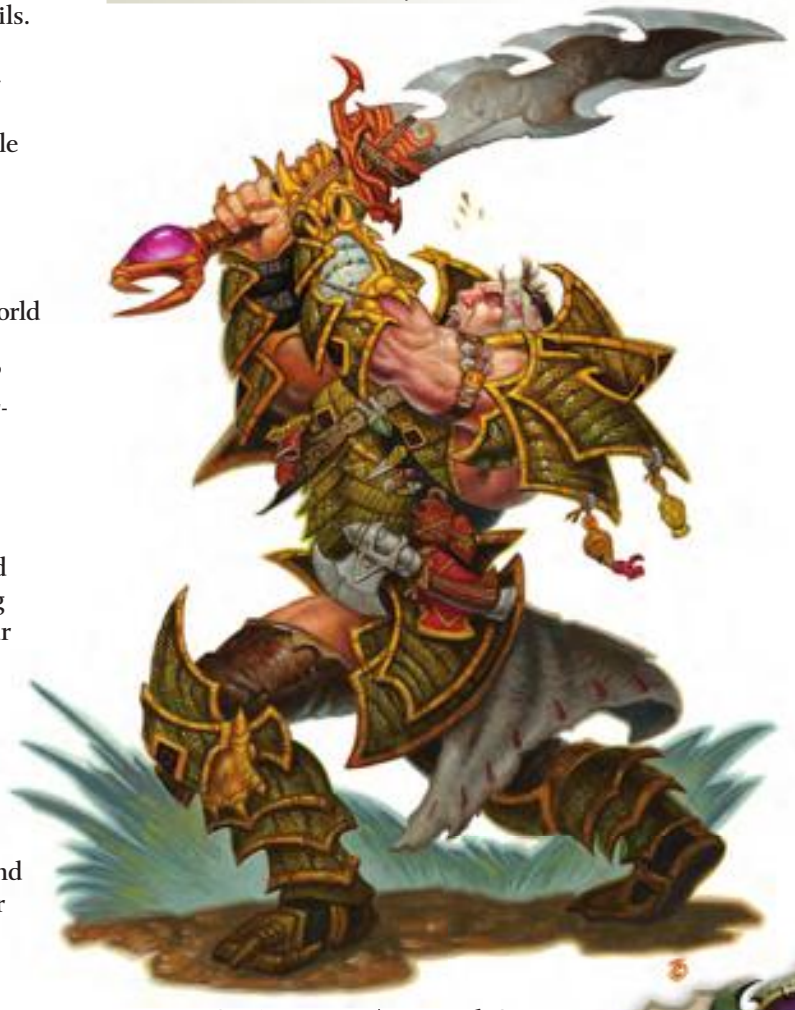
Effect: Until the stance ends, whenever an enemy hits you, you gain a +2 power bonus to speed and a +2 bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.



CHRIS SEAMAN

Fury of the Wild

Your anger can never be quenched as long as cruel beings despoil the natural world.

Prerequisite: 21st level, any primal class

You are an incarnation of nature's wrath, rampaging against all who would destroy the bounty of nature. Your enemies are many: the demons that seek destruction of life and land, the aberrant monsters that stain the beauty of the world, and the impetuous creatures that destroy forests and rivers for the sake of creating grotesque cities from stone torn from the earth. You feel the pain of the natural world around you when it's burned by unnatural fire or polluted with the presence of those who dishonor the wild, and you hear the spirits cry out in agony as they die. Wild, unbridled fury rages in you and is unleashed without warning against the foes of the natural world.

JASON A. ENGLE

Immortality

Your eternal fate depends on the state of the world when you die.

Fury Made Placid: If your death stops the destruction of nature, you can sleep in peace. By defeating a great enemy of the natural world, or creating a great expanse of untouched wilderness, you can overcome the rage that drives you. You become one of the great spirits, but one that is peaceful. The speakers of primal lore will tell tales of your change and how your great sacrifice prevented nature's decline, thus quelling your anger. You now live as a more benevolent spirit of peace or beauty.

The Fury Eternal: Despite all your effort and all your rage, nature is subjected to more transgressions every day. You can no longer contain your outrage, and you permanently become a spirit of fury. You stalk the wilderness and rampage into cities indiscriminately, wreaking agony and destruction on all in your path. Your story is a cautionary one. Tribal leaders warn youths to avoid your path and say that you are proof that no matter how hard one fights, the enemies of nature can corrupt and destroy.

Fury of the Wild Features

Fury's Strength (21st level): Your Strength or Wisdom score increases by 2.

Land's Fury (24th level): When you score a critical hit, each unbloodied enemy within 10 squares of you takes damage equal to your level + your Strength or Wisdom modifier.

Unstoppable Fury (30th level): When you miss a creature that isn't bloodied with an at-will attack power, you can reroll that attack but must use the second result.

Fury of the Wild Power

Fury's Form Fury of the Wild Utility 26

Your blood is nature's blood, and when you are harmed, you become a spirit of fury bent on avenging nature's pain.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: An enemy bloodies you
Effect: You gain temporary hit points equal to your level. Until the end of your next turn, you gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls, all defenses, and speed. In addition, you gain a bonus to damage rolls against unbloodied creatures equal to your Strength or Wisdom modifier.

Honored Ancestor

The spirits that have clustered around you all your life reveal their final secret—you have always been one of them.

Prerequisite: 21st level, any primal class

As you have risen toward epic power, it has become increasingly clear that you have a unique relationship with the ancestor spirits that other primal heroes know as guides and allies. If you're a druid, you hear the voices of the ancestors each time you shift shapes. If you're a barbarian, your rages are always tempered by a third perspective, and sometimes a fourth, fifth, and sixth, as if you were observing yourself from above and on each side, seeing through more than your own rage-filled eyes. If you're a warden, you understand that the tribe's ancient protectors are your peers, not just your ancestors. If you're a shaman, you have realized the truth before attaining your epic destiny: The ancestors are more than guides and allies—they were once your comrades, your friends, and your helpers when you walked the world in earlier lifetimes, helping the people as an ancestor spirit.

You are an ancient ancestor reborn into a new life. You share understandings and communication with other primal spirits beyond anything that most primal heroes experience because you know all the voices of the spirits, all the subtle ways and swift whispers by which they make themselves known. You can see the spirits everywhere in the world as they inhabit trees and rocks or flow through the bodies of you and your allies.

Immortality

As an ancient spirit returned to mortal flesh, you strive to fulfill the mission that returned you to the world.

Great Ancestor: What is your great cause, your mission? It must be something huge, something that the natural course of the world could not have accomplished. If you don't already know your cause as you move into the epic tier, work with your DM to arrange a great a mission that befits a returned Honored Ancestor.

When you have completed your Destiny Quest, you might stay within the world for one more season to fix each of the world's textures in your memory. Then you must return to the world of the ancestors. As a spirit, you will remember this life, and all the others. It was a good life. Perhaps it was the last time you will walk the earth. Perhaps not.

Honored Ancestor Features

Spirit Guide (21st level): You can no longer be surprised, and you don't grant combat advantage for being flanked, dazed, or prone.

Spirit Migration (24th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can teleport 5 squares as a free action, either before or after the extra action.

Spirit's Protection (30th level): The first time you are reduced to 0 hit points or fewer during an encounter, you can spend a healing surge and regain additional hit points equal to your Wisdom or Charisma score.

Honored Ancestor Power

Spirit Warning — Honored Ancestor Utility 26

The spirits that guide you warn you of impending doom.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Immediate Interrupt Personal
Trigger: An enemy hits you
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: The target rerolls the attack with a -5 penalty and must use the new result. The target can't score a critical hit with the rerolled attack.

RALPH BEISNER

Mythic Spirit

Your mortal deeds warrant your inclusion in the legends of the elder spirits. As you shape the world, you find your place in eternity.

Prerequisite: 21st level, any primal class

The greatest primal spirits are immortalized in the stories recounted by your people. Told and retold around campfires, these tales warn the young against foolish mistakes and inspire greatness from living heroes. Each telling changes a tale; each speaker alters minor details or fabricates new adventures. These adaptations do not make the tales any less true, however. The primal spirits and their place in the world are fluid, changing with mortal expectation and need.

Although you have learned to count the great primal spirits as allies, you never expected to be included in the stories of the ancestors and elder spirits. Even more disconcerting is that the storytellers incorporate you in the most famous tales, placing you alongside Great Bear and the World Serpent. In these evolving recitations, you play a small part at first, but your role grows with each telling. As you travel the world and beyond, battling foes and righting wrongs, you find truth in these tales and a dim awareness that somehow, you have always been and always will be.

ERIC BELISLE

Immortality

Each victory and defeat cements your place in history. In the end, you fade from the present to live on in legend.

Stuff of Legend: Your adventures permeate the world, carried on the wind. Where the motes of your myth fall, primal tribes weave them into their tales, binding you to the past, setting your deeds alongside those of the other great spirits. You might deny the details of these tales at first, but in time, the stories become familiar and you begin to remember the events as they are recounted, not necessarily as they happened. Your place in legend is secured when you complete your Destiny Quest and join the cast of hundreds who guide the primal people through myth into the uncertain future. You fade away, your body dissolving into the wind and the earth as your spirit flows out into the world.

Mythic Spirit Features

Foretold Destiny (21st level): An ability score of your choice increases by 2. You gain a +2 bonus to saving throws while you are not bloodied.

It Is Written (24th level): Whenever you save, each ally adjacent to you can make a saving throw.

Mythic Rebirth (30th level): While you are dying, you do not need to make death saving throws, and you can use your second wind without taking an action.

Mythic Spirit Power

Fate Averted Mythic Spirit Utility 26

You alter fate, rewriting your people's myths to serve your purpose.

Daily ✦ Healing, Primal, Teleportation
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 20
Trigger: An ally within 20 squares of you is reduced to 0 hit points or fewer by an attack
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: You teleport the target to a square adjacent to you. The target regains hit points equal to 1 + his or her bloodied value and can make a basic attack as a free action.

Perfect Guardian

Blessed by your destiny as a great protector, your natural form shifts to accommodate the power of the elder spirits.

Prerequisite: 21st level, warden

Force fills the winds that tear your clothes. Strength wells up from the stones beneath your feet. Having drawn this power into your being, you bend it to serve your will. Nature's might buttresses your attacks. Primeval resilience safeguards you and your companions. Your reshaped flesh demonstrates your true mastery over primal power. Long practice with your evocations allows you to fully apprehend nature's magic. You blend the gifts of your various guardian forms, until you start to acquire a resemblance to the Primal Beast of which those forms are all aspects.

The ease with which you harness primal power comes partly from your experience with nature's bounty, but also because the spirits entrust you with even greater energy. They willingly lend you their wisdom and might each time you draw from their abundant well. These spirits chose you to be their champion, and as such, they create new pathways for you to seize their strength and bind it to your body in incredible ways. This boon ensures that no despoiler of the world can stand against your wrath.

Immortality

The primal spirits entrust their guardian with fabulous power in exchange for eternal vigilance against nature's many foes.

Eternal Defender: The flood of power intensifies with each victory on the road toward fulfilling your Destiny Quest. As you near your quest's end, nature's hold on you manifests even when you are not wielding your power. Your natural appearance becomes more bestial and predatory, something like an echo of the Primal Beast even when you are not in a guardian form.

When you seize your destiny, your instincts guide you to the fate you have earned. You travel the world until you come upon an ancient stone circle. The menhirs come to life, welcoming you as a brother or a sister and inviting you to stand vigil with them over the world. You take your place alongside these mighty wardens. You feel your skin hardening and your heartbeat slowing as you assume the final transformation. But your spirit roars, leaping into the sky to hunt down the enemies of the primal way with the aid of the rest of the elder spirits. Future generations won't just know your name—they will call on you as their ally and guardian.

Perfect Guardian Features

Beast Strike (21st level): Once per round, when you hit a target with a melee attack, you knock that target prone. If the target is already prone, the attack instead deals 2d8 extra damage, or 2d10 extra damage if the target is marked by you.

Eyes of the Sentinel (24th level): You can see invisible creatures within 5 squares of you, and you gain a +5 bonus to Perception checks to notice hidden creatures.

Perfect Mark (30th level): As the first action of each of your turns, you can use a free action to mark each enemy adjacent to you until the start of your next turn. If you supersede this mark with another one on an enemy, that enemy takes a –5 penalty to attack rolls for any attack that doesn't include you as a target, instead of a –2 penalty, until the second mark ends.

Perfect Guardian Power

Guardian's Pounce Perfect Guardian Utility 26

You leap forward to absorb an attack meant for your friend.

Encounter ✦ Primal
Immediate Interrupt Personal
Trigger: A melee or a ranged attack hits an ally within 5 squares of you
Effect: You shift a number of squares equal to twice your speed to a square adjacent to the creature that made the triggering attack. The attack hits you instead, and you mark the creature that made it.

Reincarnate Champion

You remember the exploits of your earlier incarnations—each a champion of the spirit way. It's now time to teach the world a new heroic story.

Prerequisite: 21st level, any primal class

You know that some primal souls leave the world behind to join the mystery after death. Other transcendent heroes join the spirits, flowing through the world to give it life and preserve its natural order. Still other primal champions reincarnate into new bodies, returning as new exemplars of nature.

You long suspected that you were one of the spirits who regularly return to the world in new bodies, though you could not be certain until the day you attained epic power. As your epic destiny opened before you, so did the memories of your past lives, a long chain of heroes, leaders, humble souls, and conquerors who lived in harmony with the spirits.

You are a champion of the spirit way, a defender of the world's primal cycles. In this life, you finally have the chance to put the knowledge and power of all your incarnations together.

Immortality

One of the great elder spirits, Blood Cousin, had dozens of lives as a champion of the spirit way, teaching people across the world initiation rites so that tribes could adopt members of any race who proved worthy. You revere Blood Cousin for this work in strengthening primal tribes. You will do the same, but in a different a manner.

A New Story: Generations from now, people will tell stories about you. You harnessed dozens of past lives as a primal champion as you accomplished mighty heroic deeds. Tales of your exploits will inspire people on the spirit way as they battle evil deities and demon princes. The best part of these stories is that somewhere, someone hearing them will be touched by your spirit and will create a new piece of the primal story.

Reincarnate Champion Features

Past Spirit (21st level): Choose a race other than your own. You are considered a member of that race for the purpose of meeting feat prerequisites. If that race has any racial encounter powers, you gain one of your choice.

At 24th level, you choose a second race and gain the same benefits with it.

Many Perspectives (21st level): You gain a +2 bonus to Intelligence-, Wisdom-, and Charisma-based skill checks and ability checks.

Epic Vitality (24th level): An ability score of your choice increases by 2.

The Champion Returned (30th level): You gain access to every racial encounter power. To use a racial encounter power that you don't have, you expend the use of one of your racial encounter powers.

Reincarnate Champion Power

Swift Reincarnation — Reincarnate Champion Utility 26

In an instant, you move from death to new life in a different form, hastening the natural cycle.

Daily ✦ Healing, Primal
Immediate Interrupt Personal
Trigger: You drop to 0 hit points or fewer

Effect: You regain hit points equal to your bloodied value. Choose a race other than your own. You appear as a member of that race.

If the race is not one of your Past Spirit races, you gain one of that race's racial encounter powers, if any, until the end of your next extended rest.

If the race is one of your Past Spirit races, you can choose to replace your current race with that race at the end of your next extended rest, but only if your current race is not a prerequisite for any of your attributes, such as feats. If you do so, your previous race becomes one of your Past Spirit races.

CHRIS SEAMAN

Sovereign Beast

You have focused the savagery of the Primal Beast through your nobility of spirit to become a monarch among the beasts of the wild.

Prerequisite: 21st level, druid, wild shape power

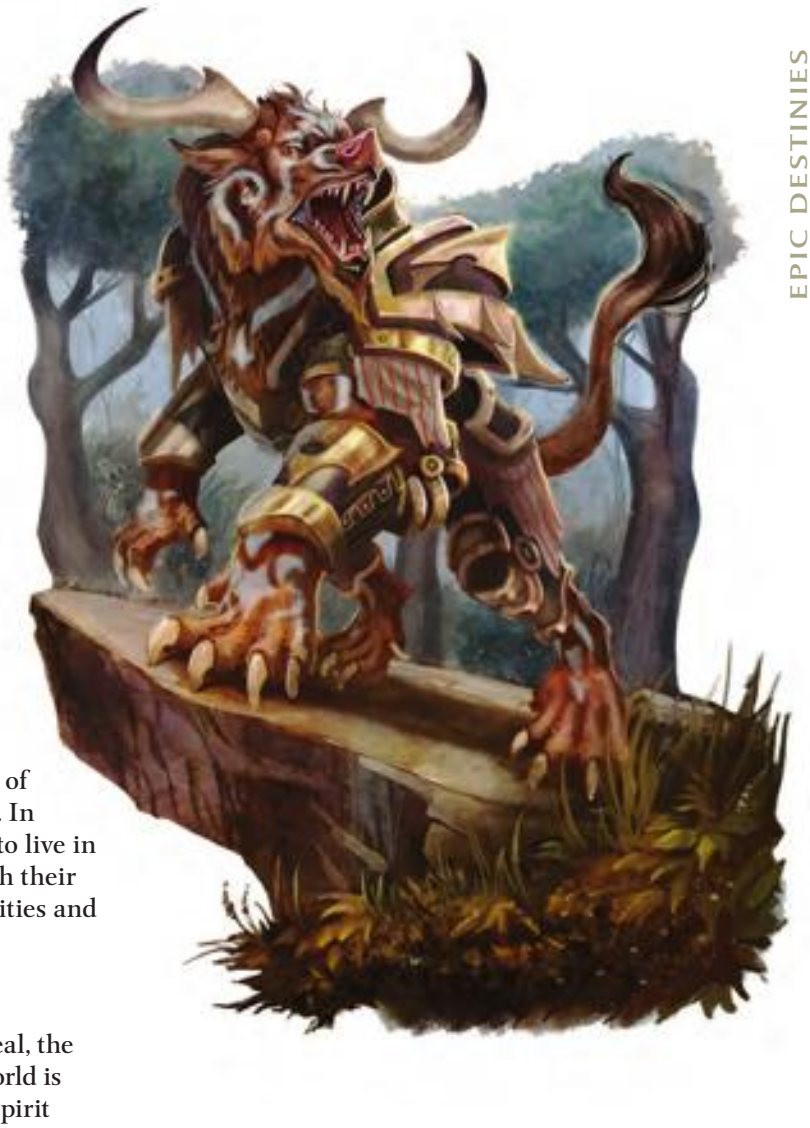
You have channeled the ferocity of the Primal Beast through your limbs countless times, adopting a form that echoes the great spirit, the archetype of all beasts. Yet you are not a beast; you are more than just a reflection of the Primal Beast's manifold nature. By bringing its savage nature into balance with your humanoid spirit, you have become a synthesis that is more than either part. You are the Sovereign Beast, the quintessence of all that is noble and true in nature.

You are striking out on a path that none have pre-viously walked to its conclusion, staking out a middle path between the way of beasts and the ways of the humanoid races. In you is incarnate the potential for the races to live in closer harmony with the world, in tune with their instincts but still awake to their finest qualities and highest ideals.



RALPH BEISNER

Immortality

For now, you are an incarnation of a new ideal, the first of your kind. When your time in the world is fulfilled, though, you will become an elder spirit in your own right, a pattern that future druids will attempt to follow.

A New Elder Spirit: Your work in the world complete, you transcend your physical form and become a primal spirit. No longer simply in the world, you are now of it, part of the circle of spirits that protects and preserves it. In your spirit form, you roam free, sometimes wearing the shape of a noble beast, sometimes appearing as a humanoid, but always holding the twin aspects of your nature in perfect and everlasting balance.

Sovereign Beast Features

Magnificent Beast (21st level): When you use wild shape to change from your humanoid form to beast form, you can change your size to Large. While you are in a Large beast form, you gain a +2 bonus to damage rolls and speed.

Sovereign's Charge (24th level): Once per encounter when you charge while in beast form, you can use one of your beast form encounter attack powers in place of a melee basic attack. If the attack hits, the target is also knocked prone.

Sovereign's Inheritance (30th level): When you reduce a nonminion enemy to 0 hit points with a beast form attack power, you can choose either to spend a healing surge or to regain the use of an encounter attack power that you have used during this encounter.

Sovereign Beast Power

Resplendent Beast Sovereign Beast Utility 26

Your sudden transformation casts your enemies aside and fills them with terror at what you have become.

At-Will ✦ Fear, Primal
Free Action Close burst 1
Trigger: You use wild shape to change into beast form and increase your size to Large
Target: Each creature in burst
Effect: You push each target 1 square. In addition, enemies that have line of sight to you grant combat advantage to you and take a –2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

World Tree Guardian

The wise and powerful World Tree finds a kindred spirit in you. In your pledge to defend that ancient spirit from harm, the wider world falls under your protection.

Prerequisite: 21st level, any primal class

You have seen the World Tree, the most ancient primal spirit of the forest. Legends say that the roots of the World Tree are the roots of the world itself and that any harm done to this ancient entity shakes the earth and cracks the sky. You chose to defend the World Tree, and in doing so, you were able to speak to it and gain its favor. You can now call on its power, granting you the strength and resilience of nature itself. The World Tree is intertwined with the world so that any harm to one hurts the other—an outcome you are sworn to prevent.

Immortality

The World Tree has existed since the beginning of time. If you have your way, it will live longer still.

The Tree's Counterpart: You become the World Tree's counterpart among the races of the world—a primal symbol of life and a worldly representative among the great spirits of nature. Accepted into the company of the most powerful and ancient primal spirits, you abandon your mortal form to become a being of pure primal essence.

You are no longer as active as you once were in shaping the fate of the world; the actions that led to your immortality have kept the world safe for some time. Instead, you sleep soundly in verdant groves or walk the wider world invisible to the eyes of mortals. However, when the greatest dangers threaten the world, you heed the summons to convene with other great spirits to rally against those perils.

CHRIS SEAMAN

World Tree Guardian Features

Bark of the World Tree (21st level): Whenever an enemy hits you, you can use an immediate reaction to gain resistance to all damage equal to 5 + your Constitution modifier. This resistance lasts until the start of your next turn.

Boon of the World Tree (24th level): Once per day, you can die in place of an ally. The moment an ally dies, you can choose to die instead, and that ally gains hit points equal to his or her bloodied value. At the end of your next turn, you return to life with hit points equal to your healing surge value. Until the end of the encounter, you gain regeneration 10 while you are bloodied.

World Tree's Growth (30th level): You have regeneration equal to the number of healing surges you have remaining.

World Tree Guardian Power

Boughs of the World Tree — World Tree Guardian Utility 26

Gnarled branches burst from the battlefield, granting benefits to your allies and hindering your foes with twisting vines.

Standard Action Close burst 20

Effect: You conjure boughs of the World Tree in five unoccupied squares in the burst that aren't adjacent to one another. The boughs last until the end of your next turn. The boughs are solid obstacles, and each square adjacent to them is difficult terrain for your enemies.

The boughs can be attacked. Each has resist 20 to all damage, and a bough is destroyed if it takes any damage.

When you use this power, choose one of the following benefits:

- ✦ Your allies gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls while adjacent to a bough.
- ✦ Your allies gain a +1 bonus to all defenses while adjacent to a bough.
- ✦ Any ally who begins his or her turn adjacent to a bough gains temporary hit points equal to your Strength or Wisdom modifier.

Sustain Minor: The boughs persist.

NEW RITUALS

As a primal character, you have access to the same wide range of rituals available to any other ritual caster. The new rituals here expand the options available to you and all other ritual casters, with an emphasis on rituals that invoke the power of primal spirits.

See Chapter 10 of the Player's Handbook for instructions on how to use a ritual in the D&D game.

RITUALS BY LEVEL

| Lvl | Ritual | Key Skill |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | Dowsing Rod | Nature |
| 1 | Portend Weather | Nature |
| 1 | Traveler's Camouflage | Nature |
| 5 | Starshine | Nature |
| 10 | Eagles' Flight | Nature |
| 10 | Water's Gift | Nature |
| 14 | Primal Prison | Nature |
| 19 | Primal Grove | Nature |

Dowsing Rod

You find a gnarled branch, and it turns as you hold it, pointing the way to a natural feature.

Level: 1
Category: Divination
Time: 1 minute
Duration: 12 hours or until discharged
Component Cost: 10 gp
Market Price: 50 gp
Key Skill: Nature (no check)

You transform a stick or other natural object into a dowsing rod. When you do so, name a natural feature of the environment, such as mountains, rivers, forests, or caves. The dowsing rod points the way to the nearest place that fits the description. You can't name a specific place, such as Mount Baneflame, and the rod can't find magically concealed locations. When you reach the destination, the ritual is discharged.

Eagles' Flight

Great eagle spirits thunder through the sky, carrying you and your allies to a far-off location.

Level: 10
Category: Exploration
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: 12 hours
Component Cost: 400 gp
Market Price: 1,000 gp
Key Skill: Nature

Up to eight giant eagle spirits appear to carry you and your allies. Each eagle can carry one Medium creature. The eagles have a fly speed and an overland flight speed determined by your Nature check.

| Nature Check Result | Speed | Overland Flight |
|---|---|---|
| 24 or lower | 8 | 10 |
| 25-29 | 10 | 15 |
| 30-39 | 12 | 20 |
| 40 or higher | 15 | 30 |

Creatures take a -4 penalty to attack rolls and defenses while carried by the eagles.

The eagles can't attack or affect other creatures in any way. The eagles' defenses are equal to yours, and if an eagle is hit by an attack, it descends to a solid surface to drop off the creature it carries, then flies away. Eagles who have flown away during combat can be called back as a standard action outside combat.

Portend Weather

You see what the weather will be in the near future.

Level: 1
Category: Divination
Time: 5 minutes
Duration: Instantaneous
Component Cost: 10 gp
Market Price: 50 gp
Key Skill: Nature (no check)

You determine what the weather will be like for the next 24 hours within a 50-mile radius of you. You and any allies present for the ritual gain a +5 bonus to Endurance checks to endure extreme weather you have foreseen.

Primal Grove

You create a hidden grove, concealed by primal spirits, which grows lush and peaceful and awaits your return.

Level: 19
Category: Travel
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Permanent (special)
Component Cost: 12,000 gp to create a grove and entrance; 4,000 gp to create an entrance
Market Price: 21,000 gp
Key Skill: Nature

A primal grove is a haven that is magically hidden by primal spirits. You use this ritual either to create a grove and an entrance to it or to create an entrance to a grove that you or someone else created.

Creating a Grove: When you create a grove, it appears in a hidden location in the world or the Feywild, and you determine its password. You also create an entrance to it (see "Creating an Entrance" below).

A grove generates enough food and drink to sustain its occupants and has a moderate, unchanging climate. If you move objects into a grove, they remain there when you leave, but food and other resources created by the grove disappear when removed.

Your Nature check determines the grove's size in squares and how many creatures it can accommodate.

| Nature Check Result | Size | Capacity |
|---|---|---|
| 24 or lower | 5 × 5 | 25 Medium creatures |
| 25-34 | 7 × 7 | 50 Medium creatures |
| 35-44 | 10 × 10 | 100 Medium creatures |
| 45 or higher | 14 × 14 | 200 Medium creatures |

Creating an Entrance: A primal grove is inaccessible, except to those who know its password and pass through an entrance to it. You use this ritual to create an entrance to a primal grove, the password of which you must know.

When you create an entrance to a grove, the entrance appears in a square adjacent to you. If a creature that knows the grove's password enters that square, the creature can teleport to a square in the grove. Anyone inside the grove can exit it as part of a move action, teleporting either to an active entrance or to the most recent entrance if none are active.

Your Nature check determines the duration of the entrance. When you create a grove, you use a single check to create both the grove and an entrance to it. As a minor action, you can close an entrance you created.

| Nature Check Result | Entrance Duration |
|---|---|
| 24 or lower | 1 hour |
| 25-34 | 24 hours |
| 35-44 | 1 month |
| 45 or higher | 1 year |

Extraordinary magic might allow someone to enter a grove against the creator's will.

Primal Prison

Your foe is swallowed up by the land, to be entrapped and taunted by spirits.

Level: 14
Category: Binding
Time: 1 hour
Duration: Permanent (special)
Component Cost: 1,600 gp
Market Price: 4,200 gp
Key Skill: Nature

You imprison an adjacent creature in a tree, a boulder, or another solid natural object. The subject must be helpless or willing, and the object you imprison it inside must be larger than it. Your Nature check determines the maximum level of the subject.

| Nature Check Result | Maximum Level |
|---|---|
| 14 or lower | Your level - 5 |
| 15-24 | Your level |
| 25 or higher | Your level + 2 |

The subject remains imprisoned until you choose to discharge the ritual or until you die. In addition, you must take a personal effect from the subject and hide it or carry it with you. If the personal effect is brought to the subject's location, the subject can be released.

You choose whether the subject ages while imprisoned, and the subject is unaware of its surroundings. Destroying the imprisoning object releases the subject, who appears in the object's space, bloodied and unconscious. You know if the object is destroyed, regardless of your distance from it.

The imprisoning object you takes on a faint resemblance to the subject. Knots in the shape of the subject's face might form on a tree, or a stone might take on coloration faintly depicting the subject's silhouette.

Starshine

The blue glow from your fey lamps might not be bright, but it reveals those who stalk in shadows.

Level: 5
Category: Warding
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: 8 hours
Component Cost: 40 gp
Market Price: 250 gp
Key Skill: Nature

When you complete the ritual, you create motes of blue light within 10 squares of you. Each mote hovers in a square of your choice and sheds dim light in a 2-square radius. The motes are intangible and cannot be interacted with. While within the radius of a mote's light, a creature takes a -5 penalty to Stealth checks.

Your Nature check determines the number of motes you create.

| Nature Check Result | Motes Created |
|---|---|
| 19 or lower | One |
| 20-29 | Three |
| 30-39 | Six |
| 40 or higher | Nine |

Traveler's Camouflage

You and your allies take on the textures and colors of the world around you.

Level: 1
Category: Deception
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: 10 hours
Component Cost: 10 gp
Market Price: 50 gp
Key Skill: Nature

You cloak yourself and any allies present for the ritual in a camouflaging shroud. The subjects of this ritual gain a bonus to Stealth checks while traveling, and other creatures take a penalty when using Perception to find your tracks.

Your Nature check determines the bonus you and your allies gain and the penalty others take.

| Nature Check Result | Bonus to Stealth | Penalty to Find Tracks |
|---|---|---|
| 19 or lower | +2 | -2 |
| 20-29 | +5 | -5 |
| 30 or higher | +10 | -10 |

This camouflage protects you and your allies as you travel, but not during battle. Any subject who rolls initiative or makes an attack roll loses the benefit of this ritual until the end of the encounter. If a subject is hidden when he or she makes an attack, that subject loses the bonus before making the attack roll, which could cause him or her to lose the benefit of being hidden for that attack.

Water's Gift

You and your allies take on the traits of aquatic creatures.

Level: 10
Category: Exploration
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Special
Component Cost: 400 gp
Market Price: 1,000 gp
Key Skill: Nature

You and up to seven other creatures present for the ritual take on certain aquatic abilities: the ability to breathe water as easily as air, to speak underwater normally, and to fight underwater without penalty. Each subject also gains a +5 power bonus to Athletics checks to swim.

Your Nature check result determines the duration of the effect.

| Nature Check Result | Duration |
|---|---|
| 14 or lower | 3 hours |
| 15-24 | 6 hours |
| 25 or higher | 12 hours |

MICHAEL KOMARCK

Introduction

The years die, burned to nothing by time, darkening my memory with their passing—like soot that builds upon a hearth beam. I am Mordenkainen, and although I do not look it, I am old. I have outlived rivals, enemies, and friends. I have lived long enough to see rivals become friends and friends become enemies—and to see enemies returned to the fold of friendship. But for a few dust-mad liches dreaming in their lonely tombs, my friends and I represent the last of the old guard. Who born in the last forty years can measure of themselves an ounce of the worth of Otiluke, Bigby, Tenser, or Robilar—or even Rary or Evard?

Bah! What does it matter? I grow self-pitying as I approach the end of a century. Surely the young fools who test the wards upon my vaults are no younger or more foolish than my companions and I were when we delved into the dungeons of Castle Greyhawk or Maure Castle. They all have their reasons, just as we did long ago.

And what are those reasons? What draws adventurers today to plumb the death-trap depths of the earth and brave the terrors of curse-bound ruins? What called us to do the same in the past—and drives me still?

It all boils down to power: the wealth that can buy it, and the magic that can wrest it from the ether.

Once I sought power for its own sake. Now I seek it to keep it from others. I do not wish to rule the world—only my small part of it. Yet many are the grasping hands of those who would claim control. Some use evil means toward such ends, while others pursue a more virtuous path, but regardless of the manner of its acquisition, power wielded to dictate over all is power used to disastrous effect. Friends will be lost, great works will be cast to ruin, and wars will be fought, but none shall gain the upper hand over all as long as I and the Circle of Eight remain.

We balance the scales.

In some cases, that means a feather's touch: a word or two in the right ear, an heir spirited away from assassins, or a storm to cast a ship off course—simple feats accomplished with a trifling of magic. At other times, circumstances dictate that our hand falls more heavily. Fortunate for us and the world that those times are few.

Too often, our actions hinge upon who possesses some item of power. Those whom we oppose might have dug up some relic of antiquity or simply taken one such from unwitting treasure hunters. To combat that imbalance, we arrange it so that those hunters or other adventurers win their way to the items necessary to destroy the relic. We set events into motion so that a magic shield finds its way onto the arm of a certain warrior. Our enemies give that warrior a sword that corrupts him into a monster for their cause.

Of course, not all magic items represent pieces on the chessboard. Steeped in the power of magic as we of the Circle are, it can be easy to forget that fact.

When you watch a feather drift to the surface of the water and it expands into a boat before your eyes, how can you do anything but marvel? And no matter how many times you pull forth a swatch of cloth and unfold it to reveal its hidden contents, the wonder of that moment never diminishes.

Even those items that present a more obvious threat can be joyful things. The cloak that renders you unseen can be used to great effect by those with ambition, or for thrills by those who are simply curious or mischievous. The sword forged by angels might cut a swath through the orcs, gnolls, and ogres of the world, or it might simply protect a farmer's sheep from wolves.

After all, most magic items—even those made with evil intent—are not themselves evil. They do not of themselves seek dominion over the world. That is a trait particular to their wielders.

Of course, what evil can be wrought by an item in the wrong hands depends much upon the item itself. That is why I seek to know ever more about the magic items of this world—and others.

It might surprise some that I write of other worlds. And no, I do not imply other planes, but other places—places filled with various lands and countries with inhabitants that see themselves as the most important and central to the universe, just as we do.

I care little for them, as I am from this world, this Oerth. Just as these other worlds have similar magic items, I'm sure there are some among them who serve as I and the Circle of Eight do. Let them sort out their own problems; we have enough of our own.

I have recorded the stories for the items I encountered from these other worlds so that they can be known for what they are should they find their way into our own. Often their properties are shockingly similar to items that can be discovered all over Oerth, so the idea of items (and perhaps other travelers like myself) passing between worlds might not be so far-fetched.

By cataloguing what exists—and what is rumored to exist—I hope to be forewarned of the danger of any item when it falls into the wrong hands. Soon I will share this knowledge—if not with the world, then with the Circle of Eight. Surely someone besides myself should be armed with this knowledge.

I suppose, if you are reading this, I have already chosen to share it. In that case, I hope you take what you learn here and put it to sensible use. I would not have this book used as some plunderer's to-do list! Instead, tread lightly, act wisely, be wary, and be well.

The Promises of Magic

The crystal sphere glowing upon its pedestal, the jewel-encrusted sword jutting from a heap of gold, the embossed breastplate glittering in the depths of a murky pool, the gloves that slip on like a second skin, the dusty tome laden with inscribed spells, the bottle that holds a swirling blue liquid—these items promise magic, and magic promises power. It might be the power to dominate others, but it might also be the power to do something extraordinary such as walking through a wall, seeing through stone, or taking flight. All kinds of magic await you in the pages of this book. How you use it is up to you.

Making Magic Items Magical

Mordenkainen's Magnificent Emporium supplements your Dungeons & Dragons game in a new way. Of course, it presents items galore of all types, but this tome also puts a lot of emphasis on the fun elements of an item's history, appearance, or folklore.

The goal of this treatment is to make magic items more magical. Some players see magic items as rules elements to acquire rather than objects of wonder. That's fine if that's how you want to play, but if you're looking for more engaging items and you want to bring a sense of excitement back to their acquisition, Mordenkainen's Magnificent Emporium can help.

Many of the items in this book were created by writing their descriptions and story elements first. The rules for how the items work were developed after that. That's the reverse of how magic items have been typically designed.

SELLING MAGIC ITEMS

Each of the magic items in this book has a rarity, either common, uncommon, or rare, that affects how much a seller can expect to receive for it.

Uncommon and rare items, made during an earlier age through methods no longer understood, are so valuable that they cannot normally be purchased—they can be gained only as treasure. Anyone who chooses to sell such an item, assuming a buyer can be found, can expect to receive the full given sale price for a rare item, and 50 percent of the sale price for an uncommon item.

The knowledge of crafting common items still remains in the world, however, and such items can be bought and sold more easily (though they are by no means available on every street corner). Adventurers who want to sell common magic items can expect to receive 20 percent of their sale price, since the demand for such items is relatively low.

This change in how an item is designed puts the inspiring elements about an item front and center instead of its game rule information. Rules elements can be made unique and fun, but without good story elements to support them, they tend to be a little dry. Hopefully, you'll take inspiration from what you find in this book to make your game more fun.

How to Use This Book

For the Dungeon Master: You can simply use this book as another resource to stock treasure troves, but there are other ways Mordenkainen's Magnificent Emporium can enhance your game. Look at the stories about these magic items as an additional resource for you. An Arcana check can tell the players the history of an item, but that aspect of an item can become much more engaging by incorporating it into the history of your world or its current events.

For instance, the ruling line of a kingdom might consider a certain item a part of its regalia of rulership. Once it goes missing, the heroes could become embroiled in the politics of the realm and the history of the item as they seek whomever stole it.

A wizard might discover the means to create some useful item whose power was thought lost to the ages. The characters might seek out this wizard in order to obtain the item, only to discover that many others have had the same idea.

For Players: Common magic items that a character might find for sale are presented throughout this book, and you can use Mordenkainen's Magnificent Emporium as a resource for character building. If you're inclined, you can put together a short wish list of rare and uncommon items you'd like your character to find.

Perhaps some item that was a family heirloom for generations has been lost or stolen. Maybe a relative whom your character admires was an adventurer and was lost with the item in some famous dungeon. The item could have been passed down to a rival branch of your family or clan.

You might face the destiny of being saddled with a cursed item when you reach a certain age. Maybe your family rid itself of a curse that had long plagued it, but a seer has predicted its return to your hands.

Alternatively, your character might be fated to claim some great weapon and use it to defeat an equally great evil. Or you could seek an item to prove your claim to a birthright.

Perhaps you belong to a family or a cult dedicated to the eradication of the works of some spellcaster, and you seek several items in order to destroy them before they can be used for evil. The possibilities are limited only by your imagination.

Armor

As a puissant fighting man, Robilar of course wore armor of all sorts throughout his career, and I owe much of my practical knowledge of the topic to watching him in battle and due to a small amount of his instruction. Of course, I've scoured libraries for information about magical armor, studied the many suits I've discovered in treasure troves or peeled off the smoking remains of my foes, and naturally I have created many such items as part of my own aspirations for protecting myself and those in my employ.

I find that those who wield swords place a great deal of importance on shields. It's a natural blindness of most melee combatants to emphasize protecting themselves against the kinds of attacks they make with their own weapons. When you see what the edge of a sword does to the bared flesh of an enemy, you cannot help but think of your own body cut and your own blood shed. A suit of shining mail seems a great boon, and if it can be enchanted to ward off arrows or deflect a giant's hammer, so much the better.

I find such thinking is often shortsighted. Does lightning glance away from that breastplate? How will chain links protect you from seeping acid? When does fire not burn skin, and what is leather if not skin? Is it not better to be a swift-stinging wasp or a nigh-invisible gnat than an armored beetle waddling underfoot?

Of course, at times you must play anvil to the hammer's blow. Some threats cannot be avoided. Someone must meet the enemy face on and hurl flesh at foe. And at these times—when steel must stop a dragon's charge—I am grateful to my shortsighted allies for their blind faith in the strength of armor.

Their deaths give me time to complete my spells.

I should perhaps not have written that last sentence, but as a guide to the magic items of this world and others, I think truth should play the paramount role. And the truth is that we wizards cannot always rely upon spells alone. If you spend your time summoning beasts, raising protective fields of force, and warding yourself against unearthly energies, when do you have time to assault your enemy? An armored warrior between you and your target proves both a distraction for your foe and a natural bulwark. And that ally will be more confident in his role (and will last longer) if girded in enchanted armor.

New Armor and Shields

Many kinds of armor and shields are designed to provide a barrier against harm and little else. For most adventurers, protection from a troll's club or a drow's poisoned blade is all that's needed. However, some rarer types of armor provide added benefits and features. This book introduces new, exotic armors that have more to offer than the more common options.

Although these new kinds of armor and shields are useful, they demand specialized training to utilize them. The feats presented on page 11 allow characters to use these items without restriction.

Reading the Armor and Shields Table

An entry on the Armor and Shields table contains the following information.

Armor/Shield: The armor or shield's name.

Armor Bonus: The armor bonus to AC that a creature gains while wearing the armor.

Shield Bonus: The shield bonus to AC and Reflex that a creature gains while using the shield.

Check: The penalty to Strength-, Dexterity-, and Constitution-based skill checks that a creature takes while wearing the armor or using the shield. This penalty is called an armor check penalty. It does not apply to ability checks (such as a Strength check to break down a door or a Dexterity check to determine initiative in combat).

Speed: The penalty to speed that a creature takes while wearing the armor or using the shield.

Price: The item's cost in gold pieces.

Weight: The armor or shield's weight.

Properties: An item's properties. See below for new definitions.

Base Type: A suit of armor or a shield counts as the indicated type for the purpose of determining what magical properties it can gain.

Armor and Shield Properties

Barbed: A suit of barbed armor or a barbed shield is covered with spikes and hooks designed to injure creatures foolish enough to grab at it.

While you wear barbed armor or wield a barbed shield, a creature takes damage equal to 2 + one-half your level when you escape that creature's grab on your turn or when that creature escapes your grab. If you wear barbed armor and carry a barbed shield at the same time, the creature takes this damage only once.

Durable: A suit of durable armor gives added protection by absorbing some of the force from attacks. However, in doing so, the armor takes damage.

The first time you take damage during an encounter, reduce that damage by an amount equal to the armor's durability rating (for instance, 2 for ring mail). The armor then loses this property until you repair it during a short rest or an extended rest.

Durable armor provides greater damage absorption when it is enchanted. Add the enhancement bonus of the armor to the durability rating of light armor, and add twice the enhancement bonus to the durability rating of heavy armor.

Tough: Tough armor is reinforced with additional plates designed to protect vulnerable areas.

The first time in each encounter a critical hit is scored against your AC while you're wearing tough armor, the critical hit becomes a normal hit.

Banded mail

Some warriors care more about what their armor looks like than the protection it offers. Others wear mismatched motleys of plates and leather like some sort of badge of honor. Personally, if you're relying on bits of leather and metal for fashion or protection, I think you're in trouble.

Armor and Shield Descriptions

Banded Mail: Banded mail consists of a suit of chainmail reinforced with layers of metal plates arranged in strips along the suit's midsection. Banded mail offers the same level of protection as chainmail while proving lighter and more flexible. A warrior in banded mail moves as quickly as one in leather armor.

Barbed Shield: Although a shield is usually a defensive item, a barbed shield turns the tables on attackers because of the long spikes and blades attached to it. While too awkward to use as a weapon, a barbed shield provides added protection against enemies that attempt to grab you, because the spikes and barbs built into it cut into them.

Barbed shield

Full Plate: Though the dwarves are loath to admit it, human smiths crafted the first suits of full plate for the use of mounted knights. Of course, the dwarves are quick to add, they did perfect those initial, flawed designs. Among all the kinds of heavy armor, full plate offers unmatched protection and flexibility.

Ring Mail: This flexible but sturdy armor consists of a typical suit of leather armor with a series of metal rings sewn onto its surface. The rings enhance the armor's sturdiness, improving its protective qualities while still offering the maneuverability of lightweight armor.

Spiked Plate: A dwarven innovation, spiked plate is a suit of plate mail studded with sharp, metal spikes. The dwarves developed this armor to deal with subterranean beasts such as hook horrors and umber hulks that grasp and crush their prey.

Splint Mail: First developed by the dwarves, splint mail consists of vertical strips of metal bound to a thick layer of leather and chainmail. Because it is so heavy and ponderous, few other than dwarves wear it in battle. While it lacks the protective elements of plate, it is scale armor's equal. More important, its rigid construction allows it to absorb some portion of an enemy's blows.

Studded Leather: Studded leather is leather armor reinforced with metal studs. It provides a middle ground between hide armor and ring mail. It is more flexible than either, while its reinforced construction gives it a slight edge over hide.

Magic Armor Bonuses

Of course, magic armor provides an armor bonus to AC just as nonmagical armor does. But magic armor works a little differently, because its armor bonus often increases at higher levels rather than remaining a static value. As a set of armor receives more powerful magical enchantments, the armor improves due to a combination of rare materials and advanced techniques needed to allow it to hold the more powerful enchantments.

Consult the tables here to find out the total bonus to AC for a suit of armor based on its enhancement bonus and its armor bonus.

I encountered a certain thief wearing armor of escape. He proved quite troublesome when placed in both conventional and magical restraints. Once I determined that the armor was enchanted, I attempted to remove it. Of course, I failed—at least initially. Oddly, I found the application of sovereign glue to be the key to separating the thief from his protection. I simply adhered the suit to a boulder and pushed him down a well. I suppose he could thank the properties of the armor for his swift egress from the suit and return to the surface. That's a lesson about magic all would do well to mark: Beware overconfidence in an enchantment's intent, and be ready to use it in ways not intended.

Armor Training Feats

With new gear come new techniques and tactics for using it. The following feats are designed to interact with the armor and shields introduced in this book. All these feats are in the armor training category.

Armor Proficiency: Banded Mail

Prerequisite: Proficiency with chainmail
Benefit: You gain proficiency with banded mail.

Armor Proficiency: Full Plate

Prerequisite: Proficiency with plate armor
Benefit: You gain proficiency with full plate.

Armor Proficiency: Ring Mail

Prerequisite: Proficiency with hide armor or chainmail
Benefit: You gain proficiency with ring mail.

Armor Proficiency: Spiked Plate

Prerequisite: Proficiency with plate armor
Benefit: You gain proficiency with spiked plate.

Armor Proficiency: Splint Mail

Prerequisite: Proficiency with scale armor
Benefit: You gain proficiency with splint mail.

Armor Proficiency: Studded Leather

Prerequisite: Proficiency with hide armor
Benefit: You gain proficiency with studded leather armor.

Shield Proficiency: Barbed Shield

Prerequisite: Proficiency with heavy shields
Benefit: You gain proficiency with barbed shields.

Magic Armor

Whether crafted from metals carved from astral domains, forged in the first embers stoked by Moradin, or formed from the scales of a sea creature, magic armor provides unmatched protection.

Some suits of armor come with histories, rumors, and stories. A suit of magic plate recovered from an ancient tomb might have once belonged to a great emperor. Alternatively, the leather armor taken from a famous outlaw might be a red flag to any of that outlaw's allies and friends, making whoever wears it a prime target for assassination.

Armor of Dogged Grit

It has been suggested that a suit of armor of this sort—which is invariably dented, scarred, and worn, not to mention mismatched after decades of having demolished greaves, gauntlets, and buckles swapped in and out—gains its power by absorbing the endurance of those who have worn it over the ages. Such assertions are untrue but impossible to squelch; the truth is that the enchantments put on these suits can be imbued only in armor that has been well used and even abused.

An adventurer who wears armor of dogged grit is able to keep fighting through nearly any battle, no matter how many of the enemy's blows he or she must endure. The armor appears little better than a run-of-the-mill version of its kind at turning blows, but the one wearing it can fight on, even after suffering grievous harm, until the battle is won.

Armor of Dogged Grit — Level 7+ Uncommon

While in this armor, you continue to fight on with grim determination, even though you absorb blows that would fell most combatants.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 7 | +2 | 2,600 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp |
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 13,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |
| Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp | | | |

Armor: Chain, scale, or plate
Enhancement Bonus: AC

Property

Whenever you take 20 or more damage from an attack, you gain 5 temporary hit points at the end of the current turn.

Level 12 or 17: Whenever you take 30 or more damage from an attack, you gain 10 temporary hit points at the end of the current turn.

Level 22 or 27: Whenever you take 40 or more damage from an attack, you gain 15 temporary hit points at the end of the current turn.

Armor of Escape

No matter what shackles or bindings are used on the wearer of this armor, they are less effective at holding their prey. The obvious way to circumvent this armor—forcibly removing it—is impossible without the wearer's consent (or death).

Stories are still told in Hammerfast's taverns about one famous rogue from recent memory who escaped from the trade guild's dungeon thanks to her armor of escape. After being caught infiltrating the guild's treasury, she bluffed the guards into thinking that she was a spy sent by Mayor Goldspinner to test the treasury's defenses. Before they tried to remove her armor and gear, she convinced the guards to check her story with their captain. By the time they returned, now knowing her lie for what it was, she had made her exit.

Armor of Escape — Level 2+ Common

Thanks to this armor, you shrug off shackles and bindings as easily as you would remove a pair of breeches.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 2 | +1 | 520 gp | Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp |
| Lvl 7 | +2 | 2,600 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp |
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 13,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |

Armor: Any
Enhancement Bonus: AC

Property

You gain an item bonus to escape attempts equal to 2 + the armor's enhancement bonus. In addition, this armor cannot be removed without your consent while you're living.

Armor of Scintillating Colors

This armor was created by an archmage indentured to an ancient king who sought to bedazzle even the gods with the splendor of his personage. It is said that the kingly armor the archmage created for his liege shone as brightly as the sun, and all who saw its brilliance were overcome by the wearer's majesty. The archmage assured his liege that the armor's magic would affect even those of immortal—perhaps even deific—power. However, the fact that neither the ancient monarch nor his armor of scintillating colors exists in any other stories suggests that either the enchanter's capabilities were not as great as he believed, or the archmage deliberately overstated the armor's power to rid himself of the megalomaniacal king. Whatever the case, a few powerful archmages have attempted to recreate this armor throughout the centuries, with limited success.

Armor of Scintillating Colors — Level 9+ Uncommon

The majesty imbued upon you by this vibrant armor compels enemies in your presence to stand down.

| Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp | | | |

Armor: Cloth, leather, hide, or chain
Enhancement Bonus: AC

Property

You gain an item bonus to Diplomacy checks and Intimidate checks equal to the armor's enhancement bonus.

☼ Utility Power (Aura, Charm) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: You activate an aura 2 that lasts until you attack, until the armor is removed, or until the end of the encounter. Whenever an enemy in the aura targets you with a melee or a ranged attack, it must first succeed on a saving throw to make the attack against you.

Blending armor

Armor of the Charging Wind

Warriors of the Feywild rely on speed and cunning as much as brute force. Where a dwarf warrior shrugs off attacks with his or her plate armor and hews an orc in half with an axe blow, an eladrin fighter dashes among his or her foes, dodging blows and making quick, sharp attacks at enemies' vulnerable areas. Armor of the charging wind embodies the latter fighting style by drawing on the power of elemental air and fey illusion magic to make its wearer as invisible as the rushing wind.

Armor of the Charging Wind — Level 5+ Uncommon

This elegantly crafted armor allows you to rush unseen across the battlefield, moving like the wind.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 5 | +1 | 1,000 gp | Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp |
| Lvl 10 | +2 | 5,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |

Armor: Cloth, leather, or hide
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Encounter (Free Action)
Trigger: You start a charge.
Effect: You are invisible until the end of the current turn.

Blending Armor

One ancient tale speaks of an entire army that moved over the land as if it were leaves blown by the wind, appearing suddenly upon the breeze. If the soldiers of such an army were all clad in blending armor, it is easy to understand the origin of that story. The colors and textures of blending armor continually blend and swirl to match its surroundings, erupting into a wild cacophony of movement when its wearer is in action and settling into a stable pattern when he or she is at rest. Whether worn by everyone in an army or by an individual, this armor makes it easy for its wearer to move stealthily and remain unnoticed.

Blending Armor — Level 9+ Uncommon

When you move, this armor erupts into swirling colors whose palette is taken from the surrounding environment, obscuring your exact position.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 9 | +2 | 4,200 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |
| Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp | | | |

Armor: Cloth, leather, or hide
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Property
You gain an item bonus to Stealth checks equal to the armor's enhancement bonus.
Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Encounter (Move Action)
Effect: You gain a +2 power bonus to all defenses until the end of this turn, and you shift up to 3 squares.

HOWARD LYON

Blessed Armor of Kord

It is said that blessed armor of Kord was worn by the deity himself during the war against the primordials. Over time, shards of that suit were scattered to the corners of the planes. A few of the armor's constituent pieces have been discovered in the millennia since those battles of antiquity—a greave, a vambrace, the gorget. Other parts of the original blessed armor of Kord no doubt still rest in ancient tombs and treasure hoards, waiting to be rediscovered. Suits of armor fashioned in recent times sometimes incorporate recovered scraps of the original. Such suits are also referred to as blessed armor of Kord, though they are but pale imitations of the original.

When any component of this suit is incorporated into a suit of ordinary armor, the whole becomes charged with the power of Kord, and its wearer can release discharges of lightning and thunder upon his or her enemies. It is thought that bringing several of the pieces of Kord's original armor together would increase these benefits exponentially, but this act has never been accomplished; some believe that the dissolution of the armor is Kord's will, and that to reunite the pieces would invite the god's disfavor.

Blessed Armor of Kord — Level 18+ Rare

Charged with divine power, this armor lets you unleash Kord's mighty wrath on enemies who dare attack you.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 18 | +4 | 85,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp | | | |

Armor: Chain, scale, or plate
Enhancement Bonus: AC

Attack Power (Lightning, Thunder) ✦ Encounter (Immediate Reaction)
Trigger: An enemy adjacent to you hits you.
Effect: Melee 1 (the enemy that hit you). The target takes 15 lightning and thunder damage.
Level 23 or 28: 20 lightning and thunder damage.

Attack Power (Lightning) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)
Effect: Close burst 2 (enemies in the burst). Each target takes 10 lightning damage.
Level 23 or 28: 15 lightning damage.

Doppelganger Armor

This strange armor has been mentioned in many tomes containing lore about enchanted items. Although every account describes each suit of doppelganger armor as having similar capabilities, no two of these accounts agree on the armor's physical characteristics.

Doppelganger armor's strange power is its ability to take on the protective properties of the armor being worn by its wearer's opponent. It can absorb and exhibit the qualities of plate mail, a shield, or even the magical protections placed on enchanted armor. All scholarly sources agree, however, that each wearer can claim the protective benefits of an opponent's defenses only while that opponent lives and fights, since the armor's magic draws upon the foe's skill and abilities as well as its defenses.

Doppelganger Armor — Level 5+ Uncommon

As you focus on a nearby enemy, this armor flares with magical energy, changing itself to match the defenses of your foe.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 5 | +1 | 1,000 gp | Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp |
| Lvl 10 | +2 | 5,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |

Armor: Any
Enhancement Bonus: AC

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)
Effect: Choose one enemy within 5 squares of you. You gain a +2 power bonus to the defense that is the enemy's highest until the end of the encounter or until that enemy drops below 1 hit point.

Despite its name, doppelganger armor does not give one the shape-shifting capability of those loathsome creatures, nor does it allow one to take on the appearance of an enemy's armor of clothes. Rather, it has the curious property of granting one protection while an enemy is alive. While useful when attempting to slay or negotiate with a single opponent, it seems a hard property to use when many foes dog you. Can you risk not swinging your sword at one in order to protect yourself from many?

Ebon Armor

The armor worn by the living dead slowly becomes imbued with shadow magic. When a death knight, a wight, or some similar horror is defeated, a skilled wizard can preserve the magic bound within the armor before it dissipates. Imbued with the power of the grave, ebon armor allows its wearer to siphon life energy from dying foes.

Ebon Armor — Level 3+ Uncommon

This black armor's breastplate is detailed with small skulls at its joints and breastplate, as if it had been crafted for an undead warrior.

| Lvl 3 | +1 | 680 gp | Lvl 18 | +4 | 85,000 gp |
| Lvl 8 | +2 | 3,400 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |

Armor: Chain, scale, or plate
Enhancement Bonus: AC

Properties
- ✦ You gain necrotic resistance equal to 3 + twice this armor's enhancement bonus.
- ✦ When an enemy adjacent to you dies, you gain temporary hit points equal to 3 + this armor's enhancement bonus.

Fishscale Armor

The original fishscale armor was made for the leading captain of a seagoing fleet belonging to a rich merchant house. The armor's singular capability is derived from the virtues of the fish scales from which it is painstakingly crafted. The armor's wearer can swim through water as freely and swiftly as a fish can.

Naturally, the original captain's counterparts from other merchant houses soon commissioned the construction of similar armor, and the pirates who opposed those fleets commissioned or stole their own copies, making this armor commonplace for a time—among the extremely wealthy, at least.

Fishscale Armor — Level 8+ Common

While wearing this armor, you slide through the water like a great fish.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 8 | +2 | 3,400 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |

Armor: Hide or scale
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Property
You gain a swim speed equal to 3 + the armor's enhancement bonus.

Gloaming Armor

Gloaming armor is designed to make its wearer invisible with a simple command. Some suits are also enchanted to dampen sounds the wearer makes, and at least one rumor tells of a suit of this armor that can project a silence effect out a short distance to those around it. Although some sages think it's possible to create gloaming armor out of sturdier materials, the only known examples of the enchantment have been placed on less noisy types of armor such as cloth, leather, and hide.

Gloaming Armor — Level 5+ Rare

You fade from view even as the noise of your footfalls recedes.

| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |

Armor: Cloth, leather, or hide
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Property
You gain an item bonus to Stealth checks equal to the armor's enhancement bonus.
Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)
Effect: You become invisible until you attack or until the end of the encounter. You can end this effect as a minor action.
Level 15, 20, 25, or 30: While you are invisible, allies within 5 squares of you gain an item bonus to Stealth checks equal to the armor's enhancement bonus.

Fishscale armor

Greater Armor of Eyes

Many believe that a paranoid crafter enchanted the first suit of greater armor of eyes. The armor's effect is simple: It allows the one wearing it to see in all directions at once. It is impossible to gain any advantage against someone wearing this armor by attacking him or her from behind or from an unnoticed position, and avoiding the wearer's notice is difficult. There are dangers to such protection, however, because it is thought that the paranoiac who enchanted the original armor died in a particularly poetic fashion from the gaze of a basilisk.

Greater Armor of Eyes — Level 14+ Rare

While you wear this armor, your visual senses expand in every direction, enabling you to avoid unseen attacks.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |

Armor: Any
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Properties
- ✦ You gain an item bonus to Perception checks equal to the armor's enhancement bonus.
- ✦ You cannot be blinded.
- ✦ You gain darkvision.
- ✦ Level 24 or 29: You don't grant combat advantage for being flanked.

BETH TROTT

Hide of Worms

The material that makes up this strange suit of armor seems normal at first glance. Closer inspection reveals that the armor's weave is crafted from thousands of inch-long worm castings, pressed and woven together. The nature of the maggot-sized worms used in this way has been lost to history, but they must not have been mundane creatures; else why use such minute elements to construct a suit of armor?

Someone wearing hide of worms armor can pass safely through soil and dirt, carrying along anything else worn or held. The chronicles of a certain notorious bandit king of antiquity whose signature accoutrement was his hide of worms are rife with accounts of him enticing enemies to follow him beneath the ground, eventually submerging them entirely and leaving them to die, buried alive. Such tales are probably overstated.

Hide of Worms Level 12+ Uncommon

You press your body to the ground and pass freely into it, burrowing through the dirt easily.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 13,000 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp |
| Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |

Armor: Leather or hide
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)
Effect: You gain a burrow speed of 3 until the end of the encounter, but you cannot use this speed to move through solid stone.

Plate Mail of Etherealness

Nonmagical plate mail is a damage barrier of the highest order, but at great cost to the wearer's mobility. Plate mail of etherealness offers nearly flawless magical protection and grants its wearer superior mobility on the battlefield. The armor's wearer can travel between the dimensions that define the planes, making walls and similar barriers no more hindering than a gentle breeze.

Most of the burnished surfaces of plate mail of etherealness shine with a misty silver light, like the flashing sun seen through a thin fog.

Plate Mail of Etherealness Level 17+ Uncommon

You surprise your enemies by using this armor to move through a hindering obstacle to get behind them.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |
| Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp | | | |

Armor: Plate
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)
Effect: You are phasing until the end of your next turn.

Robe of the Archmage

A multitude of legends talk about archmages and their exploits. Even though each story varies considerably, one common element often exists: Each archmage wore a protective item of tremendous power known as a robe of the archmage. Some such robes are said to provide nigh-invulnerable physical protection to their wearers, while others offer equal defense against other kinds of attacks, whether magical or psionic. Other tales tell of robes that are reputed to amplify the raw power of the magic commanded by their wearers, or that allow their wearers to channel spells normally beyond the grasp of mortals. A few dark rumors even claim that some robes instantly slay anyone but their owner who dons them.

Robe of the Archmage Level 20+ Rare

You can tap this robe's power to broaden your magical ability, but at a cost, since your body acts as a conduit for that force.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp | | | |

Armor: Cloth
Enhancement Bonus: AC
Properties
- ✦ You gain a +1 item bonus to Fortitude and Will.
  Level 25 or 30: The bonus increases to +2.
- ✦ After each extended rest, you can prepare one additional utility power of your level or lower from your spellbook. You must have a spellbook to use this benefit, and the additional power can be the same level as another utility power you prepare.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)
Effect: You take damage equal to your bloodied value that can't be reduced in any way. The next damage roll you make with an arcane attack power before the end of the turn has all of its damage dice maximized.

Curse the wizard that created the first robe of the archmage! Now any whelp of a hedge conjurer or witless apprentice that finds one considers himself an archmage. Then these fools seek magic far above their station or grasp at power as if donning a robe made them royalty. What a blasted nuisance. I hesitate to count the number of "archmages" I've reduced to dust. Still, I've found that for wizards worthy of the title, a robe of the archmage can be a useful item.

Robe of Useful Items

Those capable of scaling the greatest heights of intellect are often saddled with the inability to give proper thought to the mundane and unexceptional. For this reason, a transcendent genius of ancient times labored for a year and a day to craft this extraordinary robe, rather than simply remembering to pack his traveling pouches before departing on a journey.

A robe of useful items is exactly what its name suggests: a garment whose pockets, pouches, and sleeves hold utensils, tools, and implements that its wearer can bring forth on command. Corkscrews, rope, mirrors, candles, fishhooks—a robe of useful items can produce nearly anything portable and mundane.

Robe of Useful Items — Level 2+ Common

No matter what simple item you need, you can find it in one of this robe's many pockets.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 2 | +1 | 520 gp | Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp |
| Lvl 7 | +2 | 2,600 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp |
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 13,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |

Armor: Cloth

Enhancement Bonus: AC

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: You procure one nonmagical item worth up to 10 gp (with the DM's approval) from the robe. The item is generic (a torch or a rope, for instance), not a specific item (the key to a particular chest). The item lasts for 1 hour. When it disappears, you regain the use of this power.

I find it's handy to simply wear a robe of useful items about the tower. There's no need to remember where you set your quill or to look for a sponge to mop something up. You just pull out what you need at the moment, and poof! I've also found it to be a delightful means of snacking—with the truly delicious benefit of not having to loosen the robe's belt.

Shallow Grave Armor

Shallow grave armor is noteworthy for the dust and grime that is forever embedded in its padding, greaves, and joints. Although this armor looks dingy, its attunement to the grave lends it a potent magical ability. Part of the process of creating this armor requires it to be buried in a grave for a year and a day. That attunement to the grave provides it with a powerful ward against harm. If a person clad in shallow grave armor suffers a deadly wound, the armor's magic surges to provide a corresponding burst of healing.

Shallow Grave Armor — Level 9+ Uncommon

This suit of armor is covered with dirt and grime. No amount of scrubbing can remove it.

| Lvl 9 | +2 | 4,200 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |
| Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp | | | |

Armor: Any

Enhancement Bonus: AC

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You start your turn and are dying.

Effect: You can spend a healing surge and can stand up as a free action. Until the end of the encounter, you gain necrotic resistance and radiant vulnerability equal to 5 + this armor's enhancement bonus.

Wintersnap Armor

This white armor is designed for use in climates where frigid temperatures and bitter winds freeze the flesh and steal the very life of those with warm blood in their veins. Wintersnap armor protects its wearer from cold temperatures and cruel winds. Further, the white-colored material it is constructed from conceals its wearer with supernatural potency while on snow and ice.

The material from which wintersnap armor is made seems immediately obvious to those who see it from a distance—surely came from a great polar bear, or a furred cold drake, or an albino seal—but upon closer examination of its texture and sheen, all of these possibilities are discarded, because the nature of its crafting is mystifying. The most common theory suggests that the material comes from the pelt of a unique creature known as the White One, who is eternally bound in a secret place within the ice. It is thought that this creature's fortitude is so great that it can survive being flayed and eventually produces a new skin that can be shaped into this armor.

Wintersnap Armor — Level 4+ Uncommon

This strange white armor absorbs cold winds before they find your flesh, storing the bite of the frigid air so you can bring it forth when the time is right.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 4 | +1 | 840 gp | Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp |
| Lvl 9 | +2 | 4,200 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |

Armor: Any

Enhancement Bonus: AC

Properties

- ✦ You gain cold resistance equal to 3 + twice the armor's enhancement bonus.
- ✦ You gain a bonus to Stealth checks in snowy or icy environments equal to the armor's enhancement bonus.

☼ Utility Power (Aura) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: You activate an aura 1 that lasts until the end of the encounter, until you deactivate it as a minor action, or until the armor is removed. Squares in the aura are difficult terrain for creatures other than you.

Weapons

It might surprise some who know my reputation as a mighty wizard, but I have found that a weapon serves as well as a spell on many occasions. I speak not just of wielding a staff to ward off an enemy or using the knife kept for cutting meat to slash a sleeping throat, but also of keeping a scabbarded blade at my side. I have in my time smashed foes with maces, hacked them with axes, slashed them with swords, and impaled them upon polearms.

We who hold discourse with demons and cull reagents from corpses should not be so effete that we fear calluses upon our palms. Indeed, every wizard should take note of the use of martial weapons. If nothing else, you will understand as you die why you should have ducked instead of parried. Why let your last thought be one of confusion?

More to the point, you should have a deep knowledge of magic weapons. So many enchanted blades, enspelled spears, arcane arrows, and other such baubles litter old battlefields that I've heard of farmers turning them up in their fields when they plow. Such objects of power should not be allowed to ricochet about the world. They must be catalogued, measured for their danger, and each tracked according to its threat.

Woe would come to us all if Blackrazor or a vorpal sword were allowed to circulate unchecked by our vigilance. By the same token, we must understand that not every dancing sword or dragonslaying lance represents a grave threat to global stability. Many magic weapons should be examined for their properties and then be allowed to move through the world as the whims of fate decree.

When you find new properties on weapons (or upon any other items, for that matter), please record them in your copy of this book. Doing that will transfer them to my master copy, and I will then disseminate that knowledge to the others who hold a copy of this work. Please include any information you gather about creating the various properties of magic items, and be assured I will keep such knowledge in the strictest confidence.

–Mordenkainen, from his master copy of the Magnificent Emporium

Scholar's Note: Of special note is the last paragraph, which was redacted from the few copies that Mordenkainen disseminated before he reclaimed and destroyed them.

New Weapons

The armaments described here are somewhat less common than the typical sword or axe, but they are no less useful. Many weapons were born from necessity, such as war picks crafted from the mining implements of threatened dwarf clans. In other cases, weapons were adapted to fit a group's preferred fighting style, such as pikes crafted by gnomish militias to hold larger foes at bay.

New Weapon Category: Superior Weapons

Superior weapons are specialized swords, axes, and other weapons that require intensive training to master their use. These weapons are usually more accurate or damaging than their nonsuperior counterparts, but come at the cost of requiring advanced training and study. Many of them are also rarely seen. A warrior trained in a superior weapon might hail from an exotic land or claim membership in a small or diminishing fighting school.

You can gain proficiency with a superior weapon by taking the Weapon Proficiency feat and choosing that weapon.

Reading the Weapon Tables

An entry on the weapons table contains the following information.

Weapon: The weapon's name.

Prof.: Having proficiency with a weapon means that you are trained in the use of that weapon, which gives you a proficiency bonus to weapon attack rolls. The bonus appears in this column if applicable. Some weapons are more accurate than others, as reflected by their bonus. If you don't have proficiency with the weapon, you don't gain this bonus.

Damage: The weapon's damage die. When a power deals a number of weapon damage dice (such as 4[W]), you roll the number of the dice indicated by this entry. If the weapon's damage die is an expression of multiple dice, roll that number of dice the indicated number of times. For example, a broadsword (which has a damage die of 1d10) deals 4d10 damage when used with a power that deals 4[W] on a hit.

Range: Weapons that can strike at a distance have a range entry. The number before the slash indicates the normal range (in squares) for an attack. The number after the slash indicates the long range for an attack; an attack at long range takes a –2 penalty to the attack roll. Squares beyond the second number are considered to be out of range and can't be targeted with this weapon.

If a melee weapon has a range entry, it can be thrown and belongs to either the light thrown or the heavy thrown category.

An entry of "—" indicates that the weapon can't be used at range, except as an improvised weapon.

Price: The weapon's cost in gold pieces.

Weight: The weapon's weight in pounds.

Properties: A weapon's properties. See page 269 of the Rules Compendium for explanations of most of the properties. The new mounted property is explained below.

Group: A weapon's group. See the explanation on page 271 of the Rules Compendium.

Weapon Properties

High Crit: A high crit weapon deals more damage when you score a critical hit with it. On a critical hit, the weapon deals 1[W] extra damage at 1st–10th levels, 2[W] extra damage at 11th–20th levels, and 3[W] extra damage at 21st–30th levels. This extra damage is in addition to any critical damage the weapon supplies if it is a magic weapon.

Light Thrown: A ranged basic attack with a light thrown weapon uses your Dexterity modifier for the attack and damage rolls, unless otherwise noted in the description of the power used.

Mounted: A mounted weapon is most effective when you use it while riding a mount. When you use such a weapon while not mounted, you take a –2 penalty to attack rolls with it. While you are mounted, your charge attacks with the weapon deal 1[W] extra damage.

Off-Hand: An off-hand weapon is light enough that you can hold it and attack effectively with it while also holding a weapon in your main hand. You can't attack with both weapons in the same turn, unless you have a power that allows such an attack, but you can attack with either weapon.

Reach: With a reach weapon, you can make melee attacks against enemies that are 2 squares away from you as well as against adjacent enemies. Even so, you can make opportunity attacks only against enemies adjacent to you and can flank only enemies adjacent to you.

Small: This property describes a two-handed or a versatile weapon that a Small character can use in the same way a Medium character can. A halfling can use a shortbow, for instance, even though halflings can't normally wield two-handed weapons.

Versatile: Versatile weapons are one-handed, but you can use one two-handed. If you do so, you gain a +1 bonus to the weapon's damage rolls.

A Small creature, such as a halfling, must use a versatile weapon two-handed and doesn't gain the bonus to damage rolls.

Weapon Descriptions

Bastard Sword: This heavier variation on the longsword requires special training to cope with its weight and peculiar balance. Warriors who master the bastard sword gain the typical sword's accuracy and balance combined with the striking power of a warhammer or battle axe.

Broadsword: Compared to a longsword, a broadsword has a heavier blade more suited to brutal tactics than to quick maneuvers.

Falchion: A falchion features a long, wide blade that bends in a curve, similar to that of a scimitar.

Flail: Based on a simple agricultural tool, a flail is a wooden handle attached by a short chain to a spiked metal ball. The chain allows a skilled warrior to generate impressive force with each stroke or entangle a foe's legs or arms.

Glaive: With its long, wooden haft that ends in a swordlike cutting blade, the glaive excels at keeping enemies at a distance.

Halberd: A halberd's heavy head makes it a devastating weapon, while its long, wooden haft grants it the reach needed to deter would-be attackers.

Heavy Flail: This two-handed variation of a standard flail can bash through armor with ease.

Heavy War Pick: A longer haft and a heavier pick end make this weapon an ideal choice for a gnome or a halfling in search of a two-handed weapon.

Katar: Also known as a punching dagger, this blade has an H-shaped handle that its wielder grasps in his or her fist. By driving this weapon at a foe with a punching motion, the katar's wielder strikes with deep and deadly attacks.

1. Halberd; 2. Falchion; 3. War pick; 4. Katar; 5. Spiked chain; 6. Rapier; 7. Morningstar; 8. Bastard sword; 9. Flail; 10. Glaive

Lance: This long, heavy spear relies on the weight and speed of a charging mount to skewer a hapless enemy. Most mounted warriors set aside their lances once they engage in close quarters fighting.

Light Mace: The smaller races often prefer this version of the mace because of its lighter weight. It can deliver a solid, if not crushing, blow to an enemy.

Light War Pick: This variation on the pick trades hitting power for speed and agility. Gnomes often favor the light war pick as an off-hand weapon.

Morningstar: This fancier take on a two-handed club consists of a wooden haft topped with a spiked metal ball. The morningstar is common among mercenaries, ogres, trolls, and others that want a heavy weapon that requires little training or maintenance.

Pike: The pike is similar to a longspear, except that its superior construction and balance make it usable by gnomes, halflings, and other Small folk.

Rapier: A weapon of choice for the sophisticated duelist, the rapier is a long, light blade ideal for parrying blows and delivering quick counterattacks.

Serrated Pick: This weapon is similar to a standard pick, except for its longer, sharper, and sawlike pick head. With proper training, a warrior can inflict terrible wounds not only with the serrated pick's initial impact but also as the weapon is pulled free from a target.

Short Spear: Although this weapon often serves the same role as a spear, it is more handy for the smaller races. It can also be used as a thrown weapon, unlike a full-sized spear.

Spiked Chain: Eladrin duelists are thought to be the first to employ this weapon, and its combination of speed and elegance supports that theory. The spiked chain delivers raking blows from a distance. Like a whip or a flail, it can also wrap around a foe's legs to send that enemy tumbling to the ground.

War Pick: Adapted from the common mining tool, a war pick features a compact design combined with a single, sharp point to punch through armor. Gnomes and halflings favor war picks because of the weapon's small size.

Waraxe: This is a favorite weapon of dwarves, who can wield it with a shield or with two hands for greater damage. Either way, it cuts through orcs' necks very well.

Whip: Stories of novices injuring themselves with this weapon underscore the difficulty of mastering the whip, but in the hands of an expert, a whip can drag a foe down, drive away a vicious animal, or even wrap around a loose object at a distance.

New Weapon Feats

With new weapons come new techniques, tricks, and tactics to use them. The feats presented here are designed to interact with the weapons introduced in this book.

Feat Categories

Each of the feats in this section belongs to one of two groupings, or categories, based on its general theme. Feat categories were introduced in Heroes of the Fallen Lands and Heroes of the Forgotten Kingdoms as a way for players to organize and tailor their feat choices.

Weapon Training The intense study of a single weapon allows a warrior to achieve unmatched levels of skill, though at the cost of flexibility. Three of the feats in this book are part of the weapon training category.

| Weapon Training Feats |
|---|
| Flail Expertise |
| Pick Expertise |
| Polearm Expertise |

Strike Specialization The power strike power represents a sudden surge of adrenaline, a focused attack, or a savage twist of a blade. Some skilled warriors learn to incorporate it into their fighting style, using their cunning, strength, and foresight to deliver an attack that takes advantage of a weapon's unique traits.

The feats in this new category all modify the power strike power. They are ideal for rangers, fighters, and other characters who have access to that power.

| Strike Specialization Feats |
|---|
| Axe Strike |
| Flail Strike |
| Hammer Strike |
| Heavy Blade Strike |
| Light Blade Strike |
| Mace Strike |
| Pick Strike |
| Spear Strike |
| Staff Strike |

Adventurer Feats

This section presents the feats in alphabetical order.

Axe Strike In your hands, an axe is a tool of devastation. When you focus your efforts, your attacks open deep wounds and cleave through armor, even if they're only glancing blows.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you miss a target with a weapon attack using an axe, you can expend a use of power strike to deal 5 damage to the target, even if it is a minion. This damage increases to 10 at 11th level and 15 at 21st level.

Flail Expertise The flail requires a mix of speed and power, a style that you have perfected over long hours of training. With a sweeping attack, you entangle a foe and send it tumbling to the ground.

Benefit: You gain a +1 feat bonus to weapon attack rolls that you make with a flail. This bonus increases to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

In addition, when you hit with a melee weapon attack using a flail and the attack lets you slide the target, you can knock the target prone instead of sliding it.

Flail Strike As a master of the flail, you have learned to make powerful strikes that take advantage of your cunning and guile. Your aggressive attacks are often feints, allowing you to knock your enemies to the ground using the weapon's chain and making them more vulnerable to your follow-up strike.

Axe strike

JEFF HIMMELMAN

Mace strike

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you use power strike with a flail, you can knock the target prone, but the extra damage is reduced by 1[W]. If you do so, the target provokes an opportunity attack from you if it stands up adjacent to you during its next turn.

Hammer Strike

Your tactics are as subtle and indirect as a warhammer to the head. You line up your enemy and knock it senseless with a powerful blow.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you use power strike with a hammer, you can daze the target until the end of your next turn, but the extra damage is reduced by 1[W].

Heavy Blade Strike

A heavy blade excels at holding back hordes of enemies. With great sweeps of your weapon, you hew through your foes' ranks and leave behind a trail of corpses.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points with a weapon attack using a heavy blade, you can use power strike. Instead of gaining the power's normal benefit, you make a melee basic attack against a different creature as a free action.

Light Blade Strike

The rapier, the short sword, and other light blades are finesse weapons that require speed rather than strength. Where other warriors rely on brute power for their attacks, you carefully strike at your foe's most vulnerable point.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you make a melee basic attack with a light blade against a target's AC, you can use power strike before making the attack roll. Instead of gaining the power's normal benefit, you make the attack against the target's Reflex, rather than AC. In addition, if the attack hits, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage roll against the target. This bonus increases to +4 at 11th level and +6 at 21st level.

Mace Strike

A mace excels at delivering crushing blows against a foe's armor or protected areas. Your attacks do more than crush armor. By focusing on a vulnerable area, you can break ribs, snap bone, or hit your foes where it really hurts with a single blow.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you make a melee basic attack with a mace against a target's AC, you can use power strike before making the attack roll. Instead of gaining the power's normal benefit, you make the attack against the target's Fortitude, rather than AC. In addition, if the attack hits, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage roll against the target. This bonus increases to +4 at 11th level and +6 at 21st level.

Pick Expertise

The pick is a favored weapon of dwarves, gnomes, and others that must battle giants. Its curved point makes it an excellent weapon for striking at a foe's feet, particularly against larger foes such as giants or ogres. Of course, to a halfling or gnome a human is a larger foe.

Benefit: You gain a +1 feat bonus to weapon attack rolls that you make with a pick. This bonus increases to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

In addition, you gain a +1 bonus to pick damage rolls against any enemy that has a size category larger than yours. This bonus increases to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

Pick Strike

A pick is built to drive deep into an enemy's armor. Its heavy, piercing head can crack through an umber hulk's hide or a hobgoblin warlord's plate armor. When you throw your weight behind a pick attack, your weapon pierces deep into your foe, hurting it very badly.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you use power strike with a pick, you deal the maximum damage you could roll for power strike if your attack roll against the target was 18–20.

CYNTHIA SHEPPARD

Polearm Expertise With proper training, a polearm's length provides both an offensive and a defensive edge. When you attack, you keep your foes at a distance. When they close to attack, the polearm's size makes it ideal for parrying.

Benefit: You gain a +1 feat bonus to weapon attack rolls that you make with a polearm. This bonus increases to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

In addition, while you hold a two-handed polearm in both hands, you gain a +2 bonus to all defenses against charge attacks.

Many wizards consider swordplay and similar pursuits to be the purview of hirelings and allies. For them, the spell is blade and bulwark. Well, take it from one wizard who has outlasted many such fools: You can run out of spells, but there are weapons enough in the world to arm everyone in it four times over. You will someday need a weapon, and when you do, you'll want to know which end to swing at your enemy.

Spear Strike The spear was one of the first weapons developed for hunting and warfare, and for good reason. It is relatively easy to construct, and it is ideal for keeping foes at a distance and for pinning them down.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you use power strike with a spear, you can immobilize the target until the end of your next turn, but the extra damage is reduced by 1[W].

Staff Strike The staff is primarily a defensive weapon that is usually consigned to the hands of wizards or monks. In the hands of a canny warrior, a staff can be a formidable weapon thanks to its reach and the fact that either end can strike. Your unexpected strikes with this weapon allow you to knock your foes off balance and ruin their defenses.

Prerequisite: Power strike power

Benefit: When you use power strike with a staff, the target grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn.

Magic Weapons

Legend holds that the first magic weapons were crafted as gifts from wizards and clerics to their people as a token of alliance and friendship in the earliest days of history. After all, while a weapon is a warrior's tool, its crafting requires the expertise of a skilled spellcaster or an expert smith. Rarely does the hand that forges a blade wield it in battle.

Magic weapons are powerful symbols. A simple +2 longsword might stand as a symbol of sovereignty, granting the crown to whoever carries it. An otherwise plain magic axe might be the one weapon foretold to defeat the demon king. When an adventurer pulls a magic weapon from a treasure cache, it carries with it the legends and history forged by its previous wielders.

Captain's Weapon

These weapons gained their name from a warlord of antiquity who led a band of mercenaries known as the Wolf Raiders. Although the unit fought in many battles for various lords and countries, it always emerged from a fight with minimal casualties. The warlord claimed that between his expert skill and the power of his greatsword, which was bestowed upon him by Bane, no force could defeat his warriors. The sword gained its name from the pledge the warriors spoke before each battle: "With the captain's weapon leading us, we cannot lose."

Many weapons of simple but nonmagical virtue have been misidentified as captain's weapons by those who vanquished their wielders, since skilled captains often render their allies more capable through encouragement, commands, and confident presence. Such nonmagical leadership is, of course, that much more effective when combined with the capabilities of an actual captain's weapon.

Captain's Weapon Level 13+ Rare

You brandish your weapon and give battle commands to your nearby comrades, who take heart knowing your side will win the day.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | +4 | 85,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |

Weapon: Any melee

Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls

Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Attack Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: Choose one creature adjacent to you. Each of your allies within 3 squares of that creature can make a basic attack against it as a free action.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: Choose one ally within 3 squares of you. That ally gains a power bonus to his or her next damage roll during this encounter. The bonus is equal to the weapon's enhancement bonus.

Flame Tongue Weapon

Many magical blades glow in darkness. Some shimmer so brightly that their light can be seen by daylight. Flame tongue weapons are to these what a bonfire is to a candle. When a flame tongue weapon's wielder speaks a command word, the weapon bursts with roaring flames capable of searing flesh and setting ablaze anything flammable.

Some flame tongue weapons are paired with enchanted scabbards or harnesses, allowing them to ignite immediately as they are drawn and readied. Ill suited for those who prefer the shadows, flame tongue weapons are made for those who lead from the front, acting as a beacon to foes and promising those enemies that searing flame awaits them should they attack.

Flame Tongue Weapon Level 10+ Rare

This blade spews forth flames that engulf your enemies in fire.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 10 | +2 | 5,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp | | | |

Weapon: Heavy blade or light blade
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 fire damage per plus

Properties

- ✦ While holding this weapon, you have fire resistance equal to 3 + twice the weapon's enhancement bonus.
- ✦ All untyped damage dealt by weapon attacks using this weapon changes to fire damage.
- ✦ Once per round when you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points with a weapon attack using this weapon, each of your enemies adjacent to that enemy takes fire damage equal to 5 + the weapon's enhancement bonus.

Attack Power (Fire) ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)

Attack: Close blast 3 (creatures in the blast); the weapon's level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 fire damage, and ongoing 5 fire damage (save ends).
Level 15 or 20: 2d10 fire damage, and ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).
Level 25 or 30: 3d10 fire damage, and ongoing 15 fire damage (save ends).

Frost Brand Weapon

An old tale so widely retold that it cannot possibly be true holds that an ancient wizard embraced the power of elemental fire so wholly that its flames animated the blood in his veins. His knowledge of that element was without peer among mortals. In the later centuries of his life, his experiments grew more speculative and more dangerous, until he succumbed to the old adage known to every child—"Play with fire and you'll get burned"—and was consumed by the very fires he had controlled for so long.

He was so powerful, however, that even this fate did not end his life, but he felt so betrayed by his favored element that he turned against fire just as it had turned against him. The frost brand weapons that currently exist are the results of his rage-fueled research into quenching fire and tempering the body against its burn.

Flame tongue

Frost Brand Weapon Level 8+ Rare

Frost forms on your hands as you alter your grip on this icy weapon, but the cold doesn't harm you as the weapon devours all the heat around you.

| Lvl 8 | +2 | 3,400 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | +4 | 85,000 gp | | | |

Weapon: Any melee
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 cold damage per plus

Properties

- ✦ While holding this weapon, you have fire resistance equal to 3 + twice the weapon's enhancement bonus.
- ✦ All untyped damage dealt by weapon attacks using this weapon changes to cold damage.

Attack Power (Cold) ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)

Attack: Close blast 3 (creatures in the blast); the weapon's level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 cold damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Level 13 or 18: 2d10 cold damage.
Level 23 or 28: 3d10 cold damage.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: Close burst 5. You can extinguish any nonmagical fire in the burst, and each ally in the burst makes a saving throw against ongoing fire damage that a save can end.

JIM NELSON

Giantslayer Weapon

Giantslayer weapons are designed to strike true and deal grievous wounds against giants and titans. The most powerful of these weapons were forged by the gods as gifts for their exarchs to help them fight in the Dawn War. In later years, the exarchs and their allies crafted lesser versions of the original weapons (as described here) to help them continue the fight against giantkind, which didn't stop harrying the mortal races after the war.

Giantslayer Weapon Level 7+ Uncommon

This weapon seeks out giantkind, helping you deliver vicious strikes against those foes.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 7 | +2 | 2,600 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp |
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 13,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |
| Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp | | | |

Weapon: Any melee
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus, or +1d12 damage per plus against Large or larger humanoids

Property

You gain an item bonus to damage rolls against Large or larger humanoids. The bonus equals the weapon's enhancement bonus.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Immediate Interrupt)

Trigger: A giant tries to push you, stun you, or knock you prone.
Effect: You are immune to the push or the stun and do not fall prone.

Giants can cause large problems for the rest of us in the world, but those who wield giantslayer weapons would do well to remember that those who are vulnerable to such weapons can help to resolve troubles of great scope as well. I count among my allies both a tribe of stone giants and a tribe of their cloud kindred. The stone giants even aided me in the construction of my citadel, while the cloud giants will rush to my aid in return for helping them defeat a flight of dragons. I could not have hoped to gain such staunch friends while swinging about a sword dedicated to their deaths.

Greater Dancing Weapon

Some stories say that the idea of the dancing weapon—one able to animate itself to fight without the sword arm of a mortal behind it—was the fantasy of a vexed sergeant whose soldiers were frequently too intoxicated or hung over to fight properly when the time for battle came. One comic tale suggests that a wizard traveling with just such a frustrated commander crafted the enchantments used in all current versions of dancing weapons as an elaborate (but welcome) joke.

Whatever its provenance, a greater dancing weapon is not only magical in nature, but wondrous to behold as it whirls and dances around the field of battle as if held by an invisible but expert hand. It creates confusion and terror among the wielder's enemies by darting across the battlefield, slashing and thrusting at opponents that have no one to retaliate against.

Dark rumors persist that servants of Vecna are seeking these weapons. It's not conjectured whether they want the weapons for their own use or for some other servants of the god of secrets, or if they plan to use the weapons' magic for some other rite. The rumors suggest that Vecna's followers are willing to pay well for the weapons, but that anyone who refuses their offer comes to an ill end.

Greater Dancing Weapon Level 15+ Rare

This weapon leaps from your grasp, then darts and weaves through the air toward your enemies.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |

Weapon: Any melee
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Minor Action)

Effect: The weapon animates and dances in the air in an unoccupied square adjacent to you. You can use a move action to cause the weapon to fly up to 6 squares to a square that you can see. The object occupies 1 square, and it cannot flank. Its defenses equal 10 + its level, although it cannot be harmed by any attack. If an attack hits the weapon, it returns to your hand (or it falls in your space if you don't have a hand free or in the nearest square if it can't reach you), and this power ends. You can use a minor action to end this power if the weapon is adjacent to you, causing the weapon to return to your hand.

While you can see the weapon, you can make weapon attacks with it while it dances, using its square as the origin square of the attacks (including all attack and damage modifiers that you would normally apply).

ǂ Attack Power ✦ At-Will (Opportunity Action)

Trigger: An enemy that you can see takes an action that provokes opportunity attacks and is adjacent to the weapon while the weapon's utility power is in effect.
Effect: You make a melee basic attack against that enemy, using the weapon.

ǂ Attack Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Requirement: The weapon's utility power must be in effect, and you must be able to see the weapon.
Effect: You make a melee basic attack using the weapon.

Greater luckblade

Greater Luckblade

Tales say that it's impossible to slay the wielder of a greater luckblade while he or she is holding it. Although some sages refute this claim, no record exists of the death of a warrior who clutched such a weapon.

The method by which these blades protect and assist those who wield them is strange and subtle. Although their wielders' blows land more often than not, no supernatural force guides those wielders' hands. Those who wield these weapons parry more blows than most, but a greater luckblade's ability to keep its wielder safe is clearly not all-powerful. Even so, the tales claiming that it's impossible to slay the wielder of a greater luckblade continue to spread.

Greater Luckblade — Level 15+ Rare

Feeling a vibration in this weapon, you spin aside. A second later, a foe's strike splits the air where your head just was.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |

Weapon: Heavy blade or light blade
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Immediate Interrupt)
Trigger: An enemy hits you with an attack while you're bloodied.
Effect: The enemy must reroll the attack and use the new result.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (No Action)
Trigger: You miss with an attack roll.
Effect: You reroll the attack roll and use the new result.

Hammer of Storms

Each of these mighty hammers is infused with the power of thunder and lightning. It is said that the effectiveness of the hammer increases when the weapon is near other weapons of its kind. Stories tell of battles in which many hammers of storms were brought together to sunder the walls of a fortification.

Hammer of Storms — Level 12+ Uncommon

When you wield this weapon, the power of the storm rages around you, blasting your enemies with thunder and lightning.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 13,000 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp |
| Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |

Weapon: Hammer
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Attack Power (Lightning, Thunder) ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)
Attack: Close burst 2 (enemies in the burst); the weapon's level + 3 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 5 lightning and thunder damage, and the target falls prone.
Level 22 or 27: 10 lightning and thunder damage.
Special: This power deals 2 extra damage for each hammer of storms that is within 10 squares of this weapon (10 extra damage maximum).

I've no doubt that dwarves crafted the hammers of storms. Many of the great axes and hammers that course with lightning or thunder with each swing were pulled from the forge by dwarf hands. It might seem odd that dwarves, largely beholden to Moradin, would have so much affinity for storms, the domain of Kord. But dwarves value Kord's emphasis on strength, and storms lash their mountain homes far more often than any other elemental force. That the dwarves should make weapons that grow stronger when used in concert should be no surprise to anyone, but why should those weapons have become separated from one another and "lost"? Perhaps the dwarves did not predict how deadly the weapons would be in their own clan wars. If you and your allies have such weapons, excellent. But as soon as your enemies have them as well . . .

Lesser Cloaked Weapon

Although more effective in combat than its nonmagical counterparts, a lesser cloaked weapon truly stands apart from them in the way that it disappears beyond the possibility of detection when it's sheathed, stowed, or slung. Sight, touch, and even many magical means of detection are powerless to find such a weapon that has been stored away; it is as if the weapon has ceased to exist until its wielder speaks a command word and reaches to grasp the hidden item from its place of concealment. At such command, the weapon reappears, ready for use once more. It is impossible to know how many of these weapons lie in the vaults and graves of the world, unknowingly buried along with their owners.

Lesser Cloaked Weapon — Level 2+ Common

Seemingly unarmed as your foe approaches, you reach behind your back. Suddenly, this weapon appears in your hands, tilting the odds in your favor.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 2 | +1 | 520 gp | Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp |
| Lvl 7 | +2 | 2,600 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 325,000 gp |
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 13,000 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 1,625,000 gp |

Weapon: Any
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus

Property

When stowed, a cloaked weapon cannot be detected or taken from its owner. The weapon's owner must speak a chosen word when stowing the weapon somewhere on his or her person. This word becomes the weapon's command word. As a minor action, the weapon's owner can give the command word and reach for the location where the weapon was last stowed, and it will appear in the owner's hand. The weapon's owner can use the same command word or choose a different one each time the weapon is stowed.

Lifestealer Weapon

Made from rare materials that enhance the flow of necrotic energy, each lifestealer weapon was created to siphon life force from those it strikes. When a lifestealer weapon strikes a creature, the weapon creates a conduit of necrotic energy between the creature and its wielder, allowing the wielder to steal the creature's vitality to heal his or her wounds. Additionally, each time the weapon's wielder slays a foe, the weapon absorbs that enemy's vitality, transferring a portion of it to the wielder.

It is thought by some sages that those who enchanted lifestealer weapons in primeval days sought to use the extra life force absorbed from slain enemies by these weapons for some evil purpose. Enchanters and sages of the current age are unable to divine where the energy goes or to replicate the primordial magic that created these weapons.

Lifestealer Weapon — Level 4+ Uncommon

When you strike your enemy, a small measure of your foe's life force is absorbed by this weapon and directed into you.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 4 | +1 | 840 gp | Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp |
| Lvl 9 | +2 | 4,200 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |

Weapon: Any melee
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d12 necrotic damage per plus

Property

Whenever you kill an enemy with this weapon, you gain temporary hit points equal to 5 + the weapon's enhancement bonus.

Attack Power (Healing, Necrotic) ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You hit an enemy with an attack using this weapon.
Effect: The target takes extra necrotic damage equal to 2 + the weapon's enhancement bonus, and you regain a number of hit points equal to that extra damage.

Mace of Disruption

These weapons were forged through a combination of Moradin's metalcraft, Kord's strength, and Ioun's knowledge. Those three gods working together crafted the first maces of disruption to honor Pelor, whose healing magic saved their lives during the Dawn War. Since that time, similar weapons have passed among Pelor's followers.

A mace of disruption is utterly inimical to undead creatures. Within the center of its striking head rests a tiny ember of radiance. That shard is sealed in metal and wood—were it ever exposed, its light would blind onlookers, including the weapon's wielder—yet its power courses through the mace. The slightest touch annihilates lesser undead creatures, and vampires, wraiths, and even liches recoil from its blows.

Mace of Disruption — Level 10+ Rare

This iron mace is scribed with a variety of holy runes. It glimmers with white light as divine magic flows through it.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 10 | +2 | 5,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp | | | |

Weapon: Mace
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Properties

- ✦ An evil creature that uses this weapon to make an attack takes radiant damage equal to 5 + this weapon's level.
- ✦ If you attack an undead minion with this weapon, that minion is destroyed, whether the attack hits or misses. If the minion has powers or traits triggered by its destruction, they are not triggered.
- ✦ If you hit an undead creature with this weapon, you gain a power bonus to the damage roll against that creature. The bonus equals the weapon's enhancement bonus.

Attack Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: You hit an undead creature with this weapon.
Effect: You push the creature up to 3 squares, and it is immobilized (save ends).

Maul of the Titans

Although the strength of titans is phenomenal, the engineering skill of dwarves and humans is capable of conceiving and constructing fortifications that can withstand even the titans' considerable might. However, nothing built by the hands of mortals, no matter how strongly reinforced by engineering or by magic, is capable of withstanding a blow from a maul of the titans, including solid rock.

It is said that texts detailing the expensive and time-consuming creation of these weapons still exist, the powerful incantations and formulas waiting upon their pages. If that claim is true, these texts would be more valuable than the weapons themselves. Those who spread such tales claim the texts can be found in the ancient tombs of the dwarf wizards who crafted the original mauls, but the dwarves strongly discourage such stories—as well any grave-robbers they discover disturbing their dead.

Maul of the Titans Level 18+ Rare

No opposition can stand against you while you wield this mighty hammer, whether living foe or inanimate edifice.

Mighty Dwarven Thrower

Ancient songs and chants of dwarf priests tell of the mighty hammer carried by the ancient scion of the dwarf race who led the first rebellion against the dwarves' giant and titan slavemasters. The legends do not agree on that weapon's true name, but all concur that it measured more than six feet from end to end, it flew forth from its master's hand with the power of a thunderbolt, and it instantly slew any titan it struck. And not only that, before the slain foe even tumbled to the ground, the weapon appeared back in the mighty hero's hand.

That ancient weapon—if it ever truly existed—is certainly a powerful artifact. Stories of that hammer have inspired dwarf smiths and crafters to try to imitate the weapon, and many enchanted hammers have been created that possess some of that weapon's fabled traits.

In keeping with the dwarven aesthetic, all mighty dwarven throwers are cast in bold, geometric shapes that look as if they were never intended for flight. Some mighty dwarven throwers emit a whine or a hum when thrown (the dwarves say the hammer is singing). Others exude a trail of shining light, like a meteor streaking through the night sky, as they fly toward their target. Some return instantly to their owner's hand or boomerang through the air in return flight. One feature common to all is that they are especially effective against giants and titans.

Trigger: You hit a creature adjacent to you with this weapon.
Effect: The creature is dazed (save ends).

In my experience—for all their long-winded ramblings about lineage and tradition—dwarves are a greedy and devious people. I write this not to insult them in any way. I have found greed to be a useful motivator both for myself and my underlings, and I prize the ingenious trickery that some members of the race demonstrate. Such cleverness can be seen in the creation of mighty dwarven throwers. You might see before you a dwarf holding a two-handed maul of so much heft it seems he could barely swing it, yet he hurls it fifty feet as easily as a child casts a stone. Then, in the blink of an eye, he holds it high once again.

Punishing Weapon

Every wound delivered by a punishing weapon brings the enemy closer to death, as each subsequent strike hits harder than the last. When someone wielding one of these weapons focuses his or her attacks upon one opponent, each successful strike takes its toll on that foe, enabling the wielder to more quickly finish off the victim.

These weapons famously received their name during Nerath's rise to power, when a group of vigilantes dedicated to Erathis used them to "punish the wicked" within their society. At first, the groups' members were seen as saviors and heroes among the common people, but eventually corruption within the group's ranks led to its downfall.

Property

The first time each round you hit an enemy with this weapon, you can choose to inflict a wound on the enemy. You gain a cumulative power bonus to damage rolls against the enemy for each of these wounds that you have inflicted on it. Each wound contributes half the weapon's enhancement bonus to the power bonus. The wounds end on the enemy when you hit another enemy with the weapon or at the end of the encounter.

Seeker Weapon

Seeker weapons—slings, bows, crossbows, and other ranged weapons—are deadly tools that defy physical laws in strange and unnatural ways. Although all such weapons have normal range limitations, they or the missiles they loose travel with unusual accuracy to strike their target, even if the weapon's wielder cannot see that enemy. The projectile fired by a seeker weapon can take a convoluted route, even streaking around a corner, over a wall, or through a window; as long as a clear route from origin to destination exists, it cannot easily be prevented from hitting its target. One legend of a master archer who was denied his true love tells of how he took his life with an arrow that he fired from his own bow.

Shock Spear

Everyone who has seen lightning split the sky, or seen the blackened debris of a tree struck by that force, has imagined wielding its power.

A shock spear (or javelin) allows that dream to come true by enabling its wielder to deal lightning damage when the weapon is hurled. Its special power is much more spectacular: By calling upon the energy contained within the weapon, the wielder can expel from it a cluster of lightning bolts that fan out to hit multiple enemies.

Stinging Spear

A stinging spear is cleverly enchanted to find the chinks in the armor and other protections used by your enemies. These weapons, which can be either spears or javelins, can easily find purchase in the hairline gaps between plates of steel or punch cleanly through chitinous hide armor as if it were gauze. One ancient general whose real name has been lost to history was slain by a stinging spear that penetrated the only trifling gap in his armor—the eyeslit in his helm. Since then, the example of the Impaled General is invoked by grizzled veterans to teach their students that no warrior should rely solely on his or her armor to ward off an enemy's attack.

Slings and arrows, javelins and darts—they sound like children's games. Then again, children play at war, so why not with its tools? Surely, those who will make war against them when they are older play at war as well. The young orc cradles a spear before it carries an orc babe. And what elf child has not touched a bow before seeing ten summers? What would the world be like if it were not so? What if all the world's children played bargaining games instead? Merchants or men-at-arms, which is more dangerous in the balance? Idle thoughts. And idle thoughts, like idle children, can cause mischief. Better to put them to more profitable use.

True Dragonslayer Weapon

Because dragons are among the most feared creatures of the world, it is natural that the magesmiths of antiquity turned their art and craft to forging weapons that would give mortal heroes the tools and strength of spirit required to slay those mighty creatures.

The varieties of true dragonslayer weapons are many. The most ancient (and most powerful) ones often impart the narrowest benefits. Some were forged for the sole purpose of slaying a single dragon whose horrible depredations threatened some long-forgotten kingdom. Others bear powers aligned against all dragons of a particular type; weapons antagonistic to chromatic dragons are the most common of these. The most recently forged true dragonslayer weapons, some of which were crafted within the memory of still-living eladrin, are said to strike true against all dragons—but nonetheless, these weapons have but a shadow of the fearsome power of the weapons of antiquity.

One tale told in Winterhaven so often it must hold some truth tells of a pair of would-be dragonslayers, the twins Lanok and Leska, who each claimed to have one of these weapons. The stories say that they traveled into the Cairngorm Peaks, following rumors of a red dragon lairing among the foul humanoids in the northern part of the Stonemarch. So far, there are no stories of the siblings' return.

Warning Weapon

Some legends say that the first warning weapon was enchanted for a mighty warrior blinded by the cruel strike of a dragon's claw. Another equally ancient saga from the lore of a seafaring empire says that the first warning weapon was a trident carried by the captain of the emperor's fastest messenger ship. Whatever its origin, any warning weapon allows whoever grasps it to be aware of the location of every enemy within a short distance—no matter what barriers might intervene, from fog to black water to solid stone.

Magic is a fine wine, but like any good drink, you must partake of it in moderation—and keep a wary eye on its effects. I once granted a guard a warning sword. It seemed a wise precaution at the time. What better way to arm a sentry than to give him the power to sense all interlopers? However, not long after this gift, his demeanor changed. He often seemed distracted, as if his mind were elsewhere. I soon realized that his thoughts were focused not on daydreams but constantly on his surroundings. Given the ability to know the moment an enemy came close, even invisibly or in the guise of some innocent creature, he simply could not give up that advantage. He would wait as long as he could, but at the slightest noise or vague reason for suspicion, he would use the sword's magic to reassure himself that there was no threat. Once the power had been used, he became paranoid that some enemy might be bypassing him while he was "blind." Ultimately, I had to relieve him of his duty. The sword awaits a wielder who is demonstrably more stable.

Way-Leader Weapon

A way-leader weapon is enchanted to allow its wielder to instantly call forth nearby allies when he or she strikes true, so they can all attack the same foe at once. Thus, the one wielding this weapon leads the way to the enemy.

The primal shamans of a steppe civilization first crafted these weapons to help their hunters against the giant elephants that often assailed their people. One hunter would hurl his or her spear into an elephant, then send allies next to the beast to surround and kill it before it could trample them.

Weapons of Accuracy, Long Range, and Speed

It is said that the road wardens of a long-fallen empire never failed to hit their mark given a ready crossbow and pair of eyes to see. Although the training regimen of the wardens was nearly without match in all the empire, their famed precision with ranged attacks—whether with a bow, crossbow, sling, or dagger—also relied on the enchantments placed on their weapons by the empire's master wizards.

These weapons carried three types of enchantments. Weapons of accuracy rarely missed their mark, striking foes at fifty paces as easily as at ten. Weapons of long range launched their missiles twice or even three times as far as their mundane equivalents. Weapons of speed allowed their users to fire and reload so quickly that their hands blurred with the shots.

Wind weapons are attuned to the power of elemental air and awaken the air around them when swung, giving rise to gusts of wind that drive back their wielder's foes and compelling defenders to give ground. The wielder of a wind weapon can use those same gusts to carry an ally into the battle, allowing that comrade to gain superior positioning.

True wind weapon masters are capable of intricate and delicate effects. One of the greatest eladrin wind weapon fencers in all the Feywild was said to have been able to blow a love letter from a courier's pouch across his master's throne room with the barest flick of his blade, though such tales are most likely the fancies of romantic bards.

Magic Ammunition

Arrows, bolts, and sling bullets can all have enchantments. Though the power of these items rarely matches that provided by a magic ranged weapon, they can prove useful in a number of situations.

Enchanted arrows, bolts, and sling bullets are activated and fired from ranged weapons. You must load magic ammunition before you can activate and fire it (spending whatever action is necessary to do so), and it's used up when fired. When used with powers that target multiple enemies, magic ammunition affects only the first attack roll or target after it's loaded. In certain circumstances (such as when loading is a free action), however, a ranged attacker can load more magic ammunition during an attack against multiple targets if desired.

Ammunition applies an enhancement bonus to an attack roll and damage roll when used. If the projectile weapon is magical, use the ammunition's enhancement bonus in place of the weapon's enhancement bonus. The weapon's critical bonus and the properties from both the weapon and the ammuniton still apply. Using magic ammunition doesn't prevent you from activating a magic weapon's powers.

You can fire magic ammunition without activating it, using your weapon's enhancement bonus and receiving no benefit from the ammunition's magic. The ammunition is still expended.

Armor-Sapping Ammunition

The first armor-sapping ammunition was imbued with primal power, but the secret of crafting these deadly projectiles quickly spread throughout all magical traditions. Primal warriors often fight best in light or no armor, which can put them at a disadvantage against heavily armored foes. This ammunition evens the odds by stripping a creature of its armor's strength.

Firesight Ammunition

An unseen foe can turn an evenly matched fight into a deadly rout in a heartbeat. For the heroes who hunted the most powerful magical monsters of ancient days, they dreaded most the creatures that had the ability to become invisible. To even the odds, those heroes crafted the first firesight ammunition. Carved of sturdy oak and pulsing with a soft white glow, this ammunition bursts into brilliant white specks that cling to any creature it touches, making that creature visible despite its efforts to vanish once more.

Foe-Seeker Ammunition

Foe-seeker ammunition is usually crafted from a piece of ebony inlaid with glowing runes that make the projectile strike true. It is said that no one is safe once foe-seeker ammunition is fired. Even if the target should avoid its doom, another enemy will succumb to the projectile's magic as it seeks out a target.

Foe-Seeker Ammunition — Level 12+ Uncommon

This arrow creates a magical link between you and your enemies, making each of your shots more accurate than the last until you strike home.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 12 | +3 | 500 gp | Lvl 22 | +5 | 13,000 gp |
| Lvl 17 | +4 | 2,600 gp | Lvl 27 | +6 | 65,000 gp |

Ammunition

Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls

Property

When you make an attack using this ammunition, you gain a +1 item bonus to the attack roll. If you miss, during your next turn, choose another target within range of the original square you attacked from and make the attack again as a minor action, increasing the item bonus by 1. You can repeat the attack this way each round (and increase the item bonus) until the attack hits or until the end of the encounter.

Reaving Ammunition

Too many times in the heat of battle, an enemy will shrug off a wound from a ranged attack. An attacker using reaving ammunition has no such worries. Its rough-carved shape makes this projectile seem unlikely to fly true, let alone hit with deadly force.

Reaving ammunition

However, after reaving ammunition strikes, it twists and turns within the wound. A foe so injured must either cope with the pain as the arrow bores into it, or spend precious time tearing it free.

Reaving Ammunition Level 8+ Uncommon

When this arrow finds its target, it burrows deep, causing great pain.

| Lvl 8 | +2 | 125 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 17,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 650 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 85,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | +4 | 3,400 gp | | | |

Ammunition

Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls

Property

When you hit an enemy with an attack using this ammunition, that enemy also takes ongoing 5 damage until it spends a move action (without moving) to end the ongoing damage.

Level 13 or 18: Ongoing 10 damage.

Level 23 or 28: Ongoing 15 damage.

Shadowshaft Ammunition

A piece of shadowshaft ammunition has a blunt head that appears to shimmer and flow as though made of dark mist. Shadar-kai explorers first crafted this ammunition in the mortal realm after realizing the disadvantage they faced when fighting in the clear light of the sun.

Shadowshaft Ammunition Level 5+ Uncommon

A dark haze trails behind this arrow as you fire it, exploding in a burst of clinging shadow upon impact.

| | | | | | |

| Lvl 5 | +1 | 50 gp | Lvl 20 | +4 | 5,000 gp |
| Lvl 10 | +2 | 200 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 25,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 1,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 125,000 gp |

Ammunition

Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls

Property

When you make an attack using this ammunition, whether the attack hits or misses, it creates a zone in a burst 1 centered on the target. The zone is heavily obscured, and it lasts until the end of the encounter.

Shiver-Strike Ammunition

This ammunition was first crafted by the elite high guard of the eladrin realms, whose members prided themselves on their ability to fight against superior numbers. When foes push in, archers can unleash these plain steel projectiles, which suddenly shiver and split upon impact, unleashing a hail of destruction upon everything nearby.

Shiver-Strike Ammunition Level 5+ Uncommon

When it strikes, this bolt splits, spraying nearby creatures with shards of steel.

| Lvl 15 | +3 | 1,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 125,000 gp |

Ammunition

Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls

Property

When you hit an enemy with an attack using this ammunition, each other creature in a burst 2 centered on that enemy takes 4 damage.

Level 15 or 20: 8 damage.

Level 25 or 30: 12 damage.

Stonehold Ammunition

A single moment to regroup and reposition is sometimes all that's needed to turn the tide of combat. The dwarves who created stonehold ammunition used thin black stone in its crafting. Upon impact, the projectile shatters, showering the target in a haze of piercing stone and rooting it in place for a short time.

Stonehold Ammunition Level 14+ Uncommon

A shroud of stone fragments erupts from this bolt when it hits, holding your foe in place.

CHAPTER 3

Implements

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

WHERE WOULD we wizards be without the aid of wands, staffs, and orbs? Who among us does not draw comfort from donning the creaking leather of a brace of wands or from feeling the wear-smoothed heft of a familiar staff in hand? Just as the paladin stabs at evil more powerfully with a holy avenger, so do our spells increase in potency when we direct them with a magic implement.

Of course, the tools of our trade can be used by others, and there are implements beyond our favored three. The holy symbols of warriors of the gods are the most obvious example, but magic implements come in a variety of other forms. Some people utilize primitive totems imbued with the ability to connect with spirits of the natural world. Others wield blades as we wield wands, or even find a way to channel magical energy through meditation.

I have collected an array of the most powerful of these items, and those that serve no purpose for me I subject to disjunction. You might find this act cruel. How, you might ask, can I deprive the world of such treasures, callously destroying pieces of often-priceless magical craftwork passed down through the generations?

Yet I know you better than that. You would have them for your own sake, perhaps one day to use them against me.

Although it's true that powerful implements are works of incomparable beauty, so too can a displacer beast be thought of as lovely or the appearance of a wyvern inspire awe. And like those beasts, such items should not be loosed upon children. You are not yet ready to wield all the powers at my disposal. I protect you from yourself. Count yourself lucky that I provide you with knowledge of those implements described herein.

—Mordenkainen, from his master copy of the Magnificent Emporium

Scholar's Note: The final three paragraphs of Mordenkainen's introduction to this chapter showed a marked stress in his typically fluid pen strokes. Though it cannot be confirmed, it is the belief of this scholar that the paranoia evinced in his words might be due to a curse or even possession by some foreign spirit. Doubtless Mordenkainen could have held thoughts such as those he expresses here, but it is unlike him to betray such concerns so candidly.

Superior Implements

Formed of exotic materials and created using magical crafting techniques, superior implements enhance a wielder's magic. Despite their magical origin, superior implements aren't magic items per se, and like non-superior implements, they can be enchanted with the Enchant Magic Item ritual.

Each type of superior implement has one or more properties that enhance its wielder's attack powers, such as granting improved accuracy or increasing forced movement. These properties are comparable to the properties that many weapons have.

Wielding a Superior Implement

You need the Superior Implement Training feat (below) to gain the benefits of a specific superior implement. If you wield a superior implement and don't have the feat for it, you don't gain the benefits of its properties, but you can use it as a normal implement of its type, assuming you have proficiency with implements of that type.

Superior Implement Training

With careful study and practice, you have unlocked the magical potential in an implement.

Benefit: You can use a single superior implement of your choice. The implement must be of a type with which you have proficiency.

Special: You can take this feat more than once. Each time you take this feat, choose a different superior implement.

Properties

Accurate: You gain a +1 bonus to implement attack rolls made with an accurate implement.

Deadly: You gain a +1 bonus to the damage rolls of implement attacks made with a deadly implement. The bonus increases to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

Distant: The range of your area and ranged implement attack powers increases by 2 when they're used through a distant implement.

Empowered Crit: When you score a critical hit with an implement attack using an empowered crit implement, the attack deals 1d10 extra damage (this damage is not maximized). The extra damage increases to 2d10 at 11th level and 3d10 at 21st level.

Energized: When you use an implement attack power with an energized implement, you gain a +2 bonus to damage rolls if the power has a keyword that matches the implement's damage type. The bonus increases to +3 at 11th level and +4 at 21st level.

Forceful: Whenever you pull, push, or slide a target with an implement attack using a forceful implement, you can increase the distance of the forced movement by 1 square.

Shielding: Whenever you hit at least one target with an implement attack power using a shielding implement, you gain a +1 shield bonus to AC and Reflex until the start of your next turn.

Undeniable: You gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll when you make an implement attack against Will using an undeniable implement.

Unerring: You gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll when you make an implement attack against Reflex using an unerring implement.

Unstoppable: You gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll when you make an implement attack against Fortitude using an unstoppable implement.

Descriptions

Daggers: An accurate dagger is a weapon with a very narrow blade, resembling a stiletto. An incendiary dagger features a wavy blade that was forged by tiefling weapon makers using ancient techniques of Bael Turath. A lancing dagger is made of metal drawn from tall mountains and features two jagged edges, giving it the shape of a lightning bolt. A resonating dagger has a thick, wide blade that narrows only slightly as it approaches the tip.

Holy Symbols: An accurate symbol is carved with symbols of power that channel divine energy more precisely. An astral symbol is crafted of solidified mist from the Astral Sea and glows with a faint silvery light. A warding symbol has protective glyphs carved into its adamantine surface. A wrathful symbol is made from black iron mined in Chernoggar and engraved with runes of divine fury.

Ki Focuses: An accurate ki focus takes the form of a small, smooth stone disc, etched with the ancient divided-circle symbol. An inexorable ki focus consists of a small scroll containing a single calligraphic character, preserved in a leather tube. An iron ki focus is a teardrop-shaped piece of iron about the size of a thumb, covered with small etchings. A mighty ki focus is a hand-sized square of wood, about an inch thick, that has been cut from a plank split or struck by a famous master. A mountain ki focus is a small stone statuette of a guardian monster, such as a dragon or a sphinx. A serene ki focus is a clear quartz crystal, mounted in a reliquary of bronze or silver.

Orbs: An accurate orb is made of clear blown glass, with tiny runes engraved around its equator. A crystal orb looks similar, but has a faceted surface and might appear in any color. A greenstone orb is carved from a heavy metallic stone that has an affinity for acid magic. A petrified orb is made from petrified wood.

Rods: An accurate rod is made from a shaft of silver, bound with golden bands. An ashen rod is made from fire-blackened hardwood and laced with veins of crystallized red sap. A deathbone rod is formed from the bone of an undead creature that is no longer animate. A defiant rod is made of white gold and studded with crystals or gemstones.

Staffs: An accurate staff is smooth and straight, balanced for easy handling and made of polished hardwood. A guardian staff is formed from an uncut branch of a watcher tree, a variety of oak that grows only in the Feywild. A mindwarp staff is made of light, strong wood, topped with a many-faceted crystal. A quickbeam staff is made of rowan wood cut from a tree that has been struck by lightning.

Tomes: The cover of an echo tome is a plate of iron inlaid with silver, and its pages are thin sheets of mithral engraved with arcane secrets. A forbidden tome has a heavy cover and binding, with a lock to keep it closed to prying eyes. An unspeakable tome is bound in straps of iron so that it cannot be opened, but it imparts the knowledge it contains through sinister whispers in the night.

Totems: An accurate totem is a short rod of light wood wrapped in snakeskin. A farseeing totem consists of eagle feathers tied at one end of a roc's bone. An icicle totem is a shaft of unmelting ice, freezing cold to the touch but wrapped with white fur to protect the wielder's hand. A storm totem is made from wood scorched by lightning and adorned with a thunderhawk's feather.

Wands: An accurate wand is a smooth and straight length of light wood, honed to a point at the tip. A cinder wand, in contrast, is blackened and crooked, and warm to the touch. A dragontooth wand is smooth ivory that is bound with bands of gold. A rowan wand is polished wood engraved with lightning motifs.

Magic Implements

Soon after mortals mastered the art of magic, they learned to focus their arts to produce implements imbued with magic. Any magic implement adds might and accuracy to magical attacks, but more unusual versions are painstakingly crafted to add unique flourishes to such attacks.

Holy Symbols

A holy symbol of a deity serves as both an icon of that god's power and a conduit of divine energy. The design or physical nature of some magic holy symbols makes obvious the faith, or at least the moral stance, of whoever wields them. Most holy symbols come in a form that can be appropriate for a number of different deities.

Many religious people consider it blasphemous for someone to wield a holy symbol dedicated to an enemy god, but some who use holy symbols treasure such items. After all, a cleric of Pelor bearing a symbol of Lolth stands as a clear sign sign that the god of the sun can overcome the Spider Queen and her followers.

Candle of Invocation

This holy symbol takes the form of a simple candle, its power and sanctity evident to all who are attuned to the divine. When the candle is lit, it enhances the wielder's ability to make his or her faith manifest. That faith fills one of the wielder's allies with courage, allowing him or her to turn a failed attempt into a success.

Candle of Invocation — Level 8+ Uncommon

The radiance of this holy symbol both lights your way and helps you overcome the challenges that block the path.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 8 | +2 | 3,400 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | +4 | 85,000 gp | | | |

Implement: Holy symbol
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 radiant damage per plus

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)
Effect: The candle casts bright light in a radius of 4 squares. The light lasts until you extinguish it as a minor action or until you are no longer holding the candle.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Immediate Interrupt)
Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you fails a skill check while the candle is lit.
Effect: The candle's light is extinguished, and the ally gains a power bonus to the skill check equal to 2 + the candle's enhancement bonus.

Necklace of Prayer Beads

This strand of semiprecious stones appears to be humble jewelry until it is worn by one who can channel its power. Typically made of three kinds of enchanted stones, a necklace of prayer beads enables its wearer to choose from the same number of benefits each time the magic of the necklace is called upon. Some crafters have tried to make necklaces with different features, but without any success to date.

Necklace of Prayer Beads — Level 10+ Rare

The beads that hang from this necklace glow with divine power that you can call upon to overcome any challenge.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 10 | +2 | 5,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp | | | |

Implement: Holy symbol
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)
Effect: Choose one of the following benefits.
- ✦ You and each ally within 5 squares of you can make a saving throw.
- ✦ Until the end of this turn, your healing powers restore the maximum number of hit points possible.
- ✦ Once before the end of your next turn, when you miss with a divine attack power, you can reroll the attack roll. You must use the second result.

Candle of invocation

TYLER JACOBSON

Phylactery of Faithfulness

The wielder of this holy symbol gains the power to perceive strands of the future and to realize when a possible action would adversely affect the wielder's standing with his or her deity. Such actions might include failing to complete a divine quest or allowing a companion to fall before that person had played his or her part in the gods' grand design.

Phylactery of Faithfulness — Level 14+ Rare

You attune yourself to this symbol of your god and gain insight into your deity's will.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |

Implement: Holy symbol
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You ask a single question about two possible courses of action, and a feeling of certainty informs you which course of action is most consistent with your deity's will, or if neither is consistent with it. At the DM's discretion, your deity's answer might provide some insight into the dangers and risks that course involves. These insights are never more than vague hints.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Immediate Interrupt)

Trigger: An attack hits an ally within 5 squares of you.
Effect: The ally gains a power bonus to all defenses against that attack. The bonus equals the phylactery's enhancement bonus.

If you know the word "phylactery," you probably associate it with that vile curse of magic set loose upon the world, lichdom. Yet it comes from an archaic language wherein the root of the word means "to guard" or "guard post." Thus, the lich who creates a phylactery is quite literally guarding its immortality. Today the term is rightly more broadly used for various amulets and small containers worn about the neck or head. A locket worn about your neck with a lover's hair clasped inside is, in all senses of the word, a phylactery. To take the analogy back to the topic at hand: The phylactery of faithfulness therefore serves as a guardian of the wearer's faith. Ironic that faith should need guarding. Is not unshakable belief the very definition of faith?

BRIAN HAGAN

Symbol of the sun

Symbol of the Sun

The undead are considered sacrilegious by most non-evil faiths, and the symbol of the sun was created to help cleanse the world of such abominations. During creation, these items are plated with gold beneath the noontime sun on a cloudless day, imbuing them with the ability to enhance the wielder's attacks against undead creatures.

Symbol of the Sun — Level 4+ Common

Crafted from polished gold, this holy symbol intensifies and reflects light like a mirror.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 4 | +1 | 840 gp | Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp |
| Lvl 9 | +2 | 4,200 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |

Implement: Holy symbol
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 radiant damage per plus

Properties

- ✦ When you pull, push, or slide an undead creature with an attack using this implement, you can increase the distance of the forced movement by 1 square.
- ✦ You gain a +2 item bonus to the damage rolls you make with this implement against undead creatures.
  Level 14 or 19: +4 item bonus.
  Level 24 or 29: +6 item bonus.

Ki Focuses

As a tool designed to sharpen the mind and train the body to adapt to a unique fighting style, the ki focus is unusual among implements. The wielder of a ki focus rarely uses it in battle directly. Instead, its wielder draws upon the knowledge and magical patterns intrinsic in his or her motions and actions to gain the benefits of the ki focus's enchantment.

Body of Fire Ki Focus

The physical form of this ki focus is a colorless oil. To unlock its power, the user spreads the oil over his or her hands and visualizes fighting a hated enemy until the oil bursts into flame for a brief, painless second. The user must contain and internalize the flame through an act of will each time the inner fire is unleashed. In times of anger or stress, smoke rises from the user's skin.

Body of Fire Ki Focus — Level 4+ Uncommon

This oil fuels a fire within you that might smolder or might blaze forth, but will never be extinguished.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 4 | +1 | 840 gp | Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp |
| Lvl 9 | +2 | 4,200 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |

Implement: Ki focus
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 fire damage per plus

Property

All damage dealt by attacks using this implement is fire, unless the damage already has a type.

Utility Power (Fire) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, you gain resist 5 fire and vulnerable 5 cold. If a creature is grabbing you or being grabbed by you at the start of its turn, it takes 5 fire damage.
Level 14 or 19: Resist 10 fire, vulnerable 10 cold, and 10 fire damage.
Level 24 or 29: Resist 15 fire, vulnerable 15 cold, and 15 fire damage.

Steadfast Stone Ki Focus

The steadfast stone ki focus is a simple stone that represents the value of patience and tenacity applied with relentless discipline. Focusing ki into this item involves taking it into your hand and slowly applying more and more pressure. The stone's unyielding strength molds the wielder's ki to emulate the unyielding nature of rock.

Steadfast Stone Ki Focus — Level 9+ Common

This plain, round stone reveals the secrets of strength and tenacity, allowing you to mimic its impervious nature.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 9 | +2 | 4,200 gp | Lvl 24 | +5 | 525,000 gp |
| Lvl 14 | +3 | 21,000 gp | Lvl 29 | +6 | 2,625,000 gp |
| Lvl 19 | +4 | 105,000 gp | | | |

Implement: Ki focus
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus

Property

Attacks made with this ki focus ignore 5 of any resistance.
Level 14 or 19: Ignore 10 of any resistance.
Level 24 or 29: Ignore 15 of any resistance.

Steadfast stones

KI FOCUS RULES

A ki focus is an implement that certain characters use as a focus for their inner magical energy, known as ki. A ki focus might take the form of a training manual, a scroll of ancient secrets, a battered training weapon, or a cherished memento.

Attunement: Before you can use a ki focus, you must attune yourself to it. To attune yourself to a ki focus, you must have the item on your person during a short or an extended rest and must have proficiency with ki focuses. Some characters study their ki focus to attune themselves to it. Others meditate with it or wield it as they practice using fighting techniques. The ki focus that you are attuned to occupies your ki focus item slot.

Whenever you take a rest, you can attune yourself to a ki focus in your possession, but you can be attuned to only one ki focus at a time. Also, only one creature at a time can be attuned to a particular ki focus. Once you attune yourself to a ki focus, no one else can become attuned to it until you are no longer attuned to it or you are dead.

Using a Ki Focus: Once you have attuned yourself to a ki focus, you must either wear it or hold it in order to use it as an implement.

Ki Focuses and Weapon Attacks: If you use a magic ki focus, you can add its enhancement bonus to the attack rolls and the damage rolls of weapon attacks you make using a weapon with which you have proficiency. If you have both a magic ki focus and a magic weapon, you choose before you use an attack power whether to draw on the magic of the ki focus or that of the weapon. Your choice determines which enhancement bonus, critical hit effects, and magic item properties and powers you can apply to that power. You can't, for example, use the enhancement bonus of your ki focus and the critical hit effect of your magic weapon on the same attack.

Tidal Wave Ki Focus

The monastery that originated the use of this ki focus—a scroll bearing the image of a wave—teaches the importance of remaining centered through a parable: "Towers stand fast before the tidal wave and are destroyed; the leaf rides the crest because it flows with the wave's power." Devotees of the school are famed for using a foe's momentum to send the enemy crashing into other enemies, knocking them all sprawling.

Tidal Wave Ki Focus — Level 8+ Uncommon

You hit an enemy and concentrate on this ki focus, sending that foe staggering backward to the ground.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 8 | +2 | 3,400 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | +4 | 85,000 gp | | | |

Implement: Ki focus
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus

Attack Power ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You hit an enemy with a melee attack using this ki focus.
Effect: You push that enemy up to a number of squares equal to the ki focus's enhancement bonus. At the end of the push, that enemy and each of your enemies adjacent to it fall prone.

Orbs

An orb channels magic in a manner reminiscent of its shape. Arcane power flows around its surface, seeming to gain strength with each revolution, until that power is unharnessed.

Orb of Enduring Magic

The archmage Bigby is renowned for his skill in weaving conjurations. He created Bigby's grasping hand, Bigby's icy grasp, and similar powers that call forth fist-shaped constructs of arcane magic to hold enemies at bay. To help him employ such spells, Bigby created the orb of enduring magic. It enables its wielder to keep his or her spells active even if he or she is hampered or otherwise unable to focus full attention on them. As a side benefit, drawing on such magic lends the orb's wielder a measure of vitality that helps him or her shrug off attacks.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: You sustain all of your active powers that can be sustained with a minor action. In addition, you gain temporary hit points equal to 2 + the orb's enhancement bonus.

Although I know of many wizards who use them, I've never been fond of orbs. Most are too large to fit in a pocket, too round to comfortably hold, and too cumbersome by half. I've had better results bowling an orb in a game of skittles than employing one on a battlefield. However, I cannot deny that many orbs of tremendous power exist. My friend Otiluke has always had a peculiar fondness for them. A few tankards short of a keg, that one. Anything circular excited his interest. It's good he never met a beholder while alone. He'd probably have prattled on to it, fascinated by its nature and caught firmly under the gaze of its central eye until it gobbled him up. Otiluke himself created many magical orbs. Often they possessed the power to cast his many sphere and orb spells. I'd use an orb made by Otiluke. I miss his whimsy.

Orb of Forceful Magic

At first glance, an orb of forceful magic looks like a sphere of transparent glass, but touching this item reveals its true nature. The orb is a focused sphere of coalesced force, held in place by the magic that created the item. Spells channeled through it batter their targets with greater impact, sending enemies staggering.

Property

When you pull, push, or slide an enemy with an attack using this orb, you can increase the distance of the forced movement by 1 square.

Orb of Relentless Sympathy

This orb often takes the form of a head sculpted in bronze or clay. Its wielder can link the sensations of nearby minds through it. An enemy that harms one of the wielder's friends feels the pain it has inflicted—and that pain is magnified. The wielder is not entirely detached from the process, however; the orb's shielding cannot entirely protect him or her if any mind within range suffers a grievous wound.

Orb of Relentless Sympathy Level 4+ Uncommon

This orb empathically links you and your allies' physical senses to your enemy's mind, causing it to feel your pain when it harms you.

Property
You gain an item bonus to Insight checks equal to the orb's enhancement bonus.

Attack Power (Psychic) ✦ Daily (No Action)
Trigger: You hit a target with an attack using this orb.
Effect: The target takes psychic damage equal to 2 + the orb's enhancement bonus at the end of any of its turns during which it hit you or one of your allies. This effect lasts until the end of the encounter or until you end it as a minor action. If the target drops to 0 hit points while this power is in effect, you lose a healing surge (or you take damage equal to your healing surge value if you have no surges remaining).

Prismatic Orb

The seven pure colors of the rainbow decorate the surface of this orb. Each hue is represented by a shell of luminous force formed by the crystal at the orb's heart. The wielder can channel each of the shells in turn and hurl them at a target, enclosing it in a hindering globe of brightly hued energy. Although the sequence of alternating colors appears to be random, some texts claim that certain shades presage danger or opportunity.

Many who live in the Feywild claim that the first prismatic orb was crafted in their realm. A human mage from the world who loved the magic and the primal energy of the Feywild often traveled to that realm, taking special delight in the amazing rainbows that always emerged after a storm passed (and sometimes without a storm). The mage discovered a way to harness the power of the lingering rainbows, infusing their light in an orb carved from a type of crystal from the Feydark. Whether this story is true or not, those who face the power held within a prismatic orb quickly learn to fear anyone wielding this powerful item.

BETH TROTT

Stone of Good Luck

The first gnome clan to experiment with luck stones learned to their sorrow that fate often acts decisively to restore the balance between good luck and bad. To avoid tempting fate, a well-crafted stone of good luck rearranges the wielder's luck so that good fortune arrives when it is most needed.

Rods

The rod is the signature implement for warlocks, although some other practitioners of the mystic arts employ implements of this sort. Compact and easy to handle, a rod also makes a good choice for a warrior who dabbles in spellcasting.

Rod of Absorption

This rod, which typically takes the form of an elaborately carved metal cylinder, appears otherwise unremarkable until one notices how lights dim and sounds become muted in its vicinity. The ability of these rods to negate hostile energy was highly valued during the Dawn War. Some immortals who fought in those battles, and whose perceptions of reality and memory often mix, might mistake anyone wielding a rod of absorption for an enemy officer from that ancient war.

Rod of Absorption — Level 4+ Rare

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Immediate Interrupt)
Trigger: You are targeted by a close attack power or an area attack power that has a damage keyword.
Effect: The attacker takes a -5 penalty to all of the power's attack rolls.

Warlocks make strange bargains. Although many claim to have stolen their might from some source, I have a hard time believing anyone can get something for nothing. Plus, it's hard to trust the word of an admitted thief—and one that would take the easy route to magical power rather than go through the long process of study or religious devotion. No, warlocks are not to be trusted, nor are their tools. While some other spellcasters take up the skill of manipulating magic with rods, I cannot recommend that anyone do so. The taint of warlocks' pacts cling to these objects. What promises were made to imbue them with power? Whose souls were lost in order to make a creature's bone or a bar of iron into a weapon of magic? Of course, many dark deeds have been done to create great magic—by myself included—but a rod might still be linking its wielder to whatever entity imbued its creator with power.

Rod of Beguiling

This rod gives its wielder control over an enemy by playing on the foe's greed and reflexive submission to authority. The rod seems to be a crude lead scepter until its power is activated, at which point others see its shaft turn golden and its gem-covered head sparkle. Enemies that view the rod in this transformed state are briefly fooled into thinking that the wielder is on their side. Even when the power is not called forth, mere possession of the rod gives its owner an advantage when dealing with others.

Utility Power (Charm) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: Until the end of your next turn, enemies cannot attack you, or target you with any effect that targets an enemy. An enemy ignores this effect if you attack it, if it is marked by you, or if it is in your defender aura.

Rod of Death

These grim rods are often made of wood from a gallows where someone sentenced to be hanged escaped the noose. The wielder of this rod can empower it by choosing to step closer to the grave. There is no obvious cost to doing so twice, as long as the wielder is not brought to death's door by bodily harm. Those who do so on a third occasion discover that the rod becomes less useful for a time.

Rod of death

Rod of Revenge

Crafted from wood harvested from the darkest corners of the Feywild, a rod of revenge enables its wielder to lash out effectively against an enemy that has just landed a blow on that individual. Any foe that's the target of the rod's power might be less likely to seek out the wielder as the battle continues, having seen firsthand what can happen if that creature presses its attack.

Rod of Smiting

This rod is nearly unbreakable. Stories abound of those who wield such items catching an opponent off guard with a seemingly weak swing that cracks bones and smashes skulls. A rod of smiting bestows the strength of an enchanted mace upon attacks made through it, imparting tremendous force to those blows.

STAFFS

A staff is perhaps the most commonly recognized magic implement, because of both its size and its place in folklore and legend. Some of the mightiest wizards in history have used staffs to channel and focus magical power. A staff's size and heft make it the ideal choice for a defensive implement that can ward off attacks while delivering powerful spells.

Greater Staff of Power

Though firm knowledge of its origin has been lost, many believe the first greater staff of power to be a copy of a copy of a staff wielded by Corellon in the Dawn War. The thousands of runes that cover this gnarled staff glow with an eerie green light and hint at the versatility of the magic harnessed within. Those wielders who are cognizant of the fundamental nature of energy find many ways to mold and manipulate the staff's features to great benefit.

Greater staff of power

WAYNE ENGLAND

I have seen many sticks called a staff of power in my time. It seems like any mage that gets a hold of a magic staff wants to call it his "staff of power." I suppose that lacking real power gives one the desire for its trappings. Know that a true staff of power is no trifling thing. They contain a raw might uncommon in other enchanted items. Their power can turn aside blows, change fate, and preserve the wilder's life in the most dire circumstances. Great things can be accomplished by a mage with a staff of power. Great and terrible things.

Staff of Command

To create this staff, arcane crystals are dissolved in a solution. The supersaturated solution is kept in absolute silence until the crafter speaks a word in Primordial. The vibrations of his or her voice ordering the staff to form cause the solution to draw forth from its container and crystallize into a long, tapering shard. Anyone who carries a staff of command is viewed by others with a measure of respect, and when the item is used in

Staff of Striking

When its special power is ready for use, a staff of striking emits a deep, ominous hum until its wielder delivers a blow to his or her foe. Even unintelligent enemies instinctively recognize the danger inherent in a staff of striking, making it as effective for performing feints and threats as for making actual strikes in melee. Wizards in particular favor these implements, since the gentlest tap from a staff of striking sends an enemy stumbling away.

Staff of the Viper

Some lore-gatherers among the yuan-ti have claimed that the first staff of the viper was made in memory of the snake that taught mortals the secret of constructing magic items. Despite the item's most commonly known name and its appearance when it is used, other scholars and historians do not agree that the staff expressly captures the essence of a snake—after all, they say, poisonous attacks are not the domain of ophidians alone.

The wielder of this sinuous, rough-carved wooden staff can cause the staff's head to shape itself into the head of a snake that delivers a venomous strike.

TYLER JACOBSON

Staff of Withering

This staff resembles an old, gnarled tree branch blackened with rot and mold. A cruel wizard-prince who had no need for a dungeon or a prison in his realm created the original staff of withering. He used the staff, which was the symbol of his power, upon criminals and rebels in his realm, aging them to infirmity with a single touch.

In time, the tyrant fell to the might of druids and elves whose forest he sought to conquer and despoil. The triumphant druids destroyed the original staff, but lesser copies employed by his inquisitors spread across the world. Any spellcaster bearing a staff of withering can expect a hostile reaction to the symbol of tyranny he or she carries.

TOMES

A rare sort of implement for an adventuring wizard, the tome offers great flexibility and power. Wizards ensconced in their towers typically employ tomes. Most adventuring wizards find a tome too bulky and unwieldy compared to an orb, a staff, or a wand, but all wizards see the great value in the lore that tomes contain.

Wizards are automatically proficient with using tomes as implements.

Emerald Tome of the Devourer

The first emerald tome of the devourer is said to have fallen from the sky as a shooting star. Many of those who have borne one of these implements have met untimely ends, and although this tome is often seen as an ill omen for that reason, it offers great benefits to those willing to use it.

When a nearby enemy is close to death, the bearer of this implement can invoke its special power to more easily dispatch that foe—but if the owner's death blow fails to land, the tome will devour the essence it seeks from within the one who holds it.

In everyday use, the tome appears to contain only blank pages for anyone but its owner, who can perceive magical writing that reveals insights into the world. That the tome comes from the realm of the fell stars is indisputable. Whoever grasps one of these tomes sees darkness fall away, his or her vision illuminated by the cold, pale light of a distant star.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)
Effect: You gain a +2 item bonus to your next attack roll before the end of your next turn. If that attack hits, you gain an item bonus to its damage roll. The bonus equals 4 + the tome's enhancement bonus. If you do not kill a creature before the end of your next turn, you take damage equal to your healing surge value at the end of that turn. If this damage drops you below 1 hit point, you die.

I have little doubt that the so-called emerald tome of the devourer has its origins in what we have come to know as the Far Realm. There exist certain stellar beings—mistakes of the gods, victims of strange fates, vestiges of defeated beings of immense power, leftovers from the time of creation—that are somehow tied to that hidden plane. And it might be that the tome comes as a kind of message—or, more worryingly, as a spy—for one or more of these entities. That the Far Realm has spawned such horrors as mind flayers and aboleths is enough to convince me that such tomes present a threat regardless of the intent of their creators. I have expunged every such item I can find, but I'm certain that more lurk throughout the land, hidden in the cracks of the world or the robes of misguided spellcasters.

Magic tome

Magic Tome

The typical magic tome relies on the enchantments contained within the paper and ink that were used to craft it. Ingredients such as ink from dragon's blood, paper crafted from trees found within astral domains, and similarly rare materials combine to lend strength to spells cast through such a tome.

Manual of Expansive Learning

This little-seen tome is a compilation of mystic exercises and mnemonic techniques. The original one was crafted by a long-nameless adventuring mage who managed to infuse an ordinary object with the remarkable ability to "remember" a useful spell he had already cast.

When he tried to take his experiment one step further while on an adventure, the wizard found that he could even use the tome to summon forth an attack spell he had not thought to prepare. The strain of performing this act left the wizard sapped of some of his inner strength, which he considered a small price to pay.

Critical: +1d8 damage per plus

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)
Effect: You regain the use of one wizard encounter or daily utility power that you have already used. The power must be in your spellbook, and its level must be lower than the tome's level.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)
Requirement: You must be taking a short rest, have a spellbook, have at least one healing surge, and have expended all your wizard daily attack powers.
Effect: You lose a healing surge, but you gain the use of one wizard daily attack power from your spellbook that you did not prepare after your last extended rest. The power's level must be lower than the tome's level.

Manual of Puissant Skill

This tome's features, such as a waterproof cover, sturdy bindings, and stain-resistant pages, suggest it was designed for wizards who lead an unusually active lifestyle. Its codification of the best ways to overcome problems with skilled deeds reflects a quest for formulas by which all mortal knowledge might be studied and prepared in the same way as spells.

Manual of Puissant Skill Level 9+ Rare

This tome contains lore to improve your performance by training your mind and body.

Tome of Undeniable Might

An unremembered yet brilliant mage wrote this tome as a treatise on a theory she developed: that arcane magic taps into a state of being beyond the physical. According to her research, the physical world is merely an illusion, while arcane magic provides the true structure of the world. Although the archmage's name is now forgotten, the secrets contained within this tome allow casters to overcome some of the physical limits to their combat spells, keeping her legacy intact.

Tome of Undeniable Might Level 8+ Common

This plain, leather-bound tome appears to be a simple treatise on arcane magic, but at your touch, it gives your powers the ability to affect creatures not of the world.

JOHN STANKO

TOTEMS

Totems allow druids and other users of primal magic to gather and direct energy. Most totems are linked to a symbolic event, creature, or concept in the natural world.

Totem of Thorns

All living things feel pain. This totem is based on that truth, storing up the wielder's pain to unleash it upon his or her enemies as a concentrated wave of agony. Owners of a totem of thorns are typically eager to enter combat, since battle is a constructive way to keep the totem supplied with the hurt it channels.

Totem of Thorns Level 5+ Uncommon

This totem is carved from a briar vines with their thorns left intact, so that it cannot be gripped without drawing blood.

Implement: Totem
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 psychic damage per plus, or +1d10 psychic damage per plus if you are bloodied

Attack Power (Psychic) ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: You hit a target with an attack using this totem while you are bloodied.
Effect: The target takes extra psychic damage equal to the number of healing surges you have spent since your last extended rest.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Requirement: You must be bloodied.
Effect: You lose a healing surge, and you gain temporary hit points equal to 5 + your healing surge value + the totem's enhancement bonus.

I must admit to some ignorance surrounding magical totems. I've always seen them as the cursed domain of grubby, shamanistic savages like orcs and gnolls. Apparently, there exist some druids who utilize them, although I doubt very much that such druids differ much from orcs. Perhaps that was too unkind, but I find myself at odds with druids as often as not. While many druids talk of the need for balance in the world, we of the Circle of Eight desire a balance of power, not a balance between wilderness and civilization. The world is deadly. It needs taming, not protecting.

Totem of Trailblazing

Legends tell of a time when human tribes fled into the high mountains to escape a great calamity. The first totems of trailblazing were crafted to help explorers who ventured back to the lowlands, trying to find their way home. Supposedly, secret phrases or other passwords create a map on the totem, showing the location of the refuges where the tribes took shelter.

Totem of the Woodlands

This beautifully carved length of oak, ash, or yew is a symbol of the forest's abundance. Even when not channeled by its wielder, the totem's power is always active. Tales say that if one of these totems is left unattended next to a fence or a chair, it can cause vines and leaves to sprout from the once-living material.

Attack Power ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You hit a target with an attack using this totem.
Effect: The target is restrained (save ends).

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: You create a vine in your square that stretches to one unattended object you can see within 10 squares of you and twines around it. The vine is as strong as a rope and lasts until the end of the encounter or until you spend a minor action to cause the vine to retract. If the vine is twined around an object weighing less than 5 pounds, it can pull that object into your space when the vine retracts.

Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: You use a close or an area primal attack power with this totem.
Effect: The power's area of effect also creates a zone of difficult terrain that lasts until the end of your next turn.

WANDS

The wand is one of the most common kinds of implement, particularly among wizards. Wands are usually crafted with an attunement to a specific energy type or category of effect. A wand's size and design typically allow it to contain a limited range of magical abilities, but within that range it offers flexibility and expertise.

Apprentice's Wand

This simple wooden wand is a typical gift from a master to an apprentice. To ensure that an apprentice is never without an implement, this wand can be attuned to its user. With a simple gesture, the wand appears in its owner's hand, ready for use.

Apprentice's Wand — Level 2+ Common

This simple length of wood appears in your hand when you need it most.

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus

Properties

- ✦ You gain an item bonus to Arcana checks to sense the presence of magic. The bonus equals the wand's enhancement bonus.
- ✦ You can attune this wand to yourself during a short rest. It can be attuned to only one person at a time, and attuning it to one person breaks the attunement to anyone else.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: If the wand is attuned to you and on the same plane, it is transported to your hand, regardless of distance.

Wand of Conjuring

The few who are able to craft these items claim that they can be made only from a single source of metal found in the Feydark. The metal, taken from a vein of ore in a large underground cavern filled with waterfalls and other wonders, is unique because it is infused with magic from the blood of Corellon. That deity's blood fell upon the vein of ore when Lolth struck him during the surprise attack that sundered the alliance between Corellon, Sehanine, and Lolth that existed in antiquity. Those who tell these tales also speak of many terrible monsters that inhabit the cavern, warning off those who would try to replicate this wand.

Wand of Conjuring — Level 8+ Rare

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus, or +1d10 damage per plus when used with a conjuration attack

Utility Power (Varies, Zone) ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)

Effect: You create a zone in a wall 5 within 10 squares of you. The zone lasts until the end of your next turn. When you use this power, choose one of the following effects (a creature can take damage from the zone only once per turn):

Flame (Fire): Any creature that enters the zone or ends its turn there takes 5 fire damage.

Frost (Cold): Any creature that enters the zone or ends its turn there takes 2 cold damage, and it is slowed (save ends).

Darkness: The zone is heavily obscured.

Venom (Poison): The zone is lightly obscured, and any creature that enters the zone or ends its turn there takes 2 poison damage.

Level 13 or 18: Add 5 to the effect's damage, if any.

Level 23 or 28: Add 10 to the effect's damage, if any.

Wand of Fear

Pale light flickers along the length of this fractured crystal wand. Faces viewed in this light resemble skulls, while the visions seen by foes struck by the wand's energy are too horrible to be put into words. Those who wield a wand of fear often suffer nightmares. Sometimes these dreams contain omens of future events, although they are rarely interpreted in time to prevent them from coming true.

Wand of Fear — Level 3+ Uncommon

The only thing more unnerving than holding this pale wand is experiencing its horrific effects.

Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus

Property

You gain an item bonus to Intimidate checks equal to the wand's enhancement bonus.

Attack Power (Fear) ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: You hit a target with an attack using this wand.

Effect: You push the target up to a number of squares equal to the wand's enhancement bonus.

Wand of Fire

Typical materials used in the construction of these wands include flame-blackened wood, phoenix feathers, and salamander scales. Sages claim that the wizard Kelgore crafted a handful of these wands after becoming so angry that he sequestered himself from all mortal contact for a year. Although Kelgore himself was a bit of a comical figure, his enemies fled in terror when they saw him approaching in a fit of rage with one of these wands in hand.

Wand of Fire — Level 15+ Rare

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 fire damage per plus

Attack Power ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You hit a target with an at-will or encounter attack power that has the fire keyword using this wand.

Effect: The attack's fire damage is maximized against the target.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: The next area or close fire attack that you use during this turn with this wand does not target any of your allies who would otherwise be targeted by the attack.

Utility Power (Fire) ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: You cause one unattended, inanimate, flammable object (up to 1 square foot) that is adjacent to you to catch on fire.

Where would wizards be without wands? The wand is to the wizard what the sword is to the warrior. Yet how did it come to be such? Which came first, the wizard or the wand? As long as one has existed, it seems so has the other, but surely in some world at some time there must have been the first wizard and the first wand. The first sword was probably a piece of junk barely better than a club, but the first wand would have been magic incarnate. If it still exists, what powers might that first wand have? What features might it have collected over the eons and from the thousands who have wielded it? Such is the stuff of all wizards' dreams.

Wand of Frost

Some of these wands are carved of white dragon bone, while others are icicles made permanent and unbreakable. In use, a silver ray springs forth from the wand's tip to freeze a single enemy, or a single touch instantly turns water to ice. According to legend, each wand of frost is constructed to destroy a specific creature that is vulnerable to cold. Even if this is untrue, the tale is widespread enough to make it an effective threat.

Wand of Frost Level 4+ Rare

Snow drifts to the ground in the wake of this wand's silvery ray, as it freezes the air it passes through before striking your enemy.

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 cold damage per plus

Property
You gain cold resistance equal to 3 + twice the wand's enhancement bonus.

Attack Power ✦ Daily (No Action)
Trigger: You hit a target with a cold attack using this wand.
Effect: The target is immobilized (save ends).

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)
Effect: You touch an adjacent container, pool, or other body of water with the wand, and a number of contiguous squares within the body of water equal to 1 + the wand's enhancement bonus freeze into solid ice. Only one of the frozen squares has to be adjacent to you. The squares of ice are difficult terrain and remain solid until the end of the encounter. This effect cannot freeze a square if it contains any creatures.

Wand of Inevitability

This wand gathers spent magical energy to make its next attack more accurate. The springy, flexible wood used to construct the wand reflects its ability to absorb and redirect energy. In some lands, a wand of inevitability is standard equipment for wizards who are members of a city watch or a group of noble's bodyguards.

Wand of Inevitability Level 3+ Common

This wand, crafted from light, supple wood, allows you to accurately strike your enemies with a flick of the wrist.

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus

Property
If you miss every target of an at-will attack power using this wand, you gain a +2 item bonus to the attack rolls of that power the next time you use it before the end of your next turn.

Wand of lightning

Wand of Lightning

Each of these wands is made from a slender glass or iron cylinder with metal bands spaced along its length. The wand of lightning is a self-renewing source of electrical energy that can be made to expel that energy to harmful effect.

In its most spectacular function, the wand embellishes its wielder's lightning attacks so that they also shock those nearby. It can also be used to electrify a metal object, making that object dangerous to the next creature that touches it. Even when otherwise dormant, the wand gives off a static shield that delivers a rebuking shock to attackers.

Wand of Lightning Level 8+ Rare

Whenever you use this wand to send arcs of lightning among your foes, the smell of ozone fills the air and your hair stands up on end.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 8 | +2 | 3,400 gp | Lvl 23 | +5 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | +3 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 28 | +6 | 2,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | +4 | 85,000 gp | | | |

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 lightning damage per plus

Property
When you use this wand to make a lightning attack, if any adjacent creature hits you with an attack before the start of your next turn, that creature takes lightning damage equal to 2 + the wand's enhancement bonus.

Attack Power (Lightning) ✦ Daily (No Action)
Trigger: You hit a target with a lightning attack using this wand.
Effect: Each creature adjacent to the target takes 10 lightning damage.
Level 13 or 18: 20 lightning damage.
Level 23 or 28: 30 lightning damage.

Utility Power (Lightning) ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)
Effect: You touch the wand to one adjacent, unattended metal object no larger than a Medium suit of armor. The next time a creature touches the object within the next 5 minutes, that creature takes lightning damage equal to 5 + the item's enhancement bonus.

BETH TROTT

Wand of Thunder

Crafted from brass and designed to maximize the damage unleashed by a thunder attack, a wand of thunder is a favorite of mages who favor brute force over a subtle approach. When used to focus a spell, the wand creates echoing blasts that, to the discriminating ear, resemble chords of music and sequences taken from ancient songs. Tales suggest that some of these wands are attuned to secret doors, hidden passages, and other locations deep within ancient arcane colleges and wizard's towers. Accessing these areas requires casting a specific spell with this wand to produce the tone or tune needed to unlock it.

The most common story of this sort suggests that one of these wands can be used to grant its owner access to Azarel's Tower, the abode of a long-dead archmage, which supposedly lies somewhere within the Dawnforge Mountains. It also suggests that anyone attempting to access the tower without such a wand to open the tower's hidden passages will find a quick end from the magic traps and immortal guardians still defending the place.

Wand of Thunder Level 13+ Rare

This brass wand, which resembles a miniaturized horn, will drive your enemies back with a wave of thunder, or drop them with a shock wave.

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 thunder damage per plus

Property

Once during each of your turns, when you hit with a thunder attack using this wand, you can push one creature adjacent to you 1 square.

Attack Power ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)

Attack: Close blast 5 (creatures and objects in the blast); the wand's level + 3 vs. Fortitude.
Hit: You push the target up to a number of squares equal to the wand's enhancement bonus and knock it prone.

Attack Power (Thunder) ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You hit a target with a thunder attack using this wand.
Effect: Each creature adjacent to the target takes 10 thunder damage and falls prone.
Level 23 or 28: 20 thunder damage.

Wand of Wonder

This strange and unpredictable device usually looks like some other type of wand. Most magewrights who craft one of these wands delight in surprising first-time wielders with its strange side effects. Over time, the wielder of a wand of wonder is likely to become familiar with its oddities, but it is impossible to predict when they will appear.

The mad warlock Loon, who delved too deeply into the secrets of the Far Realm, always carried one of these wands. To him, the wand's randomness was a measuring stick of the true order of the universe (or lack thereof), as he had been taught through dark dreams sent by those from the place beyond. Before his demise during the war between Bael Turath and Arkhosia, many claimed that he had been able to shape his own powers to match the randomness of his wand of wonder.

Legends tell of more powerful wands of wonder. These items are potentially powerful artifacts, but none can guess what might happen when the magic they contain is unleashed.

Wand of Wonder Level 7+ Rare

Few can call on the powers of this wand without a mingled sense of amazement and dread.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|

| Lvl 17 | +4 | 65,000 gp | | | |

Implement: Wand
Enhancement Bonus: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus. For each of these dice that rolls a 6, teleport the target 1 square. For each of these dice that rolls a 1, teleport yourself 1 square.

Property

When you use a daily attack power with this wand, roll a d6 to determine an additional effect, which lasts until the end of your next turn.

1. You gain a fly speed of 5.
2. Butterflies create a zone of partial concealment in your space.
3. You become invisible.
4. 2d20 fake, brightly colored gems appear in the space of the next target hit by the wand, temporarily creating difficult terrain.
5. Leaves grow from each target hit by the attack, causing it to be slowed.
6. You and each target hit by the attack are dazed.

Really, there's nothing wonderful about the mad warlock's wand.
One studies magic to master it, to bend the forces of the universe to one's will.

Magical Gear

HOWARD LYON

To catalogue all the wondrous items that exist would take a book of infinite pages, but it does us all well to have a firm grasp upon both the most common items and the rare items of incredible efficacy. Though some wondrous items are simple and of little impact, such as a lock opened only by a magic key, others have strange properties that defy the mind's attempt to grasp them, such as the portable hole.

What a wonder magic is! Unhindered by the rules that bind the physical universe or by the laws of mortals, it can routinely make the impossible possible.

A pair of wings on a pair of boots, each wing no bigger than a dove's, can lift the wearer of the boots into the air. A band of metal placed on a finger can provide the power to see through stone. A belt can grant its wearer the strength of a giant. You no doubt wonder how can magic do so much with such strange materials. Despite my many years, magic often surprises me as well. The occasions when it does are the delights of my life.

An inexperienced wizard, such as I myself once was, sees magic as a system—a secret set of instructions for rebuilding reality as you see fit. And it's true that even the most rudimentary uses of magic involve learning its language: how to say the right words, make the right gestures, and pull upon the threads of the skeins of arcane, divine, and primal energy that flow invisibly all around us.

Yet the true master knows the system to be false. The patterns we see in various forms of energy, the languages we learn to speak to manipulate them, the differences between one phenomenon and another, even the division between what is magic and what is mundane—all are false. Perhaps only the gods can fully grasp this concept, but the truth is that all things are part of the same continuum. Why else would magic of so many types accomplish much the same end, and why else are so many things—from old gloves to living beings to entire planes—able to be created and imbued with magic?

The true pity is that even upon recognizing that we are imprisoned by our faulty understanding of magic, none of us can escape it. We are like babes that for the first time realize a world exists outside our crib. Even if we had the wherewithal to explore beyond our boundaries, we could not conceive of the dangers that await us.

Perhaps that is what the gods are for. Certainly they've proved themselves good for little else.

—Mordenkainen, from his master copy of the Magnificent Emporium

Arms Slot Items

The items in this category are usually coveted for their protective qualities—though some of them, such as the aptly named bracers of infinite blades, are good for more than just defense.

Bracers of Infinite Blades

Some dragonborn know these gold-inlaid armbands as Menyra's bracers, for the Arkhosian court assassin who first commissioned them. Menyra was said to have drawn from the power of the bracers of infinite blades only to protect those in her charge. Most of the heroes who make use of this armgear have a more wide-reaching definition of self defense.

Bracers of Infinite Blades Level 11+ Common

With a flick of your wrist, a gleaming blade appears in your previously empty hand.

| Lvl 16 | 45,000 gp | Lvl 26 | 1,125,000 gp |

Arms Slot

Property

You can draw a +2 magic dagger from these bracers as though drawing it from a sheath (typically a minor action). The dagger lasts until the end of the current turn.

Level 16: +3 magic dagger.

Level 21: +4 magic dagger.

Level 26: +5 magic dagger.

Special: These bracers can be crafted to produce a different light thrown weapon, such as a shuriken.

Gleaming Diamond Bracers

Like many magic items made from gem and stone, gleaming diamond bracers were first crafted by the dwarves, and were worn as badges of honor by their most powerful clan lords. In battle, the bracers flare with a bright light when their magic absorbs an attack that might otherwise fell their wearer. In the Underdark, dwarf scouts who have become separated from their fellows look for this beacon in the darkness, which signals both a warning and a call to arms.

Gleaming Diamond Bracers Level 9+ Uncommon

Greater Stonewall Shield

Dwarf arcane crafters built the first greater stonewall shield, and among many of their clans, this essential defensive item is carried with the respect of a sacred relic. Its lacquered steel shell is inlaid with a tight mosaic of granite and marble chips, adding to its already considerable heft. Among the dwarves, it is said that each warrior who falls while wielding a greater stonewall shield imbues a fragment of his or her spirit into the shield's stonework. For this reason, the dwarves consider it a great honor to wield one of these shields, and they will go out of their way to retrieve one from a warrior who falls on the field of battle.

Effect: You create a wall 3 in unoccupied squares within 5 squares of you. At least 1 square of the wall must be adjacent to you, and the wall must be on a solid surface. The wall is blocking terrain. It can be up to 2 squares high, and has AC/Reflex 5, Fortitude 10, and resist 10 to all damage. A square of the wall is destroyed if it takes any damage.

Level 23: Wall 5 within 10 squares of you; resist 15 to all damage.

Greater Storm Shield

The all-wooden construction of this shield, which is bound in black leather and set with studs of white marble, features not a single pin, nail, or clip of metal. Said to have first been employed by druids, the greater storm shield is a stalwart defense against—and conduit for—the power of the storm. When the shield's power is used, the images of shifting clouds on its surface animate, becoming dark and riddled with lightning.

Ranging Defender Shield

As the story goes, an ancient merchant prince commissioned seven identical shields for his bodyguards to help them protect him, because he was despised so widely that more than ten thousand people had vowed to kill him. Whether or not the story is true, all seven known shields of this type bear a weasel rampant, the emblem of the trading house the merchant ruled.

In addition to its strong protective magic, a ranging defender shield has an additional enchantment that makes it well suited for its original purpose of defending another. With a command word, its wielder can transfer the shield's protective aegis to a nearby ally; a shimmering duplicate shield appears in the air next to that person to protect him or her from harm.

Ranging Defender Shield — Level 4+ Uncommon

You protect a comrade in danger by extending this shield's magical defenses to that ally.

Level 14: Resist 10 to all damage.

Level 24: Resist 15 to all damage.

Robilar once told me that if given a choice of a weapon or a shield, a warrior should always pick the shield. The premise, I presume, is that the shield guards your life and also can be used to strike a foe. It has not escaped my notice, however, that Robilar always wore his sword, even in peaceful company, but carried a shield only in times of known danger. The shield protects, but the sword swiftly kills that which threatens.

Searing shield

Searing Shield

To outward appearances, this shield seems nothing more than a finely made defensive item, perhaps holding some minor enchantment. But when the command word is spoken, the shield emanates a wall of light in front of its wielder to drive away the darkness like a beacon in the night. The light is so bright and pure that undead caught within its glare quail before it.

With a second word, the searing shield blazes with a halo of light that extends upward to the heavens. That radiance is so pure that it will sear the flesh of any undead creature that gets too close.

Searing Shield — Level 13 Uncommon

You send a wave of brilliant light outward from this shield to illuminate the darkness.

Arms Slot: Any shield 17,000 gp

Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: Close blast 5. The blast creates a zone of bright light that lasts until the end of the encounter or until you are no longer holding the shield. When you move, the zone moves with you, keeping the same orientation. Undead creatures grant combat advantage while in the zone. Once per round during your turn, you can reorient the zone as a free action.

Utility Power (Aura, Radiant) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: You activate an aura 1 that lasts until the end of the encounter or until you are no longer holding the shield. Any undead enemy that ends its turn in the aura takes 2 radiant damage. At night, the aura also sheds bright light in a column that extends upward, stopped only by blocking terrain.

Shield of Aversion

Though halflings are as fierce as any other warriors, many of them believe that the best way to win a fight is to avoid it altogether. Playing to this philosophy, the shield of aversion is one of the few magic items whose creation originated within the halfling clans, and it suits that race well. The halflings' predilection for lore sees many warriors of that race engrave these shields with carefully scribed tales of their own valor, allowing a warrior's prowess to be easily seen by his or her enemies. Halfling clans highly value shields of aversion, and they do not take it well when they see a member of another race carrying one as the spoils taken from a fallen halfling warrior.

Shield of Aversion Level 15 Uncommon

Even as your foe closes in to attack, you see its eyes cloud with uncertainty.

Arms Slot: Any shield 25,000 gp

Property

You gain a +4 item bonus to all defenses against charge attacks.

Utility Power (Charm) ✦ Daily (Immediate Interrupt)

Trigger: An enemy hits you with a melee attack while you are adjacent to another creature.

Effect: Choose a creature adjacent to you, other than the triggering enemy. The attack hits that creature instead of you.

Shield of the Doomed

For most warriors, the promise to fight to the death in the service of liege, country, and comrades is the ultimate expression of loyalty. For the elite imperial guard of Nerath, such a vow was not enough—they pledged to fight beyond death, using the magic of the shield of the doomed to fulfill that oath. It is said that no single blow can lay low the wielder of this battered steel and adamantine shield, and many foes have been shocked by the counterattack of a hero wielding one who should have breathed his or her last.

Shield of the Doomed Level 23 Rare

Thanks to the protective magic of this shield, you shrug off a fatal blow, giving you time to put your foe down.

Arms Slot: Heavy shield 425,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Immediate Interrupt)

Trigger: An attack drops you to below 1 hit point.

Effect: You instead have 1 hit point, and you gain temporary hit points equal to the damage dealt by the triggering attack.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: Choose one enemy within 5 squares of you. The next time you drop below 1 hit point before the end of the encounter, you instead have 1 hit point, but only if the chosen enemy has at least 1 hit point. However, if you are at 1 hit point or lower when that enemy drops below 1 hit point, you must roll a d20. If you roll a 9 or lower, you die.

Tusk Shield

At first glance, a tusk shield looks like something that was quickly constructed from scrap materials. A pair of thick tusks of bloodstained ivory are set in a V shape and banded with strips of black oak, but with gaps between them wide enough to drive a great-sword through. Enemies that face a charging warrior protected by a tusk shield quickly come to understand the potency of the item—despite the fact that it doesn't seem capable of turning aside any blows.

Tusk Shield Level 2 Common

With this shield on your arm, your deadly charge shatters your enemies' attacks.

Arms Slot: Light shield 520 gp

Property

Whenever you charge, you gain a +2 item bonus to all defenses until the start of your next turn.

Twilight Shield

A twilight shield is crafted from black glass that is exposed only to the light of the setting sun during the month required to craft the item. By absorbing the growing shadows of the oncoming night, a twilight shield is imbued with the magic of shadow. On command, a halo of shadows emerges from it, cloaking those within against attacks made at a distance.

Twilight Shield Level 8 Uncommon

This shield looks like a polished black pane of glass set in a sturdy metal frame.

Arms Slot: Any shield 3,400 gp

Utility Power (Aura) ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: You activate an aura 1 that lasts until the end of the encounter or until you move. You and each creature in the aura have partial concealment against ranged attacks.

Vanguard's Shield

High in their rocky redoubts, the dwarves present an implacable defense to those who would plunder their vast treasures. Typically outnumbered by invading goblins and orcs, the dwarves learned to craft weapons and armor that would help even the odds. Named for the elite dwarf fighting units that stand at the front of any battle, a vanguard's shield emits a pulse of magical power that blunts a charging enemy's attack. By keeping their foes from breaking through the front lines, the dwarves can pulverize them with fire from the back ranks.

Vanguard's Shield Level 3 Common

When an enemy charges, this steel shield hinders the attack.

Arms Slot: Any shield 680 gp

Property

You gain a +4 item bonus to all defenses against charge attacks.

Feet Slot Items

Boots and shoes are popular forms of enchanted items not just for what they can do but also because much magical footgear is innocuous in appearance: Not until you use your boots of levitation to surprise your foes do they realize what they're up against.

Boots of Elvenkind

This supple leather footwear lets its wearer pass without leaving a trace or making a sound over any ground, no matter how unsuited to stealth or how cluttered the path might be. Dry leaves, spongy soil, and even fresh, squelching mud are no challenge to secrecy for someone wearing boots of elvenkind.

One legend tells of an elf who was so proud of his skill in crafting a pair of these boots that he walked silently across a pile of bells, gongs, and cymbals before the court of an eladrin noble. Whether that tale is true or not, the items made in his family's workshops are still in high demand to this day.

Boots of Elvenkind Level 7+ Uncommon

You pass without notice, leaving neither footprint nor echo.

Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Daily (Move Action)
Effect: You move up to your speed, and you are hidden (invisible and silent) during the move.

Boots of Leaping

Most boots of leaping are ugly, thick-soled footwear that use simple materials, but their appearance belies their nature. The wearer can jump over enemies without a running start, vault up city walls, clear a broad river in one bound—and make it look effortless.

Boots of leaping are unusually uniform in appearance and function, because all were made by the same enchanter. This unlucky mage spent a century doing nothing but crafting the same item over and over again at the behest of the dwarf warlord who held him captive and wanted every member of his army's vanguard to have a pair.

Boots of Leaping Level 9 Rare

Empowered by these boots, you fling yourself into the air, clearing your foes and landing behind them.

Feet Slot 4,200 gp
Property
You gain a +2 item bonus to Athletics checks to jump.
Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Move Action)
Effect: You jump to a square within 10 squares of you. The jump does not provoke opportunity attacks.

Boots of Levitation

The most powerful (and thus most famous) pair of boots of levitation was made for one of the most notorious political agitators in ancient Nerath. The rabble rouser in question was renowned for delivering scathing speeches in public places, but as crowds gathered, those who arrived later had a difficult time hearing this speaker. With the boots, however, he was able to rise above the ground so that large crowds could see him and hear his words. This method of gaining height had the additional benefit of raising him above the city guards who were typically dispatched to arrest him, once the authorities got wind that he was speaking. The Floating Demagogue, as he came to be known, was eventually arrested and put to death—his boots getting burned publicly right after him.

Boots of Levitation Level 9 Uncommon

You rise into the air thanks to these soft leather boots, able to see and be seen across a broader area.

Feet Slot 4,200 gp
Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Move Action)
Effect: You fly up to 4 squares vertically and 1 square horizontally, and you can hover there until the end of your next turn. When the levitation ends, you descend to the ground without taking falling damage.

Boots of the Shadowed Path

These magic boots are attuned to the ebb and flow of shadow magic. On command, a creature wearing them can step through shadow to appear somewhere else nearby. Although this teleportation effect is limited in its range, the boots' enduring magic allows their wearer to use them time and time again.

Boots of the Shadowed Path Level 13 Uncommon

Feet Slot 17,000 gp
Utility Power (Teleportation) ✦ Encounter (Move Action)
Effect: You teleport up to 3 squares. You must end this teleportation adjacent to a creature or an object that is Small or larger.

Halfling Boots

Halflings are known to prefer flight or stealth to a direct fight, and these magic boots reflect their desires. Crafted by a cabal of halfling wizards, these boots allow a creature to move with a subtle balance of speed, agility, and foresight. With the aid of the boots, a creature can slip between a giant's stomping feet or glide past a dragon's grasping talons with ease.

Halfling Boots — Level 9 Uncommon

These boots look like they are sized for a child, but when you attempt to pull them on, they grow just large enough to fit you. Still, they feel tight around your feet.

Feet Slot 4,200 gp

Property

You can move through the space of any enemy that has a size category larger than yours.

Shoes of the Tireless Gait

The shoes of the tireless gait are well named; one who travels while wearing them is able to continue walking without fatigue for as long as he or she perseveres and maintains momentum. Even sleep can be forestalled by the magic of this footwear.

Adventurers must be wary when seeking these shoes, because cursed versions also exist that compel those who wear them to travel without pause. Those unfortunate enough to don such footgear find themselves unable to stop and rest, walking themselves to their doom.

Shoes of the Tireless Gait — Level 8 Common

While you stay in motion, these shoes keep your body fresh for the challenges ahead.

Feet Slot 3,400 gp

Property

You can walk without fatigue or the need to stop for sleep. However, if you walk for more than 24 hours, you take a -5 penalty to all skill checks, ability checks, and attack rolls until the end of your next extended rest.

Shoes of Water Walking

For anyone wearing this footwear, oceans are like land and can be crossed as easily. Lakes, rivers, and swampland are little different from firm earth. Being on the water's surface can be a drawback, however, when bad weather strikes or evil magic is employed. In hurricane conditions, for instance, rather than being able to sink beneath the turmoil, the wearer is battered by wind and waves (but presumably only until he or she has managed to remove the shoes).

Shoes of water walking were originally developed to protect aristocrats who traveled on small ships in rough seas, but were soon after put to less noble uses by the pirates who stole them.

Shoes of water walking

Shoes of Water Walking — Level 6 Common

While in these shoes, you tread across water as if it were land.

Feet Slot 1,800 gp

Property

You can move on water as if it were solid ground (rough water counts as difficult terrain). You can break through the surface of the water as a free action, whether you're descending or ascending.

The simple boot represents a stunning innovation. The most primitive people run barefoot through the world, but when they discover sandals, they can walk farther with fewer troubles. A simple closed toe on the sandal can add miles to the distance an army can march in a day. And when your soldiers' cracked and bleeding feet are armored by a true shoe as they walk for miles along dung-spattered trails, the benefits are multifold. When you realize all this, it's no wonder that spellcasters have lavished enchantments upon footwear.

Hands Slot Items

For obvious reasons, anyone can benefit from even a mundane pair of gloves or gauntlets. When they're supplemented with a magical quality, so much the better.

Gauntlets of Remote Action

These fine chainmail gauntlets set with ruby studs come in a pair matched for the same hand, which often confuses those who discover them. With one gauntlet worn, the wearer can launch the other into the air, where it floats and moves under mental command. This second hand mimics the movements of the first, allowing the wearer to perform a number of simple activities at a distance. The user can also sometimes switch places with the floating gauntlet.

These gauntlets are sometimes worn by alchemists who find it useful to mix dangerous components from a safe distance.

Gauntlets of Remote Action Level 9 Uncommon

You send one of these gauntlets into the air, where it waits for you to control its actions from a safe distance.

Hands Slot 4,200 gp

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Minor Action)

Effect: You cause one of the gauntlets to lift off your hand and float in a square adjacent to you. The gauntlet does not occupy its square. While the gauntlet is floating, you can perform actions with it as if your hand were still in it, such as opening doors, picking up objects, and making Thievery checks. You cannot use the floating gauntlet to make attacks or to perform any action requiring two hands.

You can take a move action to move the gauntlet up to 10 squares, and it must end the move within 10 squares of you. If the gauntlet is adjacent to you, you can return it to your hand as a minor action. If you drop below 1 hit point or remove the gauntlet that you're wearing, the floating gauntlet returns to your hand.

Utility Power (Teleportation) ✦ Daily (Move Action)

Requirement: One of the gauntlets must be floating.

Effect: You teleport, swapping positions with the floating gauntlet.

Gauntlets of Swimming and Climbing

A creature wearing these gauntlets moves with supernatural grace in the forest canopy or beneath the surface of a lake or a stream. Made of well-creased leather and ornamented with studs of steel and jet, gauntlets of swimming and climbing appear damp to both sight and touch, though they leave no trace of water on anything they touch. The ancient ranger orders of the wood elves once gifted these gauntlets as a sign of rank and accomplishment, but they are now seldom found among the forest folk.

Gauntlets of Swimming and Climbing Level 10 Common

Primal strength flows through your limbs when you don these gauntlets.

Hands Slot 5,000 gp

Property

You gain a climb speed and a swim speed both equal to half your speed.

Gloves of Missile Snaring

These fine white leather gloves seem to fade away when worn, becoming little more than a paper-thin sheath over the hands. The benefit of gloves of missile snaring emerges only in the thick of combat, when arrows, bolts, sling bullets—and even the deadly spears of giants—can be caught by the wearer with almost supernatural grace. Of greater surprise to a startled foe that witnesses this act is seeing its own projectile hurtling back toward it.

Gloves of Missile Snaring Level 15 Uncommon

Your gloved hand moves in a blur, plucking your foe's arrow out of midair before you hurl it back as a deadly missile.

Hands Slot 25,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Immediate Interrupt)

Trigger: An enemy hits you with a ranged weapon attack.

Effect: You gain a +4 power bonus to all defenses against the attack. If this bonus causes the attack to miss you, the enemy is hit by the attack instead.

Hero's Gauntlets

Kavad, a renowned warlord and famous champion of the second-to-last Nerathan emperor, was the first to wear hero's gauntlets. Those who follow his example know that the true mark of a hero lies in one's ability to push past all limits—to the point where life and death, reputation and honor, and fame and infamy cease to matter.

Hero's Gauntlets Level 17+ Common

When you push past your limits, the magic of these gauntlets backs up the fury of your attack.

Level 27: +2 bonus to the attack rolls, and temporary hit points equal to your healing surge value.

Life-Draining Gauntlets

A patchwork of bone-dry leather strips of unknown origin, these gauntlets are seldom worn by the overly moral or faint of heart. Those who know the function of this macabre handwear understand that its creation requires the flayed skin of sentient humanoids. Daring to wear the flesh of the dead gives dark power to the wearer—power over life and death, and the ability to feed from both.

Effect: You gain temporary hit points equal to 4 + the gauntlets' level.

While the material they are made of might cause some to become queasy, life-draining gauntlets can be a boon to anyone. The secret to their most effective use is that you need only spill a few drops of blood from a creature, friend or foe. Of course no ally likes being attacked, but if you ensure the harm you inflict is minimal, the benefit you gain from such an act can be quite substantial.

True Gauntlets of Ogre Power

Although true gauntlets of ogre power are best known for granting their wearer phenomenal strength, they also feature a more subtle magic that adapts to the armor worn by their wielder, making them nearly impossible to detect by casual sight or contact. A rogue in leather wears the gauntlets as matching gloves of heavy calfskin; a knight in full plate wears them as steel gauntlets that perfectly match his or her armor's hue and alloy. Doffed, they appear as plain leather gauntlets set with rusting studs, and careless adventurers might realize too late that they missed this rare treasure.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: You hit a creature with a melee attack.
Effect: You gain a +4 power bonus to the damage roll against that creature for this attack.

I've heard that the creator of gauntlets of ogre power was a godlike being known as Vaprak the Destroyer. Whether true deity or exarch, Vaprak is worshiped by trolls and ogres in many worlds. Though this entity appears to be little more than a brutish and mean being, the creation of the gauntlets could imply some strategy of subtlety and scope. Beyond that, I do not speculate.

Head Slot Items

Hats and helms are what many people think of when they consider the purchase of an item in this category. The most unusual enchanted objects in this group, however, might be those that don't touch the owner's head at all.

Crown of Leaves

The first elves to migrate from the Feywild to the world brought this headwear with them to their new homes. These Feywild-infused circlets allowed the elves to establish mastery over the unspoiled forests.

Eyes of Charming

The gnome enchanter Warallako was known for both his arcane crafting and his ability to manipulate the will of any creature of his choosing (at least according to the tales he told). This set of stylish silver spectacles was discovered to be the source of the enchanter's alleged charm after he tried to use them on the wife of Aloryan, a fiery-tempered elf chieftain. Aloryan inherited the eyes of charming after Warallako's unexpected and violent demise, and put them to better use turning his fractious tribes into a nation.

Just because a victim of the magic does not know you used a power to control it does not mean the victim cannot recognize it was controlled. To use the eyes successfully, you must use them subtly. Lay the groundwork for the charmed action, and the victim might not even suspect it was ensorcelled.*

Eyes of the Eagle

These minute crystal lenses magically attach themselves directly to the eyes of the wearer, making them all but impossible to detect when they are worn. The existence of these lenses was first recorded in legends of the ancient druid war leader Ohartu, but his tribe's lack of crafters suggests that the eyewear was probably a relic from an older age that he discovered.

Helm of Brilliance

Crafted of brilliant silver and polished steel, this helm appears to be a mundane piece of armored headgear when first found. Only close study reveals the secret of its precious gems, each channeling the powerful magic of the helm's unknown makers. The resistance to fire that the helm bestows cannot be sustained indefinitely, however, and the helm's magic can be overwhelmed by exposure to intense heat and flames, causing it to focus that energy inward.

Effect: The helm casts bright light in a 10-square radius until you extinguish it as a minor action or until the helm is removed.

Helm of Languages

The ambassadors of the famous warrior Beharrin first created and made use of this unassuming war helmet. The power of the helm of languages was critical to the diplomatic efforts that allowed Beharrin to forge the kingdom that bore his name, and these precious items have aided countless lords, nobles, and adventurers in the long years since.

Helm of Languages Level 10 Common

When you slip on this helm, the haze of garbled voices around you quickly gives way to perfect understanding.

Head Slot 5,000 gp

Property

You can speak and understand any spoken language (the helm does not grant literacy or the ability to speak Abyssal or Supernal).

Helm of Seven Deaths

Legends of the Shadowfell speak of gems and their ability to capture and hold the souls of recently slain creatures. A gem's facets can, with the proper infusion of divine or arcane magic, become a twisting, winding maze that captures a soul and forces it to travel in endless circles rather than depart to the afterlife. The helm of seven deaths incorporates several such gems. When the helm's wearer defeats a foe, the gems mounted upon it capture the departing soul and store it for use in fueling the helm's powers.

Magic was never meant to make us lazy. There's no substitute for the discipline and effort involved in actually learning a language that's not your own. If you lean on magic items to do all your work for you, you will someday find yourself badly disappointed.

Helm of Seven Deaths Level 5 Rare

This black helm has seven green gems set above its brow. They are dull, dead things, as if they once held magical power that has long since been spent.

Head Slot 1,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Minor Action)

Effect: Choose one bloodied creature you have hit with an attack during this turn. You learn that creature's current hit point total.

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Free Action, 1/Turn)

Trigger: You kill a living creature with an attack.

Effect: One of the helm's seven gems captures the creature's soul. A gem can hold no more than one soul at a time and glows with a green radiance while it contains a soul. A dead creature cannot be returned to life while its soul is captured in this manner.

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Requirement: At least three of the seven gems must each contain a soul.

Effect: You regain hit points equal to 5 + one-half your level, and two of the gems release their souls.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Requirement: All seven gems must contain souls.

Effect: On your next damage roll, maximize the results of up to four of the dice you roll. All seven gems then release their souls.

Helm of Teleportation

The helm of teleportation is known far and wide even though very few of these items have ever existed. In fact, its reputation might even predate its creation: Explorers have discovered ancient pictograms that show two images of the same individual some distance apart from one another. One of the images is bareheaded, and the other is wearing a helmet. Some experts take this to mean that the headgear had something to do with the individual's movement, while critics of that view are quick to point out that it's not necessary to take off a helm of teleportation to prevent it from working.

Whatever the case, it's not unusual for bystanders to believe they've just seen a helm of teleportation in action when what they truly saw was someone using a teleport power while wearing a hat.

Helm of Teleportation Level 15+ Rare

Ioun Stones

The oldest legends speak of Ioun stones as gifts given by the god of knowledge and prophecy to the greatest heroes. Ioun stones as a group encompass a wide range of wondrous powers, and each stone in its own right is very powerful. All of them have one characteristic in common: The stone's power is activated by setting it in motion around its wearer's head, where it orbits continuously.

Priests of Ioun argue over their deity's motives in creating the stones and believe that anyone who comes into contact with one should take it as a sign of prophecy. If someone is seen with two of the stones in his or her possession, the priesthood marks that person as destined for great (and sometimes terrible) events. For this reason, many adventurers shun the stones despite their power, fearing that they might be swept up in events outside their control.

Reading Spectacles

The first reading spectacles were crafted in lost antiquity but are recorded as having been in the possession of a human playwright named Monieta. In the early days of Nerath, his work as a dramatist heralded a groundbreaking and illustrious career—until it was revealed that his entire body of work was plagiarized from a dozen lost cultures, translated into Common with the help of his spectacles.

Neck Slot Items

Magic items worn on or around the neck are so varied in physical form that almost anyone you meet might be wearing one. Who's to say whether someone's dirty cloak has a hidden power, or the small charm around one's neck is more than mere decoration?

Amulet of Aranea

The first of these clustered settings of mithral, ebony, and black glass were worn by the drow during the earliest days of the war that sundered them from their elf and eladrin kin. The enemies of the drow typically destroyed amulets of aranea they found on their hated foes, along with any other items that might contain the magic of Lolth, but a few surviving examples of this amulet made their way to the fomorian kingdoms, and from there to the world. Because these items emulate the venom and viciousness of the Spider Queen, assassins and others who seek any dark advantage in combat often seek them out.

Level 25 or 30: Resist 15 poison.

Utility Power (Poison) ✦ Daily (Immediate Reaction)

Trigger: An enemy hits you with a melee attack.

Effect: The enemy that hit you takes 1d10 poison damage, and ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends). The enemy also takes a -2 penalty to saving throws against poison effects until the end of the encounter.

Level 15 or 20: 1d10 poison damage, and ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends).

Level 25 or 30: 2d10 poison damage, and ongoing 20 poison damage (save ends).

Amulet of Life Protection

A rough-cut chunk of clear crystal set on a golden chain, an amulet of life protection is a powerful ward against possession and death. The talisman's wearer is bound to the item in such a way that it creates a safe haven for that person's mind and soul. In some dark circles, tales are told of necromancers who have learned how to use evil versions of these amulets to bring a person back as a slave to the necromancer.

Amulet of Life Protection — Level 2+ Common

Enhancement Bonus: Fortitude, Reflex, and Will

Property

If you die while wearing the amulet and it is left on your body, the time that your corpse can lie dead and still be revived by a power or a ritual is multiplied by 10. In addition, you cannot be raised as an undead creature. If the amulet is removed from your corpse, these benefits end. Placing the amulet on an already dead body has no effect.

If you are so fortunate as to possess an amulet of life protection (and friends willing to revive you), I suggest you change the chain on the amulet to something other than gold. It's not good wearing the amulet if your killer or some other scavenger strips it from you before your friends reclaim your body.

Brooch of Unerring Defense

Nerathan war mages knew that not even the strongest armor or magical protection could guard against all attacks. The brooch of unerring defense, an ordinary-looking clasp of silver and gold, was crafted to soften the blows that do get through.

Cloak of the Manta Ray

Adventurers who ply the world's wide oceans, the black waters of the Underdark, or the fierce seas of the Elemental Chaos all can benefit from this unusual gray leather cloak. Always wet to the touch, the cloak of the manta ray is said to have been created by acolytes of the primal water spirits, who granted a measure of their power to heroes defending the creatures that dwell beneath the waves.

Cloak of the phoenix

Cloak of the Phoenix

This relic is said to have originated in the arcane court of an empire whose name now lies beyond memory. The cloak of the phoenix is a fine weave of pure gold thread loomed with white silk that cannot be marred by dirt or stain. Its clasp is a single golden feather from the tail of the fabled phoenix, whose mastery of life and death is shared by any hero fortunate enough to claim one of these cloaks.

Cloak of the Shadowthief

When faced with a fight worth believing in, a halfling warrior will take on foes three times his or her size—and win. However, the halflings' small stature inspires their warriors to choose stealthy tactics and roguish combat arts more often than a fighter's boldness. The cloak of the shadowthief was designed to even the odds for a stealthy combatant, enabling its wearer to make surprisingly effective attacks from within its protective confines.

Cloak of the Stalking Shadow

A cloak of the stalking shadow is crafted from strands of shadows cast between rays of moonlight, each carefully strung together over the course of a month to produce a garment of utter darkness. When worn, the cloak shifts and moves around its wearer, cloaking him or her from sight. By focusing on the cloak's magic, its wearer allows the cloak's form to merge with his own. For a moment, the wearer becomes a creature of insubstantial shadows.

Greater Medallion of the Mind

Many claim that these items were created by an order of psychics to help in their training of new recruits. Those familiar with eladrin magical lore offer a different story, saying that the eladrin crafted the original medallions of the mind to make fey enchantments even more powerful. # Greater Necklace of Fireballs

Masked by special enchantments, this necklace appears to be nothing but a piece of cheap jewelry. However, a character who places the item around his or her neck can see the necklace as it really is—a series of golden-red globes hanging from a fine gold chain. The greater necklace of fireballs is one of the more devastating devices of arcane magic known to exist, allowing its wearer to evoke the power of arcane fire by making the motion of plucking off a globe and hurling it. A burst of fiery terror comes into being at the spot indicated by the wearer, scorching everything it touches.

Level 20: 6d6 + enhancement bonus fire damage.

Level 25: 7d6 + enhancement bonus fire damage.

Level 30: 8d6 + enhancement bonus fire damage.

Miss: Half damage.

I must express some misgivings about those magic items that give the spells cast by wizards to any ordinary fool. Of course, magic items by their nature grant nearly anyone powers beyond what they might normally accomplish, but the greater necklace of fireballs seems particularly egregious in that it so obviously provides a wizard's power. Then again, lightning bolts, flight, teleportation, charm, and sleep effects all reside in items usable by anyone. I suppose I should just be grateful that there exist no gloves of magic missile. Actually, I should look into that.

Greater Talisman of Repulsion

Wizards and others who try to avoid melee favor this useful pendant and its singular power. Known to have been in common use among the first eladrin mages to explore the mortal realm, the talisman ensures that creatures foolish enough to engage the wearer in combat pay a potentially deadly price.

In the aftermath of the Dawn War, the world was given over to the care of humanoid tribes that had long been pawns in the battles between gods and primordials. # Periapt of Health

This charm is set with a blue-white diamond that pulses faintly with each beat of its wearer's heart. A periapt of health protects against all disease, whether inflicted by mundane squalor, the power of magic, or the foulest monsters. Many tales tell of adventurers finding these periapts within hidden lairs secreted among the sewer systems of the more wealthy cities.

Beware scarabs of insanity. Many carry curses imbued within them on their creation in the ancient empire of Bael Turath. From what I've learned of that realm, its curses will be like many of its citizens: perverse, deceptive, and pernicious. I would not put it past a scarab's creator to link the item to a particular bloodline so that only members of one family can use it—a wise precaution in the treacherous society that gave birth to such a devilish item.

Scarab of Insanity

The elite dragonborn warriors who fought against Bael Turath feared no physical pain. However, even some of Arkhosia's greatest heroes would quail when tiefling spellcasters wearing scarabs of insanity joined the battle. It is said that only the strongest creatures can shake off the dread effects of a scarab of insanity.

Scarab of Insanity — Level 17+ Uncommon

When an enemy dares attack your mind, you lash out with the power of this red-and-black scarab, driving a spike of madness into your foe's mind.

Neck Slot

Enhancement Bonus: Fortitude, Reflex, and Will

Property

You gain a +2 item bonus to saving throws against effects that dominate you or otherwise allow an enemy to control what you do with your actions.

Utility Power (Charm) ✦ Daily (Immediate Reaction)

Trigger: An enemy makes an attack against your Will.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, whenever the triggering enemy makes a melee or a ranged attack against you or any of your allies, it must make a saving throw. On a failure, it must target your enemy that is closest to it, instead of its chosen target (the enemy can attack as normal if no other enemies can be targeted). On a successful saving throw, this effect ends.

Sneak's Cloak

A creature wearing this thick wool cloak can be seen only when it wants to be, and so those who favor stealth in combat particularly appreciate this item. The court assassins of Bael Turath are credited as the first to make extensive use of the sneak's cloak—often in the course of bringing down their own corrupt regents and kings.

Sneak's Cloak — Level 9+ Uncommon

As you wrap this voluminous cloak around you, its magic conceals your presence from your enemies.

Enhancement Bonus: Fortitude, Reflex, and Will

Property

You gain an item bonus to Stealth checks equal to the cloak's enhancement bonus.

Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You hit a creature with a melee or a ranged attack while you have any cover or concealment.

Effect: The creature treats you as invisible (save ends).

Rings

Rings are everywhere: Even the lowliest peasant might have a crude adornment of this sort. The truly magnificent magical specimens, however—those capable of altering reality in stunning ways—are exceedingly hard to find.

Incendiary Ring of Fireblazing

The flame-loving mage Zagrisar created the first incendiary ring of fireblazing in a failed attempt to craft a more powerful ring of fire resistance. The attempt nearly destroyed Zagrisar's tower and workshop, but from his spectacular failure came a new discovery that allowed him to become a living inferno on the battlefield.

With his new ring, Zagrisar's power increased greatly, and he attempted even greater feats of daring, many of them dangerous and foolhardy, such as the burning of the undead at Ungol Keep, where he gained the nickname "Flame Scourge." Whether Zagrisar's original ring survives is unknown, because he disappeared during a trip to the City of Brass after vowing to destroy a powerful efreet lord. One of his apprentices was able to duplicate the feat of creating these rings when Zagrisar didn't return.

Incendiary Ring of Fireblazing Level 14 Rare

A shroud of living flame emanates from this ring without harming you. On your command, you can send it blazing outward to sear your enemies.

Ring Slot 21,000 gp

Property

When you make a basic attack, that attack can deal fire damage instead of its normal damage type.

Attack Power (Fire) ✦ Daily (No Action)

Trigger: You hit with an attack that deals fire damage.

Effect: The target and each creature, other than you, adjacent to it take ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).

Milestone: If you've reached at least one milestone today, the ongoing damage increases to 20.

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Minor Action)

Effect: You can ignite any unattended combustible object that you touch, including cloth, oil, paper, tinder, a torch, and so on. You cannot use this power to deal damage to any creature.

Lesser Ring of Feather Fall

First forged by the dwarf clans charged with guarding the passes of the treacherous Razorpeaks, this filigreed mithral band enables its wearer to ignore the laws of gravity. The secrets of the ring's creation passed into the wider world when the forgemaster's apprentice was kidnapped by a drow raiding party, and the lesser ring of feather fall is now coveted by adventurers of all stripes.

Lesser Ring of Feather Fall Level 12 Common

You barely notice the weight of this delicately filigreed metal band, but you appreciate the lightness it confers to you whenever you take a fall.

Ring Slot 13,000 gp

Property

You take no damage from a fall.

Ring of Borrowed Spells

At the height of the wars that led to Nerath's founding, the armies that fought for domination of the human lands depended on the talent of their arcane spellcasters. Since those casters were typically less experienced than the troops they fought, they died quickly. In response, the war mages of Veoran designed and perfected this rune-scribed circle of black ebony, granting their warriors the ability to combine arcane magic and martial prowess to deadly effect.

Ring of Borrowed Spells Level 17 Uncommon

This band of rune-carved ebony holds arcane power in reserve for you to call upon in time of need.

Ring Slot 65,000 gp

Property

This ring contains two arcane encounter attack powers of level 17 or lower that the wearer can employ using the ring's power. The powers contained in the ring are determined when it is created and cannot be changed.

Attack Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You use one of the powers stored in the ring.

Milestone: If you've reached at least one milestone today, you gain a +2 bonus to the attack rolls of the stored power you use.

Ring of Humanoid Influence

The despotic warlock Orada was feared both for his might and his hideous countenance, which had been disfigured by long years of channeling the twisted essence of the Far Realm. After his death, his exultant servitors discovered on his withered finger a band of pure crystal set with chips of amethyst and emerald. The powers of persuasion granted by the ring were believed to be an essential part of the warlock's rise to power, and the item was successfully replicated a handful of times by those servants.

Ring of Humanoid Influence — Level 21 Rare

A dark self-confidence fills you as you slip on this ring, emboldening you to manipulate the feelings of others.

Ring Slot 225,000 gp

Property

You gain a +2 item bonus to Charisma-based skill checks and Charisma ability checks.

Utility Power (Charm) ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You make a single Bluff check or Diplomacy check opposed by the passive Insight checks of each humanoid creature within 3 squares of you. If you win the opposed check, the creature treats you as a trusted friend until the end of the encounter. The creature is not dominated and does not automatically follow your orders. However, it reacts to your suggestions in the most favorable way. The creature is not aware that you used this power against it. If you or your allies attack a creature under the effect of this power, the effect ends on that creature.

A creature engaged in combat with you or your allies gains a +10 bonus to its Insight check.

Milestone: If you've reached at least one milestone today, the effect lasts until the end of your next extended rest.

Ring of Resourceful Wizardry

This ring appears as a band of plain steel to anyone except a wizard, who sees it as a blue sapphire band set with a star and engraved with arcane glyphs—and only a wizard handling a ring of resourceful wizardry can determine its function. Crafted by a guild of master mages known as the Red Circle, the ring of resourceful wizardry allows its wearer to improve his or her spellcasting prowess—and on occasion to access magic that would otherwise be denied.

The Red Circle used these bands in its fight against the early invasions of the world by githyanki pirates, helping the mages offset the strength of those astral raiders.

Ring of Resourceful Wizardry — Level 21 Uncommon

You feel the fullness of your arcane potential while you wear this ring.

Ring Slot 225,000 gp

Property

You gain a +4 item bonus to Arcana checks.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Requirement: You must be a wizard with a spellbook.

Effect: Choose one unused power that you have prepared from your spellbook. You prepare a different power in its place. The new power must be from your spellbook, of the same type as the replaced power (daily attack power or utility power), and of the same level or lower.

Milestone: If you've reached at least one milestone today, you gain a second use of this power before your next extended rest.

Selection of rings

Ring of X-ray Vision

A Nerathan princeling who had a penchant for peering into the chambers of the court's ladies-in-waiting commissioned the first ring of X-ray vision. This fragile-looking band of clear crystal is now highly sought after by adventurers, particularly those who crave the ability to locate hidden treasure. However, using the ring's power comes at a price—its wielder must use it sparingly, or its magic diminishes for a time.

Ring of X-ray Vision — Level 25 Rare

With this crystal ring on, your surroundings come into greater focus. With concentration, you can even see through solid objects.

Ring Slot 625,000 gp

Property

You gain a +4 item bonus to Perception checks, and creatures adjacent to you gain no benefit from concealment against you.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: You can see into and through substances impenetrable to normal sight until the end of your next turn. Your enhanced vision requires no light and has a range of 4 squares. Your enhanced vision can see through 20 feet of cloth, wood, or similar animal or vegetable matter, 10 feet of stone, or 1 foot of iron, steel, silver, and other light metals. Your enhanced vision cannot penetrate lead, gold, platinum, or similar dense metals.

Sustain Minor: The effect persists until the end of your next turn. The first time you sustain this effect, the ring's property is suppressed until the end of your next extended rest.

Milestone: If you've reached at least one milestone today, the ring's property is suppressed only until the end of the encounter.

WAYNE ENGLAND

The lascivious origin story attached to the ring of X-ray vision seems to me an adventurer's fantasy. The great cost of creating such an item makes it much more likely that a king had it crafted for espionage or warfare. The ability to see voids in a battlement's stone or to catch your supposed ally in counsel with enemies provides a value far more in keeping with the cost of the item's creation. That leaded pigments and gilded decorations traditionally cover the walls in the quarters of ladies-in-waiting and other rooms of a castle cannot be taken either as proof or disproof of the ring's original intent, but certainly it might thwart the fancies of an adventurer who found such a ring.

Shadow Band

Thieves, lurkers, and creatures of the Shadowfell particularly covet this smoky obsidian ring. The shadow band was created for the renowned warlord Janian as a means to conceal his captive bride's beauty from the world. Aimeth, a half-elf maiden seized as war spoils from her village, was quick to repay her new lord's gift—with a garrote delivered from the darkness he so conveniently provided.

Shadow Band Level 27 Rare

Shadows leak from this ring to fill the space around you. When needed, you can call upon the ring to fully cover yourself in obscuring shadows.

Ring Slot 1,625,000 gp

Property

You gain partial concealment.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: You gain total concealment until the end of your next turn.

Milestone: If you've reached at least one milestone today, the effect lasts until the end of the encounter.

Waist Slot Items

From the earliest days of magical crafting, belts and other items worn around the torso have been used as repositories for magic that improves the wearer's ability to withstand the rigors of combat.

Baldric of Time

The warlocks of Bael Turath crafted the baldric of time to give themselves an edge in combat against the more powerful dragonborn warriors of Arkhosia. Numerous accounts of the ancient battles between those empires describe the ability of these belts to let their wearers seemingly slip the bonds of time to make unexpected and deadly attacks. However, it is said that some of these surviving onyx-studded belts were corrupted when Bael Turath fell.

Baldric of Time Level 6+ Common

When you slip on this belt, you feel a brief lurch as the march of time seems to skip a beat.

Lvl 6 1,800 gp Lvl 16 45,000 gp

Waist Slot

Property

Whenever you roll a 20 on your initiative check, you gain an extra move action during your first turn of the encounter.

Level 16: You instead gain an extra standard action.

Baldric of valor

JIM NELSON

Baldric of Valor

The baldric of valor is most often associated with the elite warriors of the Black Steel Guard. Each was given one of these items by their king to help them defend Areya, their ancient homeland. The tales about those guardians also say that none can seize a wearer's belt while he or she lives.

Baldric of Valor — Level 21 Common

You feel the power of this belt inspiring you to hit your foes with everything you have even as its aegis protects you from your enemies' counterattacks.

Waist Slot 225,000 gp

Property

When you spend an action point, you gain a +3 item bonus to saving throws, a +1 item bonus to attack rolls, and a +1 item bonus to all defenses. The bonuses last until the end of your next turn.

Belt of Dwarvenkind

At the height of the dwarves' civilization, one of that race's greatest leaders was not a dwarf but a gnome known as Satsaman. A master wizard and arcane crafter, Satsaman fell in love with the dwarf warrior maiden Jorunna, but found his suit laughingly dismissed by her father the king. Undaunted, Satsaman created the belt of dwarvenkind as a means of proving his worth to Jorunna's people—a task he fulfilled as royal son-in-law, and thereafter as trusted advisor to a long line of dwarf kings.

Belt of Dwarvenkind — Level 7 Rare

The delicate metalwork in this belt is unmistakably magical, as is the feeling that courses through you when you lash it on.

Waist Slot 65,000 gp

Properties

- ✦ You gain a +2 bonus to Diplomacy checks and Intimidate checks against dwarves.
- ✦ You can speak, read, and write Dwarven.

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Immediate Interrupt)

Trigger: An attack pushes, pulls, or slides you.
Effect: You ignore 1 square of the forced movement.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Immediate Reaction)

Trigger: You take ongoing poison damage from an attack.
Effect: You can make a saving throw against the ongoing poison damage.

Cincture of Vivacity

The explorer Katakna the Cautious was known for his use of this heavy damask wrap. A coward by nature, Katakna counted on the power of the cincture of vivacity to keep him from ever coming to serious physical harm. His advanced age when he died suggests that it did its job well.

Cincture of Vivacity — Level 14 Common

Where it covers you, this wrap holds you in a firm grip that strengthens your physical resilience.

Waist Slot 21,000 gp

Property

Whenever you spend a healing surge during combat that would grant hit points to you beyond your maximum, you gain the extra hit points as temporary hit points.

Diamond Cincture

The monetary value of this platinum band studded with diamonds is obvious to all, but only someone who can detect its magical nature can determine its true worth. Three of the belt's gems pulse with a faint white light, hinting at the diamond cincture's healing and defensive qualities.

Diamond Cincture — Level 10+ Uncommon

Each gleaming diamond on this belt is a powerful conduit for healing energy.

Lvl 10 5,000 gp — Lvl 30 3,125,000 gp
Lvl 20 125,000 gp
Waist Slot

Property

This belt holds one diamond, and you gain a +1 item bonus to Fortitude.
Level 20: Two diamonds, and a +2 item bonus.
Level 30: Three diamonds, and a +3 item bonus.

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ At-Will (Minor Action)

Effect: You spend a healing surge. One diamond on the belt cracks and darkens, becoming worthless. Each time a diamond is expended in this way, the belt's item bonus is reduced by 1 (to a minimum of 0). If there are no unexpended diamonds on the belt, you can't use this power. After an extended rest, each expended diamond is restored.

Healer's Sash

This rough-looking swath of white homespun is fed through five wooden rings, which serve as a conduit for its healing power. The elves of the haunted Rorawood first crafted the healer's sash for use by the brave sentinels who stood against that dark land's undead. By drawing on and channeling the vitality of yourself or another, you can bestow healing upon an ally.

Healer's Sash — Level 11+ Uncommon

This magic sash resists staining by blood or gore—a testament to its latent restorative power.

Lvl 11 9,000 gp — Lvl 21 225,000 gp
Waist Slot

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: Close burst 5 (you and one ally in the burst, or two allies in the burst). One of the targets loses a healing surge, and then the other target regains hit points equal to his or her healing surge value.
Level 21: The burst increases to 10, and an additional ally in the burst regains hit points equal to his or her healing surge value.

Survivor's Belt

Fortune favors the halflings, and this well-known example of that race's magical craft imbues its wearer with the benefit of halfling luck when things are at their darkest.

Survivor's Belt Level 11 Common

This belt lets you demonstrate fortune's favor when you are brought to the brink of death.

Waist Slot 9,000 gp

Property

Whenever you make a death saving throw, you can roll twice, using the higher result.

Wondrous Items

Any form of magic that can be imagined might be found embodied in one of the objects known as wondrous items. The forms of some of these items hint at their function, but in other cases a wondrous item's appearance offers no clue to what it does.

We wizards like to categorize things—no surprise, what with our libraries of books and scrolls and out laboratories of potions and unguents. We separate swords from wands and belts from boots and consider ourselves sensible. Then we take everything else, from broomsticks to drums to lanterns, and lump them all into "wondrous items." That's the same as devoting a bookshelf to "various topics" and then arranging the books by color of the cover. Wondrous items might do anything, might be anything, and so I suppose they deserve to be called wonders, but I shall henceforth endeavor to organize them in a more helpful manner.

Backpack of Concealment

Although many pursue magic in search of the keys to ancient mysteries or to gain great status, others have more mundane goals in mind. Backpacks of concealment were first crafted to conceal the activities of a ring of powerful smugglers who dealt in extraplanar goods, rare components, and other magical objects.

Backpack of Concealment Level 2 Common

Wondrous Item 520 gp

Property

This backpack can conceal any one object placed within it from a physical search. Any creature other than the one that placed the item in the backpack cannot find the object. If the backpack is destroyed, the object falls from its remains.

Bottled Smoke

Explorers returning from the fabled City of Brass were the first to introduce bottled smoke to the world. Whether one of these bottles was crafted there or traded for in the markets of that metropolis, the magic of the item clearly belongs to the efreet. Some believe that the power of bottled smoke serves some secret purpose, explaining why its creators have willingly allowed it to propagate in the mortal realm.

Bottled Smoke Level 7+ Uncommon

This brass bottle is hot to the touch, and spews forth a cloud of ash and smoke when opened.

Lvl 7 2,600 gp Lvl 17 65,000 gp

Wondrous Item

Utility Power (Fire, Zone) ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: Close burst 1. The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Creatures have partial concealment while in the zone. Any creature other than you that starts its turn in the zone takes 1d6 fire damage.

Level 17: Close burst 3; 2d6 fire damage.

Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn. You must be within 10 squares of the zone to sustain it.

Broom of Flying

The dark arcane sect known as the Witches of Blackbriar crafted the first brooms of flying, which they employed in raids so brutal that these items became a part of common folklore long after the sect's fall. The few brooms that survived the destruction of the witches are sought by historians, sages, and adventurers.

Broom of Flying Level 15 Uncommon

This gnarled wicker broom seems to constantly tug at the hand that holds it, seeking to take to the air.

Wondrous Item 25,000 gp

Property

While riding the broom, you have a fly speed of 8 and can hover. The broom can carry you and your gear (up to a normal load for you). You take a -2 penalty to attack rolls while riding the broom.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You call the broom to you from any location within 60 squares of you. As long as the broom is not prevented from moving, it appears in your hand at the start of your next turn. The broom's movement as it moves to you cannot be used to attack or impede any creature.

Chime of Opening

One of the many wonders to disappear with Nerath was the Vaults of Time—great underground repositories of wealth and lore that had been in continuous operation for more than a thousand years. The Keepers of Time used chimes of opening to maintain control of their vaults, which were set with locks so impervious that no mortal effort could break them. With the fall of Nerath, the Keepers of Time took the vaults' secret location to their graves, though their precious chimes soon began to turn up in the hands of adventurers. Each chime is a foot-long mithral tube scribed with glyphs from no known language—said by some to be a precious clue to the location of the ruined vaults and the knowledge and treasure that might still be found there.

Chime of Opening — Level 5+ Uncommon

When struck, this chime rings out with a magical tone that opens locks.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 5 | 1,000 gp | Lvl 25 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | 25,000 gp | | |

Wondrous Item

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: When you strike the chime of opening, you direct it to open a single locked door, chest, gate, or other object within 5 squares of you and remove any traps upon that object. The chime makes a single Thievery check with a +10 bonus against all the DCs required to open the object and disable any traps on it. Depending on the DCs, it is possible for the chime to unlock an object but not disable the traps on it (or vice versa), or to disable some traps but leave others intact.

Level 15: +20 bonus.

Level 25: +30 bonus.

Climber's Rope

Those who brave the Underdark and the ruins of fallen empires keep one of these barbed, spiral-tipped wooden projectiles on hand. When faced with a wall too steep to climb or a gorge that can't be crossed, an archer can fire climber's rope deep into a stone, wood, or metal surface, and a thin but strong rope magically unfurls behind it, allowing passage along it.

Climber's Rope — Level 6 Common

When a slope or wall cannot be climbed, this projectile creates an easier path.

Wondrous Item 1,800 gp

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)

Requirement: You must be wielding a bow or a crossbow.

Effect: You fire this projectile from your bow or crossbow at a target within normal range that you can see, either at a wall, ceiling, or similar surface or at a sufficiently heavy unattended object, such as a large statue. A magic rope then trails out behind the projectile, connecting the point of impact to your position. The rope can support up to 500 pounds at one time. The rope remains in place until the end of the encounter or until you dismiss it as a minor action. If fired at a creature, the projectile deals no damage.

Crystal Ball

No magecraft known to Bael Turath, Nerath, or the current age can reproduce the ancient magic of the crystal ball, making such items highly valuable to the sages, lords, and magic-wielders who covet their power. It is said that there is no secret safe against the possessor of a crystal ball, but the dark rumors of madness inflicted on those not capable of mastering this relic's use are so common that there must be some truth to them.

Crystal Ball — Level 8+ Rare

The vestiges of past, present, and future swirl within this gleaming crystal orb when you view it.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 8 | 3,400 gp | Lvl 28 | 2,125,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | 85,000 gp | | |

Wondrous Item

Property

While you have the crystal ball in your possession, you gain a +4 bonus to Arcana checks for scrying rituals.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: By peering into the crystal ball, you can get a glimpse of a creature, object, or location within 100 squares of you. When you view a subject through the crystal ball, you see and hear the immediate area around the subject until the end of your next turn as if you were standing beside it. Your perception of the area is with your normal senses and vision, and you might need to make Perception checks to note specific features of the area. If the subject moves, your point of perception moves with it.

A creature being scried upon, or within 5 squares of the subject being viewed with the crystal ball, can make a Perception check opposed by your Arcana check. On a successful Perception check, the creature is aware that it is being magically observed, and it might take steps to thwart your observation. However, it is not automatically aware that you are the one observing it.

Level 18: The subject of your scrying can be within 100 miles of your location.

Level 28: The subject of your scrying can be anywhere on your plane.

Sustain Standard: The effect persists until the end of your next turn.

Daern's Instant Fortress

The artificer and warrior Daern was known as a creator of superior defenses and fortifications, and the seldom-seen wondrous item for which she is most commonly known speaks to the brilliance of her creations. Explorers and adventurers who brave the wilds appreciate this small cube of rust-streaked iron because of the magical fortification it transforms into on command.

A group with one of these rare items in its possession never needs to worry about having a safe place to rest, as long as it's in an area voluminous enough to contain the fortress when it is called forth. In a bit of prudent foresight, Daern made it impossible for the owner to inadvertently collapse the fortress while he or she is inside.

Daern's Instant Fortress Level 22 Rare

With a touch, you transform this iron cube into a fortress that protects yourself and your friends.

Wondrous Item 325,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You create a square adamantine tower that occupies a close blast 5. You must create the tower in unoccupied squares. Its walls are 30 feet high, extend 10 feet into the ground, and are impervious to damage. The top 5 feet of the tower is a sealed battlement, and it has windows on all sides that allow a view of the nearby terrain, but which cannot be attacked through in either direction. It has a small door that faces you when the tower is created, and which opens only to your command or a DC 36 Strength check. The door provides the only access to the tower.

The tower provides a safe location for you and your allies. It includes sleeping and living quarters for up to twenty Medium creatures, though it has no sources of food or water. The tower lasts until you dismiss it from the outside as a standard action, returning it to its cube form. Creatures within the tower when you dismiss it are teleported to squares in or adjacent to the tower's area.

Decanter of Endless Water

The great cities of Nerath once featured magically sourced fountains and wells that carried fresh, clear water to all quarters. That same magic imbues the decanter of endless water, but this item has even greater usefulness. With its power fully unleashed, the decanter spews forth a torrent of water that can batter anything in its path. The force of this flow has been known to catch its user by surprise.

Decanter of Endless Water Level 7 Uncommon

When you open this always-dripping flask, it will release a steady stream of water, or a torrent that blasts away obstacles.

Wondrous Item 2,600 gp

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)

Effect: You cause the decanter to pour forth fresh or salt water in one of three volumes.

- ✦ Stream: 1 gallon.
- ✦ Fountain: 5 gallons in a 5-foot-long stream.
- ✦ Geyser: 30 gallons in a 20-foot-long stream.

In addition to filling a container of suitable volume, the fountain function of the decanter can be used to clear dirt or light debris from an area 2 squares on a side.

The geyser function can be used to break a door or other object. If you do, you gain a +5 power bonus to the check. The area in a burst 1 centered on the door or object is difficult terrain until the end of the encounter. However, the geyser creates considerable pressure, and you must succeed on a DC 16 Strength check when you use it or be knocked prone.

Elven Chain Shirt

Elven chain is forged from mithral and reinforced with arcane magic. A shirt of elven chain is as light as cloth yet provides protection against blade and claw, and can be worn underneath clothes or armor.

Elven Chain Shirt Level 9+ Uncommon

This fine mesh of mithral links is no more burdensome than a cotton shirt, yet is stronger than steel.

Lvl 9 4,200 gp Lvl 29 2,625,000 gp
Lvl 19 105,000 gp

Wondrous Item

Property

You gain a +1 item bonus to AC while wearing this shirt with light armor or no armor.

Level 19: +2 item bonus
Level 29: +3 item bonus

Enchanted Reins

The nomadic halflings employ a wide variety of beasts of burden depending on local conditions, climate, and culture. The ancient order of halfling druids known as the Beastmasters first crafted these reins of woven silver and black leather, which have remained in constant use among their many clans. Enchanted reins are invaluable in the breaking of wild creatures, from horses and other traditional mounts to large aquatic beasts tamed to draw boats and rafts at speed along the rivers of the frontier.

Enchanted Reins Level 5 Common

These well-made silver and leather reins make any beast you wish to control more manageable.

Wondrous Item 1,000 gp

Property

Nature checks made to calm or train a natural beast fitted with these reins gain a +2 item bonus.

Enchanted reins might seem an odd thing to an adventurer, but wars have been fought for less potent magic. Just think of this: If you can train mounts and beasts of burden faster and better than others, you can sell them faster too. Add the utility of these reins in battle, and it's little wonder that such simple magic might be considered so valuable.

Endless Quiver

Rangers dedicated to Melora are especially drawn to the endless quiver, which they claim was crafted by the god of the wilderness herself. Intricate Rellanic lettering is magically scribed along the quiver's tightly stitched leather, describing deeds done by the heroes who previously carried the item. However, some tales say that the endless quiver judges those it serves, and that if its bearer's deeds are not up to the standard of those who came before, it will fail to function at the worst possible time.

Endless Quiver Level 9 Common

Each time you slip your hand inside this quiver, you find the ammunition you need waiting for you.

Wondrous Item 4,200 gp

Property

When you attack with a bow or a crossbow, you can reach into the quiver, causing the quiver to produce a nonmagical arrow or bolt for the attack. Ammunition created by the quiver that is not used within 1 round of its creation disappears. For all other ammunition, the quiver works like a normal item of its type.

Eternal Chalk

Said to have been created by an apprentice of the great Nolzur, eternal chalk became widely known as a tool of the vandalism and public protest that swept through Nerath's outlying regions before the empire's fall. In the current age, this unusual magical tool is more commonly seen in the hands of adventurers, who use it to keep track of their progress in lost ruins and the Underdark's twisting passages.

Eternal Chalk Level 1 Common

The marks left by this chalk glow briefly as you scribe them, remaining in place to guide you until you choose to erase them.

Wondrous Item 360 gp

Property

A stick of eternal chalk never breaks or wears down with normal use. Any writing or drawing made with this chalk cannot be erased for one week by anyone except the original artist or author.

A stick of eternal chalk can be created in any color.

WARREN MAHY

Flask of the veiled horde

Flask of the Veiled Horde

The archmage Evard crafted these items as gifts for his most faithful servants. Made from a strange metal mined in the Shadowfell, a flask of the veiled horde collects the stray motes of shadow magic that wend around it, focusing them into a creature of shadow and giving that creature a cruel sentience. By unstoppering the flask and spilling the shadow material within, this item's owner spawns an obedient shadow creature that persists for a few minutes. If the legends are true, Evard tore the souls from his most hated enemies and trapped each one within a flask. The creatures produced by them have, at their core, the trapped, tormented spirits of his enemies.

Flask of the Veiled Horde Level 10 Uncommon

This flask is wrought from a black metal of unknown origin. It is cold to the touch, and shaking reveals that it is filled with a heavy liquid. A stopper of the same black metal seals it shut.

Wondrous Item 5,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: You pour a mote of darkness from the flask to create a shadow creature that obeys your spoken commands and is allied with you and your allies. The creature appears adjacent to you and takes its turn on your initiative count according to commands you give to it (commanding it is a free action). If you don't command the creature, it takes no actions. The creature disappears at the end of the encounter.

Floating Lantern

The archmage and explorer Inora the One-Handed earned her sobriquet as a stripling adventurer, when an altercation with a young black dragon went poorly for her. In later years, she invented a host of magic items designed to ease the rigors of her adventuring career, of which the floating lantern remains the best known.

Floating Lantern Level 3 Common

You hang this lantern on the empty air, where it floats under your command.

Wondrous Item 680 gp

Property

This lantern casts light in a 10-square radius, and it never needs lighting or refilling. When you let go of the lantern, it continues to hang in the air where you leave it. If weight in excess of 1 pound is applied to the lantern, it falls to the ground.

Any creature holding the floating lantern or adjacent to it can set its light to be bright (10-square radius), dim (5-square radius), or off as a minor action.

As a move action, the last creature to hold the lantern can mentally command it to move up to 10 squares in any direction, but not more than 10 squares from the commanding creature.

Flying Hook

The greatest cities of Nerath featured magically sculpted spires and towers that stretched toward the heavens, and whose wealthy occupants were a constant target for the thieves' guilds that challenged the empire's law. For decades, the flying hook was one of the most prominent and hard-won pieces of sophisticated urban thieves' gear, to the point where these items were stolen as often as the loot whose theft they were meant to facilitate.

Flying Hook Level 15 Common

When you toss this grappling hook into the air, it soars off under your mental command.

Wondrous Item 25,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Minor Action)

Effect: You command the hook to fly from you to an unattended object within 20 squares of you that you can see, and it magically latches onto the object. Once secured, the hook extends a thin rope back to your hands. Climbing the rope requires an Athletics check, or you can pull the object toward you with a Strength check. The hook and rope can support up to 3,000 pounds before the hook detaches from the surface. The rope cannot be tied or knotted in any way, nor can it be used to attack or affect a creature.

As a minor action, you can command the hook to detach from the object and return to you. This causes the rope to retract.

Gem of Auditory Recollection

Nerath's great halls of justice were the inspiration for the gem of auditory recollection, a chunk of rough-cut quartz used to record hearings and evidence as a means of establishing a system of records unparalleled in the history of law. Copies of this relic soon became better known on the other side of the law, making their way into the hands of blackmailers, spies, and kidnappers for whom an unassailable record of events and voices became a dark boon.

Gem of Auditory Recollection Level 16 Common

This smooth gem records the sounds around it, allowing you to listen to the voices of the past when you wish.

Wondrous Item 45,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Standard Action)

Effect: The gem records all words spoken by one creature within 20 squares of you. You can end the recording as a free action. The gem can record 12 hours of speech before becoming full.

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Standard Action)

Effect: The gem repeats a section of recorded text aloud in the exact voice and language of the original speaker. The gem continues its recitation until the speech is finished or until you use a free action to stop it.

Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Standard Action)

Effect: You erase all words recorded by the gem.

Gem of Seeing

The first gem of seeing was crafted for the minor sovereign King Scarad the Suspicious, whose thirst for murder was matched only by his fear of invisible assassins, cunningly hidden traps, and the ghostly vengeance of those who had died at his hand. In the end, it is said that extensive use of this original gem drove Scarad to distraction and death, and whoever wields one of the copies extant in the world today must be wary of overusing its power.

Gem of Seeing Level 12 Uncommon

With this translucent stone held to your eye, all things become tantalizingly clear to you.

Wondrous Item 13,000 gp

Property

While you peer through the gem, you gain a +3 item bonus to Perception checks to see things.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you can see invisible creatures and objects, and you know that any illusion you can see is an illusion.

Greater Flying Carpet

The magical technique that created greater flying carpets originated in the rich territories of Nerath's far-flung deserts, and was rigidly controlled by the elite archmages and sultans of those lands. The secret of creating these wondrous items was lost even before the fall of the empire, and thus the few greater flying carpets that remain are highly coveted by explorers.

Greater Flying Carpet Level 20+ Rare

When you unroll this intricately stitched carpet, it floats just above the ground, rippling as if blown by a powerful wind.

Lvl 20 125,000 gp Lvl 30 3,125,000 gp

Wondrous Item

Property

A greater flying carpet carries creatures and objects at a speed of fly 6 and can hover. A character on the carpet can mentally command it to fly as a move action.

Any creature on the carpet takes a -2 penalty to AC and Reflex. The carpet is 1 square by 2 squares and can carry up to two Medium or Small creatures and their gear (up to a normal load for each creature). If additional weight is placed on it, the carpet falls to the ground.

If more than one character on the carpet attempts to mentally command it, the carpet responds to each command in turn according to the characters' initiative order.

If no rider is upon it, a greater flying carpet hovers in place 1 foot above the ground if it is unrolled, or sits on the ground if it is rolled up.

Level 30: The carpet is 2 squares by 3 squares and can carry up to six Medium or Small creatures and their gear (up to a normal load for each creature). Riders don't take the penalty to AC and Reflex.

Few things are more entertaining than the sight of two willful adventurers astride a magic carpet, each trying to direct the item. As obliging as a faithful puppy, the carpet flutters this way and that, buckling and rolling, trying to please both masters. Inevitably, the two adventurers come to blows, shoving each other until one falls off and the carpet settles down. All this is amusing when the carpet hovers at a low altitude. When the carpet is soaring through the clouds or crossing a yawning chasm . . . hilarity.

Greater Horn of Blasting

The duergar are thought to have crafted the first greater horns of blasting, using them as tools of war in their frequent clashes with the other races of the Underdark. Copied first by the dwarves who came into conflict with their debased kin, then long since spread to the surface world, this horn allows its user to stun foes or break through their fortifications with equal ease. However, the lack of self-preservation typical of the duergar infects this item's design, and its power can affect friends as well as enemies.

Greater Horn of Blasting Level 17+ Rare

Even as you raise it to your lips, this horn begins to shudder in anticipation of the deadly fury it will unleash.

Lvl 17 65,000 gp Lvl 27 1,625,000 gp
Lvl 22 325,000 gp

Wondrous Item

Property

Whenever you make a Strength check to break a door or other object, you can gain a +4 item bonus to the check by blowing the horn as a minor action.

Level 22: +5 item bonus.

Level 27: +6 item bonus.

Attack Power (Thunder) ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Attack: Close blast 3 (creatures in the blast); the horn's level + 3 vs. Fortitude

Hit: The target is stunned and takes ongoing 10 thunder damage (save ends both).

Miss: The target is dazed (save ends).

Level 22: Close blast 5, and ongoing 15 thunder damage.

Level 27: Close blast 5, and ongoing 20 thunder damage.

Guardian's Whistle

A guardian's whistle is a useful tool crafted by a wizard and granted to a trusted guardian. The whistle creates a burst of magic that winds through the planar firmament, grabs a creature, and pulls it next to the whistle's user. In this manner, a person can be whisked away to safety.

Guardian's Whistle Level 4 Uncommon

This tin whistle is covered with runes that look like they have been crudely scratched into its surface.

Wondrous Item 840 gp

Utility Power (Teleportation) ✦ Daily (Move Action)

Effect: Close burst 10 (one ally in the burst). The target teleports to an unoccupied square adjacent to you.

Hunter's Flint

The rangers who patrolled the now-fallen territories of Nerath's fringe kingdoms crafted the hunter's flint as a tool against the harsh climes of those frontier lands. Explorers who spend time in the wilds or the Underdark are often keen to find one of these items, whose benefit can be summoned forth during even the worst weather or inclement conditions.

Hunter's Flint Level 2 Common

A warm, bright fire quickly erupts from a single spark struck off this magical shard.

Wondrous Item 520 gp

Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You light a campfire using this flint that burns without smoke or sound. The bright light of this magic campfire is invisible from outside its 10-square radius, though creatures and objects within that radius can be seen normally with darkvision or if existing light allows. The campfire is a normal fire in all other respects. The fire lasts for 12 hours (requiring no additional fuel) or until it is extinguished normally. The flint can be used to light lanterns and other fires as normal, but such fires gain no magical qualities.

Instant Campsite

The outlying territories of Nerath were administered according to the laws and social structure of the stronger central kingdoms. The minor nobles and viceroys ordered to patrol these outposts (most of them transferred from the urbanized center of the empire) often found themselves uncomfortable with the more rustic culture and lack of amenities of their subject territories. Widely ridiculed by some when it was first used by these traveling lords, the instant campsite has since become part of the gear for many parties of adventurers and explorers.

Instant Campsite Level 5 Common

This tightly packed satchel expands into a complete campsite that can automatically pack up again.

Wondrous Item 1,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You open this satchel and it magically expands into a complete campsite, including a campfire and four two-person tents with bedrolls. The campfire requires no fuel and lasts up to 12 hours, or until you spend another standard action to pack the campsite back into the satchel once more.

Iron Bands of Bilarro

These seemingly mundane bands were first created to detain powerful warriors and spellcasters without harming them. According to legend, the bands were made by the wizards of a long-lost empire to capture their enemies and carry them into captivity, where they could be forced to reveal their secrets.

Iron Bands of Bilarro Level 13+ Uncommon

This rusty iron sphere has a series of shallow grooves that trace concentric circles across its surface.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 13 | 17,000 gp | Lvl 23 | 425,000 gp |
| Lvl 18 | 85,000 gp | Lvl 28 | 2,125,000 gp |

Wondrous Item

Attack Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Attack: Ranged 10 (one creature of size Medium or smaller); the bands' level + 3 vs. Reflex

Hit: The target cannot use its arms until it succeeds on an Acrobatics or Athletics check (moderate DC of the bands' level) as a move action. Until the effect ends, the target is prevented from doing anything that requires its arms, such as climbing or making a melee attack. When the effect ends, the bands return to you.

Miss: The bands return to you.

Lens of Discernment

The sage and ritualist Ugundeg crafted a lens of discernment for himself to aid his life's work—documenting and cataloging every natural and unnatural creature within the borders of Nerath. The scholar met an early end, however, when he mistook the covering over a deep pit trap for some kind of dormant plant creature. As he crept closer, he peered even more intently through his lens—until he actually stepped on the "creature" and fell to his doom. His assistants claimed the rest of his magical gear (including, presumably, a spare lens or two) and fled for parts unknown. These eyepieces have turned up in the hands of explorers and adventurers ever since.

Lens of Discernment Level 10 Common

When you look through this lens at an unknown creature, the truth about the creature is suddenly clear to you.

Wondrous Item 5,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: You hold the lens up to a creature that you can see. You gain a +10 power bonus to monster knowledge checks to identify that creature until the start of your next turn.

Even as knowledgeable as I am, a lens of discernment still proves useful. Mad wizards, angry gods, hidden planes, and untouched corners of worlds continue to disgorge new beasts. The lens proves a swift means of knowing crucial facts. Does this creature spit acid? Can that third eye paralyze or blind? Is it beholden to some evil deity? Does it speak a language? All might be revealed by a glimpse through the lens.

Map of Orienteering

The halfling scout Legarri used a map of orienteering to great success as a leader of the first imperial survey as it explored the deadliest ruins within the newly forged empire of Nerath. Legarri's final expedition disappeared in the dungeons of Rolonna Tor. A passage in her journal, recovered from one of the dungeon's dark chambers, suggests that Legarri believed that her map secretly retained all the knowledge placed within it, if only a means of accessing that information could be discovered. The ability to temporarily record a user's surroundings has made items of this ilk invaluable to generations of explorers since Legarri's demise, and many have sought her particular copy of the map hoping to learn about all her explorations.

Map of Orienteering Level 9 Common

As you unfold this sheet of parchment, sepia ink spreads across its surface to depict your immediate surroundings.

Wondrous Item 4,200 gp

Property

While unfolded, this map automatically and continuously produces a rendering of the area within 100 feet of it in all directions. It can display only what you have seen personally, so invisible objects, undiscovered traps or secret doors, and unknown areas around the next corner do not appear on the map. Illusions are faithfully reproduced unless you have previously recognized them as false. Creatures are not shown on the map unless they take the form of objects and have not been recognized for what they are (for example, a gargoyle mistaken for a statue).

The map shows the area within 100 feet by default, but you can mentally command it to zoom in or out to display any areas explored within the last 24 hours as a minor action.

The map automatically erases and begins redrawing after you take an extended rest, unless you command it to do otherwise.

Map of Unseen Lands

Tribes of river-wandering halflings first brought maps of unseen lands to the attention of other races, though the origin of these rare relics remains a mystery. Followers of Avandra, the deity of travel and adventure, claim that each map calls upon her knowledge. Others say the maps flow from the memories of all who have ever lived in an area. Many superstitious adventurers are cautious when using one of these maps, fearful of what dark energy it truly taps into.

Map of Unseen Lands Level 7 Rare

Unseen images glimmer within this mundane-looking sheet of vellum, which erupts with detail as it creates complex maps at your command.

Wondrous Item 2,600 gp

Property

You gain a +2 item bonus to Nature checks and Perception checks to navigate through areas mapped by this item's power.

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: You command the map to redraw itself, depicting the surface area in a 10-mile radius around you. The map doesn't go into precise detail, but it is accurate. It shows only aboveground terrain, not underground areas.

The map displays the following features.

- ✦ General terrain, such as mountains, rivers, and lakes
- ✦ Structures 5,000 square feet or larger in area
- ✦ Structures important for travel, such as bridges and portals
- ✦ Lairs of creatures that are significant threats
- ✦ Names or general descriptions of any of the above features, if such information is well known within the area represented by the map.

The sketch remains on the map until this power is used again.

Mountebank's Deck

Legend holds that the first of these decks of cards was fashioned by Baalzebul to fulfill a diabolic pact he struck with a wandering gambler. The cards guarantee victory in any game of chance, because they allow their owner to arrange whatever hands he wishes. Most owners of such a deck dole out a few winning hands for other players to begin with, carefully hoarding the deck's power for a decisive victory.

Mountebank's Deck Level 1 Uncommon

This plain deck of cards looks crisp and new, suggesting that you are likewise new at the game.

Wondrous Item 360 gp

Property

You can attune this deck of cards to yourself by shedding six drops of blood on it during a short rest. From that point forward, whenever you draw or deal a card from this deck, it is of a suit and value of your choice. Anyone else who interacts with the deck finds it to be a normal deck of whatever game it is designed for. Only one creature can be attuned to the deck at a time.

VINCENT DUTRAIT

Nolzur's Inkwell

A useful tool for deterring pursuit, Nolzur's inkwell is filled with black ink imbued with the stuff of shadows, illusions, and transmutation. When spilled upon the floor, the ink forms a 20-foot-deep hole within the planar firmament. The hole drops downward, though any creature on a floor below would notice nothing out of the ordinary. The inkwell bends and folds space, creating a hole in space without physically expanding downward. Once the magic of the inkwell is discharged, it slowly replenishes over time, refilling with ink again after several hours.

Nolzur's Inkwell — Level 6 Uncommon

This glass inkwell is stained and battered, as if it has seen much use.

Wondrous Item 1,800 gp

Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: The ink creates a zone in a close blast 2 that lasts until the end of the encounter. The ground of the zone becomes an extradimensional pit that is 20 feet deep. The pit does not extend through the floor, since it warps space to produce its effect. Climbing out of the pit requires a DC 15 Athletics check. A creature in the zone when it is created floats to the bottom of the pit without taking damage. A creature in the pit when the zone ends rises back to the ground safely.

Pearl of Power

The original pearls of power were gifts of the eladrin queen Jillyra to the most devoted members of her arcane guard. Crafted from freshwater pearls plucked from the Moonsheen River in the Feywild, these handy items were brought to the world by eladrin explorers.

Pearl of Power — Level 7+ Uncommon

This pearl grows warm to the touch each time you attack, ready to overcome your enemies' best attempts to thwart you.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 7 | 2,600 gp | Lvl 27 | 1,625,000 gp |
| Lvl 17 | 65,000 gp | | |

Wondrous Item

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Free Action)

Trigger: You miss all targets with an encounter attack power of level 3 or lower.

Effect: You do not expend the use of the power.

Level 17: You can use the pearl with an encounter attack power of level 13 or lower.

Level 27: You can use the pearl with an encounter attack power of level 23 or lower.

Pouches of Shared Acquisition

The twin dwarf rogues Hallfri and Hallger commissioned the crafting of the first pouches of shared acquisition for their operations in the nobles' enclaves of Nerath. By magically passing ill-gotten goods back and forth between them, these two master thieves stayed one step ahead of the law for many years. In the end, the twins were victims of their own success, killed by rivals who learned about the special gear and wanted the pouches for their own purposes.

Pouches of Shared Acquisition — Level 15 Common

These matched leather pouches allow you to move items between them.

Wondrous Item 25,000 gp

Property

These two matched leather pouches magically share the same interior space. Whatever is placed in one pouch (to a maximum weight of 3 pounds) can be accessed from the other pouch regardless of the distance between them, as long as both pouches are on the same plane. If the pouches are on different planes, neither pouch can access the interior space. Only one pouch can be accessed at a time.

Do not place money in a pouch of shared acquisition. Even if you can trust your friend not to spend it all, when your pocket gets picked, you both go hungry.

Restful Bedroll

This bedroll appears to be woven of rough wool, though it is soft to the touch and inexplicably comfortable. Though this item is clearly a boon to adventurers and warriors alike, the dwarves of the Black Shakes Mountains crafted the restful bedroll for more mundane purposes. The miners who plumbed the mountain's unstable depths worked under the threat of harm at all times, and the vitality granted by this item's magic often meant the difference between mere injury and death.

Restful Bedroll — Level 1 Common

A good long rest in this magic bedroll grants you extra vigor.

Wondrous Item 360 gp

Property

Whenever you complete an extended rest in the restful bedroll, you gain 1d8 temporary hit points.

Spymaster's Quill

The Spymaster was the title of the always nameless captain responsible for intelligence operations across ancient Nerath—a position of rank so high that it answered only to the emperor. The spymaster's quill was fabricated for the Spymaster and his most trusted operatives, who formed the thieves' guild known as the Unseen Eyes after the empire's fall. Surviving spymaster's quills show up from time to time in the hands of adventurers. However, it is said that the Eyes know the location of each of these "misplaced" quills—and that each one is stolen back once it contains valuable lore.

Spymaster's quill

| Spymaster's Quill | Level 10 Common |
|---|---|
| When you set this quill pen to parchment, traces of glowing golden light flare to capture the information you record. | |
| Wondrous Item | 5,000 gp |
| Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Standard Action) | |
| Effect: You pass the quill over an amount of text or an illustration equivalent to a single parchment page. The image or text is magically recorded within the quill for later reproduction. Recording another page with the quill erases the page already recorded. | |
| Utility Power ✦ At-Will (Standard Action) | |
| Effect: You point the quill at a sheet of parchment or paper and mentally command it to reproduce the illustration or text recorded within it. No matter what the medium of the original (charcoal on paper, runes scribed in stone, and so on), the reproduction is rendered in normal ink.The reproduction created by the quill is identical in appearance to the original, but the quill cannot record magical properties. For example, you cannot perform a ritual from a ritual scroll recorded and reproduced by the quill, nor can the quill copy powers or rituals from a wizard's spellbook. | |

True Portable Hole

Perhaps the most unusual item to have originated in the Feywild, the true portable hole is a circle of magical cloth spun from the webs of the phase spider. Imbued with the power of that otherworldly realm, this item opens up a hole in the world that is under its possessor's control. Most of the similar items that can be found today were crafted by ritualists and artificers from the mortal realm before the secrets of the hole's construction were lost. It is said that the original versions of the true portable hole contain a latent connection to the Feywild, and that they are imbued with additional power that can be tapped into only by the creatures of that realm.

| True Portable Hole | Level 15 Uncommon |
|---|---|
| This slip of black cloth lets you safely store items in a hidden space when you unfold it. | |
| Wondrous Item | 25,000 gp |
| Property | |
| A true portable hole weighs 1 pound and is 6 inches in diameter in its closed state. It can be enlarged to 6 feet in diameter or shrunk to its smaller size by folding it as one folds a sheet of cloth. When spread upon any surface, a true portable hole transforms into the mouth of an extradimensional space 10 feet deep, into which items can be placed for storage. When the hole is picked up from the surface, the entrance disappears and anything inside the space remains there. The hole cannot be closed if any creatures are within it.The items that can be placed within the portable hole are limited only by volume—up to a maximum of 6 feet by 6 feet by 10 feet—not by weight. | |

Unfettered Thieves' Tools

The half-elf rogue Thalith Three Fingers commissioned this handsome set of thieves' tools shortly after interacting with the trap that earned her that nickname. Even maimed as she was, Thalith's thievery skills became more acute with these tools at her disposal. After she bequeathed her tools to her shiftless son, who then lost them, the secret of their crafting was sold for a paltry sum (some say for beer money), and a few copies began appearing in the world. It is said that Thalith's spirit remains linked to her original set of tools, which will enable even greater feats of thievery and legerdemain when they finally pass into the hands of a thief as skilled as she was.

| Unfettered Thieves' Tools | Level 11 Uncommon |
|---|---|
| The picks, keys, and tongs of this set of thieves' tools appear ordinary—until they rise into the air to move under your mental command. | |
| Wondrous Item | 9,000 gp |
| Property | |
| Like a normal set of thieves' tools, unfettered thieves' tools grant a +2 bonus to Thievery checks to open locks or disable traps. | |
| Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action) | |
| Effect: You make a Thievery check on an object you can see within 5 squares of you. | |

Consumable Items

Most enchanted items have a special feature that is usable with regularity. Consumable items are different because each one is expended after a single use (and they're priced accordingly). Easy to afford and easy to carry, the potions, elixirs, and other substances in this category can easily be worth more than their weight in gold when they're used at just the right time.

Elixirs and Potions

The methods used to create elixirs and potions bear some similarity to alchemical processes, but whereas alchemy relies on the interaction and reaction between substances, an elixir or a potion is directly infused with powerful magic.

Cryptspawn Potion

The necromancers of the Black Scar cult first crafted this foul brew from spider's venom and the blood of the condemned. A hero of good moral bent who comes into possession of a cryptspawn potion often feels an almost physical revulsion to it. However, those who overcome this aversion gain a measure of defensive power.

Potions are much like sausages. Far fewer people would consume them if they knew their ingredients: mole hair, bat tongue, spider venom, gorgon blood, even goblin foot fungus—and those are some of the more appetizing ones. Yet much of potion brewing is art and showmanship rather than true formulae. The secrets to creating many potions have been lost because their creators either lacked a true understanding of their process or they deliberately obscured elements in order to preserve their recipes as their personal domains. I know of one brewer who insists upon orphans' tears as the base for his work. I would shudder to think about how he collects that substance in the quantities he requires, except that I'm certain he actually uses well water and a little salt.

Cryptspawn Potion — Level 5+ Common

Drinking this viscous fluid that smells of decay provides protection against the powers of creatures that live beyond the grave.

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the potion and lose a healing surge. You then gain resist 5 necrotic and resist 5 poison until the end of the encounter. You also gain a +5 power bonus to your next Endurance check against any disease of the potion's level or lower.

Level 15: Resist 10 necrotic and resist 10 poison.

Level 25: Resist 15 necrotic and resist 15 poison.

Elixir of Accuracy

The magical laboratories of Nerath turned out countless vials of this sour, azure liquid for use by the scouts and rangers of that realm, who kept the frontiers of the empire safe. Today, bandit chieftains, petty lords, and self-styled heroes all carry this elixir. Many see simply having a flask of this substance as a status symbol and forego using it, even when doing so might tip the balance of combat in their favor.

Elixir of Accuracy — Level 8+ Common

This crisp draught leaves your senses clear and your aim true.

Consumable: Elixir

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Requirement: Your level must be equal to or lower than the elixir's level + 4.

Effect: You drink the elixir. Once before the end of the encounter, you can use a free action when you make an attack roll and dislike the result. You gain a +2 bonus to that attack roll.

Elixir of Aptitude

The wizard-sages of the ancient city of Astigar first crafted the elixir of aptitude as a tool to augment their unequaled mastery of research and lore. It wasn't long before the thieves' guild known as the Grayblades stole the crafting process. Their more profitable application of the elixir made it highly sought after by scoundrels and adventurers.

Elixir of Aptitude — Level 5+ Common

Elixir of Chameleon Power

The halfling mage Lohana the Left-Handed first crafted this draught, which the heroes of the ancient clans used to enhance their preferred stealthy fighting style. Lohana traded the formula for the elixir of chameleon power to King Paulin of Donostia in exchange for the halfling clans' right to travel freely in the frontier provinces—a pact that set the stage for later compacts between the clans and Nerath.

Elixir of Chameleon Power Level 8 Uncommon

Once consumed, this clear liquid lets you blend in with your surroundings.

Consumable: Elixir 125 gp

Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir. Once before the end of the encounter, you can use a minor action to change your color and tone to blend in with your background. You gain total concealment until the end of the encounter, until you attack, or until you are not adjacent to a wall or another object at least as large as you.

While under this power's concealment effect, you do not take the penalty to Stealth checks for moving.

Elixir of Clairvoyance

This substance first came to prominence during the exploits of the adventuring company known as the Band of the Golden Lion. That group made its name in Orhiran, the Dungeon of Endless Doors, whose warren of cells is thought to have once housed a planar prison. Vials of elixir of clairvoyance were instrumental in allowing the Golden Lions to best that ruin's deadly traps.

Elixir of Clairvoyance Level 5+ Uncommon

As you consume this elixir, a haze of ghostly images fills your sight, focusing finally on the single vision you seek.

Lvl 5 50 gp Lvl 25 25,000 gp
Lvl 15 1,000 gp

Consumable: Elixir

Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir. Until the end of your next turn, you gain the ability to see as if you were standing in a square at any location within 2 squares of you. You do not need line of sight or line of effect to the location, but it must be a place already known to you or clearly defined (for example, a square on the other side of a door that you can see). Your perception of the area is with your normal senses, and you might need to make Perception checks to note specific features of the area.

Level 15: Any location within 5 squares of you.

Level 25: Any location within 10 squares of you.

Sustain Minor: You sustain the effect until the end of your next turn, and you can shift the point of view of your clairvoyance to another square within 2 (or 5 or 10) squares of you.

Elixir of Climbing

The guards of Castle Moonroot, perched high atop the Sanduru Peaks, first commissioned this useful elixir, calling it moonroot juice. Its more common name is prevalent in the wider lands where it can still be found. A creature that imbibes an elixir of climbing can cling to sheer slopes of rock with the tenacity of a mountain goat. However, the elixir's power isn't absolute, and those whose climbing is hindered by other factors (such as wearing armor) should still proceed with care.

Elixir of Climbing — Level 6+ Common

This draught smells of clear air and mountain wildflowers. Consuming it allows you to easily move along walls and other sheer surfaces.

Level 16: +6 power bonus.

Level 26: +8 power bonus.

Elixir of Defense

The ancient alchemists of Oihan were said to have crafted enchanted draughts that could protect the imbiber from any attack against body or mind. That craft survives today only in the form of the elixir of defense, a viscous fluid set in a weathered vial of wax-sealed bone. Popular legend has it that combining two or more elixirs of defense will reproduce the more formidable brew on which these items were modeled. However, countless doses of this draught have been ruined in attempts to achieve that goal.

Elixir of Defense — Level 8+ Uncommon

A flood of protective energy fills you when you drink this bitter draught.

Consumable: Elixir

Special: When this elixir is created, the crafter chooses a defense: Fortitude, Reflex, or Will.

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir. Once before the end of the encounter, you can use an immediate interrupt when an attack targeting the chosen defense hits you. Against that attack, your defense equals 17 + the elixir's level.

Elixir of Flying

This liquid is so clear that it appears almost invisible within its crystal flask. As a result, many an adventurer has inadvertently spilled a precious dose of elixir of flying when opening its container. The imbiber of this elixir gains a mastery of flight nearly equal to that of any creature of the air. The benefit is transitory, however, and one must take care not to get too far off the ground.

Elixir of Flying — Level 11+ Uncommon

A moment after imbibing this effervescent draught, your body lifts off the ground and you feel light as a bird.

Consumable: Elixir

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir and gain a fly speed of 4 until the end of the encounter.

When the effect ends, you float 100 feet toward the ground. If you are not on a horizontal surface sufficient to bear your weight at the end of this distance, you fall to the nearest such surface, taking damage accordingly.

Level 21: You gain a fly speed of 8 and can hover.

Elixir of Gaseous Form

The dwarves of the Ingunn Delve are said to have commissioned the first elixir of gaseous form, using it as a magical escape route from the constant collapse of that mine's crumbling tunnels. The elixir gives off a noxious odor even when its container is sealed, though the scent is usually detectable only by whoever is carrying it. However, this odor makes the elixir unpalatable to most monsters, and for that reason vials of it are often found scattered loose among the bones of their former owners.

Elixir of Gaseous Form — Level 12 Uncommon

When you drink this elixir, you feel momentarily lightheaded as your body fades to vapor.

Consumable: Elixir 500 gp

Utility Power (Polymorph) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir and take on the form of a misty cloud until the end of the encounter or until you end the effect as a standard action. All your gear is absorbed into your gaseous form and is inaccessible. While gaseous, you are insubstantial and gain a fly speed equal to your speed, as well as the ability to hover. You cannot make attacks while in gaseous form, but you can move unhindered through tiny openings that would otherwise prevent movement (such as under a door or through a cracked window).

Elixir of Giant Strength

An elixir of giant strength is usually contained in a hollow stone capsule. When one of these containers falls out of the pack of an unwary or injured adventurer, it blends in with natural stone and can easily be missed by later explorers. When consumed, this elixir enables the imbiber to perform great feats of physical power.

Elixir of Giant Strength Level 9+ Uncommon

When you consume this draught, your muscles begin to spasm, but that discomfort ends quickly as you feel great strength rush through your body.

Lvl 9 160 gp Lvl 29 105,000 gp
Lvl 19 4,200 gp
Consumable: Elixir
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir. Until the end of the encounter, you gain a +2 power bonus to Strength ability checks and Strength-based skill checks. You also gain a +2 bonus to the damage rolls of melee basic attacks and of ranged basic attacks with thrown weapons. However, if your attack roll for any such attack is a natural 1 or 2, this effect ends.

Level 19: +4 power bonus to checks; +4 bonus to damage rolls.

Level 29: +6 power bonus to checks; +6 bonus to damage rolls.

Elixir of Invisibility

This liquid is appreciated by all adventurers for its use in combat and exploration, but is notoriously hard to find as treasure. Housed in muted vials of cloud-gray glass, these elixirs often go unnoticed among the detritus and shadows of forgotten places.

Elixir of Invisibility Level 6+ Uncommon

When you drink this scentless liquid, you fade from view.

Lvl 6 75 gp Lvl 16 1,800 gp
Consumable: Elixir
Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir and become invisible until the end of your next turn or until you attack.

Level 16: You become invisible until the end of the encounter or until you attack.

Elixir of Levitation

This flask made from carefully carved and stained black oak feels all but weightless. Elixirs of levitation were made famous by the half-elf rogue Almaralin, known as the Thief of Hearts. For years, he scaled the heights of the great towers of Tjunagi, openly taunting that city's noble lords even as he earned his nickname by trysting with their wives.

Elixir of Levitation Level 8 Uncommon

Drinking this frothy elixir allows you to rise up into the air, in addition to making your feet and hands tingle.

Consumable: Elixir 125 gp
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir. Until the end of the encounter, you gain the ability to fly into the air as a move action, moving up to 4 squares vertically and 1 square horizontally. You cannot rise more than 10 squares above the ground directly beneath you. If some effect, such as a pit opening below you, causes you to be more than 10 squares above the ground, you drop the entire distance but do not take falling damage. If you are knocked prone while levitating, you do not fall.

When this power's effect ends, you float safely to the ground.

No small wonder that many potions mimic the effects of wizards' spells, since wizards are so often the potions' creators. And with the many needs placed upon a wizard's prepared spells, you can clearly see the sense of keeping a potion at the ready for some unexpected eventuality. That so many potions can be found in the belongings of folk other than wizards and their friends says something about how well such precautions work.

Elixir of Luck

Elixirs of luck are now rare in the world, due to the scarcity of their key component, orium. In ages long past, such elixirs were produced in the city of Vor Rukoth, where orium was abundant. The city had such a sizable supply of the elixirs that it was forced to impose a recreational ban on the liquid due to excessive use in gambling dens and gladiatorial combat. Many of the surviving elixirs are those that were smuggled out of Vor Rukoth during its final days.

Elixir of Luck Level 10 Rare

The red-gold liquid contained within this vial shines with its own dim light. When you drink it, you feel as though nothing could go wrong.

Consumable: Elixir 200 gp
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir and lose an action point. Once before the end of the encounter, you can reroll a failed skill check, attack roll, or saving throw. You must use the second result.

Elixir of Phasing

This draught grants the unearthly power of the phase spider to whoever drinks it. It is brewed and stored in an enchanted vial crafted from a fang of one of those dread arachnids. The eladrin warrior-princess Ranaeria is credited with first crafting the elixir. She did so to protect her lover, Gaveny, from the dangers of the world when he led their race to a new home after the war that sundered the fey races.

Elixir of Phasing Level 17 Uncommon

This brackish gray liquid seems to appear and disappear within its vial at short intervals. The effect carries over to you when you consume it.

Consumable: Elixir 2,600 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir and are phasing until the end of your next turn.

Elixir of Protection from Evil

These holy elixirs used to be produced by a small group of monastics residing in Gardmore Abbey in the Nentir Vale. The monastics produced the elixirs for the knights of Bahamut, who guarded the abbey. After the abbey's fall, the recipe for the elixirs was lost for a time. Recent expeditions to the abbey have uncovered the recipe, and a few holy orders have begun to unravel the secrets of crafting the elixir.

Elixir of Protection from Evil Level 5+ Uncommon

The pearly white liquid of this potion leaves you with a feeling of righteous zeal against those who would do evil.

Lvl 5 50 gp Lvl 25 25,000 gp
Lvl 15 1,000 gp

Consumable: Elixir

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Requirement: Your level must be equal to or lower than the elixir's level + 5.

Effect: You drink the elixir and gain a +1 power bonus to damage rolls against evil creatures and to all defenses against evil creatures' attacks. The bonus lasts until the end of your next turn.

Level 15: +2 power bonus.

Level 25: +3 power bonus.

Elixir of Treasure Finding

The adventuring group known as the Fists of Kord is remembered for its exploration of the Nerath frontier. Much of the group's early work was underwritten by the early emperors, who found it easier to hire out the task of searching and mapping the more dangerous corners of their realm. After some time, however, the keepers of the imperial treasury grew dissatisfied with the expense of this operation when they learned how little wealth the Fists were bringing back. The group's wizard crafted the first elixirs of treasure finding in response, enabling the Fists of Kord to locate valuable objects that might otherwise have been overlooked—prompting the empire to give the Fists of Kord a lifetime contract. The method of the elixir's creation eventually spread throughout the empire, and the number of undiscovered treasure hoards diminished accordingly.

Elixir of Treasure Finding Level 5+ Uncommon

A hint of exotic spices fills your senses as you drink this draught, which produces a faint tingling in the back of your mind when treasure is close by.

Lvl 5 50 gp Lvl 25 25,000 gp
Lvl 15 1,000 gp

Consumable: Elixir

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir. Until the end of your next turn, you gain an innate sense of the direction to the nearest treasure worth at least 100 gp within 10 squares of you (ignorng treasure carried by you and your allies). This power functions through any intervening barrier except special magical wards or barriers lined entirely with lead. You are not aware of the distance to the treasure, nor do you gain any hint of the route to it or any physical features at its location.

Level 15: Within 20 squares.

Level 25: Within 40 squares.

The elixir of treasure finding must be one of the most fiendish pranks played upon greedy folk. My one-time adventuring companion, Robilar, once purchased one for a hefty sum and used it in a dungeon to find a gem worth roughly fifty gold more than he paid for the potion. He then "invested" in a dozen more potions. Needless to say, without having a very good idea that a princely sum lies nearby, the investment often fails to pay off.

Elixir of Water Breathing

The ancient king Kelemen is said to have commissioned the first elixir of water breathing to help him plunder the lost sahuagin ruins known as the Mouth of Darkness. These draughts offer great benefit to explorers plumbing the depths, but the effect is far from permanent. Sahuagin, kuo-toas, and other intelligent aquatic predators use this fact to their advantage when facing enemies from the surface, intentionally prolonging conflicts in the hope that the defilers of their realms would end up dying there.

Elixir of Water Breathing Level 8+ Common

The shortness of breath you feel when quaffing this potion is offset by its ability to allow you to breathe easily underwater.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 8 | 125 gp | Lvl 18 | 3,400 gp |

Consumable: Elixir

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir and can breathe underwater for 1 hour.

Level 18: You can breathe underwater until your next extended rest.

Lesser Elixir of Dragon Breath

This elixir was first crafted by the warlocks of Bael Turath during that empire's bitter conflict with Arkhosia. Tiefling shock troops took great delight in blasting their dragonborn foes with an attack that matched the dragonborns' innate power. However, when the Turathi spread the rumor among their enemies that this draught was crafted from the blood and bile of fallen dragonborn warriors, the elixir of dragon breath proved even more effective as a psychological weapon.

Lesser Elixir of Dragon Breath Level 6+ Common

You drink this syrupy elixir, and a surge of energy courses through your body, waiting to be released in an explosion of breath.

| Lvl 16 | 1,800 gp | | |

Consumable: Elixir

Special: When this elixir is created, the crafter chooses acid, cold, fire, lightning, or poison. The elixir gains that keyword, and all damage dealt by it is of that damage type.

Attack Power (Varies) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir. Once before the end of the encounter, you can use a minor action to make the following attack.

Attack: Close blast 3 (creatures in the blast); the elixir's level + 5 vs. Reflex

Hit: 2d6 + 3 damage of the chosen type.

Level 16: 3d8 + 7 damage.

Level 26: 4d6 + 12 damage.

Lesser Elixir of Speed

The war couriers of Nerath were protected by decrees of imperial law that promised death to anyone who interfered with the communications of the state. In practice, however, these expertly trained runners and riders trusted less in such statecraft than they did in the lesser elixirs of speed crafted for them in the empire's arcane laboratories.

Lesser Elixir of Speed Level 10 Common

Your heartbeat races as you drink this elixir, which sends energy surging through your nerves and limbs.

Consumable: Elixir 200 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the elixir and lose a healing surge. You then gain a +2 power bonus to speed until the end of the encounter.

Potion of Clarity

All present-day examples of these crystal flasks of cyan liquid are said to be derived from a single cache of ancient drow treasure, dating from the conflict that sundered that race from the elves and eladrin. The dark elves' belief in the superiority of their race drove them to create these potions, which drastically (and secretly) improve the imbiber's chance of success in combat.

Potion of Clarity Level 5+ Uncommon

This cool draught hones your physical and mental acuity at a critical moment, allowing you to strike true.

| | | | |

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the potion. Once before the end of the encounter, when you make an attack roll for an encounter or a daily attack power and dislike the result, you can reroll the attack roll, but you must use the second result. The power's level must be equal to or lower than the potion's level.

Potion of Cure Critical Wounds

This curative draught was once favored by combat medics, who would wear a bandolier of the potions during wartime. They would save the potions for the most grievously wounded soldiers, who would be fed the potions and then helped off the battlefield. Although such wars are scarce now, the potions have lost none of their utility.

Potion of Cure Critical Wounds Level 20 Uncommon

This potion covers your deep wounds in bright silver light, causing them to mend.

Consumable: Potion 5,000 gp

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the potion. If you have a healing surge, you must spend one. Instead of the hit points you would normally regain, you regain 3d8 + 20 hit points. If you are bloodied and don't have any healing surges, you still regain the hit points. If neither of these things is true, there is no effect.

Potion of Cure Light Wounds

Adventurers heading out into the wilderness or plumbing the depths of dungeons keep a plentiful supply of these potions in their satchels, in case of emergency. Scholars believe that this variety of curative potions was one of the first types of potions to be created. In the days of the Dawn War, the gods saw how their mortal allies suffered on the battlefield, and they devised a way to bottle up the healing powers of clerics in a small flask. The potion of cure light wounds represents the most basic variety of the potion, though more powerful versions exist as well.

Potion of Cure Light Wounds Level 1 Uncommon

This potion covers your small cuts and minor bruises in dim silver light, causing them to heal over.

Consumable: Potion 20 gp

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the potion. If you have a healing surge, you must spend one. Instead of the hit points you would normally regain, you regain 1d8 + 1 hit points. If you are bloodied and don't have any healing surges, you still regain the hit points. If neither of these things is true, there is no effect.

Potion of Cure Moderate Wounds

Along with other vast stores of lore, the knowledge of how to brew these curative potions was lost after the fall of Nerath. Only in recent years did the potions start appearing across the world again. The origin of the potions was tracked to a peddler south of the Nentir Vale, who had purchased a recipe from adventurers who had been exploring Nera, the ancient capital of Nerath.

Potion of Cure Moderate Wounds Level 10 Uncommon

This potion covers your wounds in silver light, helping them heal.

Consumable: Potion 200 gp

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the potion. If you have a healing surge, you must spend one. Instead of the hit points you would normally regain, you regain 2d8 + 10 hit points. If you are bloodied and don't have any healing surges, you still regain the hit points. If neither of these things is true, there is no effect.

Potion of Heal

This powerful healing potion is among the most sought after consumables in the world. Alchemists have tried for centuries to master the recipe. Some claim it requires tears of joy shed from an angel of good. Others say the potion cannot be created, but rather, it comes from water captured from a magical fountain hidden deep within the Astral Sea. The few creatures that have the knowledge and power to craft this astonishing brew keep the secret close, lest it fall into the wrong hands.

Potion of Heal Level 30 Uncommon

This potion covers your most grievous wounds in brilliant silver light, restoring your body.

Consumable: Potion125,000 gp

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the potion. If you have a healing surge, you must spend one. Instead of the hit points you would normally regain, you regain 4d8 + 30 hit points. If you are bloodied and don't have any healing surges, you still regain the hit points. In addition, you can make a saving throw against each effect on you that a save can end. If neither of these things is true, there is no effect.

Potion of Heroism

The mage known as Mad Mikolas popularized the potion of heroism, though it remains unknown whether he actually created it or merely improved upon the work of other crafters. The physically frail Mikolas was fond of challenging the burliest warriors to barroom grudge fights, and almost inevitably cleaning up in the wagering when his magical handiwork left him the last one standing.

Potion of Heroism Level 16+ Uncommon

This bitter potion gives you a surge of vitality and resilience.

Lvl 16 1,800 gp Lvl 26 45,000 gp

Consumable: Potion

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You drink the potion and gain 20 temporary hit points. In addition, you gain a +2 power bonus to saving throws until the end of the encounter.

Level 26: 50 temporary hit points.

Potions carry strange names. The potion of heroism, while useful, grants you none of the courage of a true hero. And the potion of invulnerability is disastrously misnamed; though it can protect you from a great many dangers, its benefit is exceptionally brief. Of course, if the elixir of giant strength were called the "elixir of somewhat greater strength than you had before," its name would neither roll off the tongue nor inspire confidence in whoever drank it. That the potion of heroism is called such might be enough to make one act like a hero upon drinking it, and that in itself has value.

Potion of Invulnerability

The tart draught in this iron flask confers tremendous defensive strength to its imbiber, though the efficacy of the potion of invulnerability is only a pale reflection of its legend. Crafted for the celebrated King Thorkat, the original potion is said to have rendered its imbiber immune to all damage dealt by any mortal creature—a latent feature that some believe might yet be found in the oldest examples of this substance.

Potion of Invulnerability Level 10+ Common

A sense of unyielding resolve floods through you when you drink this sweet draught.

Lvl 10 200 gp Lvl 30 125,000 gp
Lvl 20 5,000 gp
Consumable: Potion

Effect: You drink the potion and gain resist 25 to all damage until the end of your next turn.
Level 20: Resist 35 to all damage.
Level 30: Resist 45 to all damage.

Potion of Lesser Haste

Although the recipe for a true potion of haste has eluded potion makers, this imitation has earned respect among warriors for its versatility. Thieves' guilds often hire alchemists specifically to brew potions of lesser haste. Beneath cities, they brew huge vats of the silvery liquid, which are distributed among the guilds' members so they can make quick getaways.

Potion of Lesser Haste Level 10 Uncommon

When you consume the silvery liquid of this elixir, your body begins to blur as your movement quickens.

Consumable: Potion 200 gp
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)
Effect: You drink the potion and spend a healing surge. You gain an extra move action to use either during your current turn or your next turn.

Potion of Regeneration

Sages and others who are knowledgeable about such things claim that the original versions of this draught were distilled from the blood of lycanthropes. Arcane craft quickly reworked those original formulas to use ingredients whose collection was less life-threatening. Original versions of this copper-scented potion do show up from time to time, however, and rumors suggest that those potions infect whoever drinks them with the curse of lycanthropy.

Potion of Regeneration Level 9+ Uncommon

The most grievous wounds trigger this potion's remarkable restorative power.

Lvl 9 160 gp Lvl 29 105,000 gp
Lvl 19 4,200 gp
Consumable: Potion
Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)
Effect: You drink this potion and lose a healing surge. You then gain regeneration 5 while you're bloodied until the end of the encounter.
Level 19: Regeneration 10.
Level 29: Regeneration 15.

Potion of Shadow's Essence

By carefully collecting the essence of a monstrous shadow as it dies, a skilled potion maker can craft a potion of shadow's essence. When the potion is ingested, the imbiber's skin turns an ashen gray as lines of darkness rise beneath his skin like bulging veins. In a moment, those lines exude an inky, black fluid that covers the drinker and turns him into a creature of shadow.

Potion of Shadow's Essence Level 17 Uncommon

The liquid in this vial is black and viscous, absorbing the light around it.

Consumable: Potion 2,600 gp
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)
Effect: You drink the potion. Until the end of the encounter, you gain darkvision and are insubstantial and phasing, but you are weakened. You can end this effect as a minor action.

It should be no surprise given the ingredients in a typical potion, but drinking a potion is rarely a pleasant experience. Taste is only half the problem. Some potions are viscous and sticky, leading to a sensation akin to swallowing a slug. Others are thin but oily, leaving the drinker with a lingering sensation that even wine can't wash away. Many are grainy, some contain chunks that seem to demand chewing, and a few actively move in the mouth. Usually, the magical effects are worth the unpleasantness.

Other Consumables

Not all consumable items are meant to be ingested. The selection that follows here is as diverse as any group of wondrous items, ranging from a sprinkling of powder or a vial of oil to a fantastic feather that changes form on command.

Bead of Force

A bead of force is the distilled, physical form of force energy twisted, focused, and forged into a solid object. The energy within the bead seethes and roars, ready to explode upon any stout, physical contact. Stories abound of adventurers being blown to pieces when an unlucky blow landed on a belt pouch carrying several of these items.

Bead of Force Level 15+ Uncommon

This lusterless black pearl seems mundane, but as you grasp it you feel the force magic contained within it reverberate up and down your arm.

| Lvl 20 | 5,000 gp | Lvl 30 | 125,000 gp |

Consumable

Attack Power (Force) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Attack: Ranged 10 (one creature of size Medium or smaller); the bead's level + 3 vs. Reflex

Hit: The target is restrained, cannot teleport, and takes ongoing 10 force damage (save ends all). Until the effect ends, line of effect cannot be traced into or out of the target's space, and attacks cannot enter or exit it.

Miss: The target is slowed and takes ongoing 5 force damage (save ends both).

Level 25 or 30: Ongoing 15 force damage, and ongoing 10 force damage on a miss.

Dust of Disappearance

Dust of disappearance makes the individual over which it is shaken invisible. The downside is that only an observer's vision is affected; the person using it still emits sounds and smells. It also doesn't negate physical effects such as splashing water or a sprinkling of flour from revealing the user's location.

Some ancient tomes suggest that early versions of what is now known as dust of disappearance were viscid salves that had to be laboriously applied to skin and equipment to render it invisible, and that any inadvertent gaps in coverage resulted in gaps in the invisibility as well.

Dust of Disappearance Level 8 Uncommon

When you sprinkle this dust over yourself, you disappear from sight until you do something to shake it loose.

Consumable 125 gp

Utility Power (Illusion) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You sprinkle this dust over yourself or an adjacent ally. That character becomes invisible until he or she moves or attacks, or until the end of the encounter.

Nolzur's marvelous pigments

Nolzur's Marvelous Pigments

This fantastic set of paints can create solid objects where none were before. However, it is the strength and accuracy of the painter's observation and imagination that determine the objects' appearance, beauty, and utility, rather than his or her skill with a brush.

Nearly any nonmagical item can be conjured into being with Nolzur's marvelous pigments, from armor to weaponry, tools to gears, patchwork hose to royal robes. Created items act as expected—painted food is nourishing, painted axes cut wood and flesh, and a painted shield turns back the slings and arrows of invaders.

The painter cannot subtract volumes of space from existing objects, such as painting a hole in the ground, or drawing a (functional) door on a wall. The pigments also cannot conjure living plants or creatures, whether magical, mundane, or simulated (such as golems).

Nolzur's Marvelous Pigments — Level 7 Uncommon

You smear a glob of this paint on a wall or floor, creating any object you desire.

Consumable 100 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You create a nonmagical object that is up to 1 square in volume and weighs up to 200 pounds. The object must be created in an unoccupied square and on a solid surface, such as a floor, a wall, or a tree. The object disappears at the end of the encounter.

Oil of Lasting Flame

This enchanted oil is sometimes used by the wealthy to keep their homes or estates warm. Any fire made with oil of lasting flame burns much longer than usual, unless something puts it out aside from want of fuel. Both mundane and magical methods of extinguishing the flames work as expected: water, sand, a strong gust of wind, or even a cantrip. For this reason, oil of lasting flame is not often employed in combat or turbulent situations. Its best use is to keep a campfire burning all night in areas where natural fuel is difficult to find.

Oil of Lasting Flame — Level 2 Common

A vial of this oil provides heat and flame for a long time.

Consumable 25 gp

Property

When you use this oil to start a fire or light a torch, it burns for 8 hours using its existing fuel. The fire can be put out by normal means.

Oil of Red Flame

This oil gives any weapon coated with it the ability to burst with crimson fire when its wielder lands a strike in combat. This capability does not fade over time, persisting until the weapon is used to make a successful attack. Once the flame is invoked, it can sear its victim continuously for a short time before burning out.

An ancient legend tells of an entire army that maintained their blades every day using this oil over the course of a decade-long campaign. Some scholars think that many of these blades still exist, their scarlet flames still waiting to be ignited because their wielders fell in battle before they could strike a blow.

Oil of Red Flame — Level 8+ Uncommon

You coat your weapon's blade with this oil, knowing that you will be able to call flame to your weapon thereafter.

Lvl 8 125 gp Lvl 28 85,000 gp
Lvl 18 3,400 gp

Consumable

Utility Power (Fire) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You coat a weapon with this oil. The next time you hit a creature with that weapon before the end of the encounter, that creature also takes ongoing 5 fire damage (save ends).
Level 18: Ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).
Level 28: Ongoing 15 fire damage (save ends).

Powder of Appearance

The sentiment that an unknown warrior expressed more than a millennia ago is so universal among martial heroes bedeviled by magic that it has become a catchphrase among their kind everywhere: "If I could see it, it'd be dead!"

It's not clear whether the equally anonymous enchanter who first crafted powder of appearance was a traveling companion of that original frustrated combatant, or whether he or she simply sought to solve the same problem. In any case, when this dust is scattered around an area, it makes visible that which is hidden, whether from invisibility or simple obscurement.

Powder of Appearance — Level 8 Common

As this dust settles over a creature, it reveals that which was hidden.

Consumable 125 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: Close blast 3 (creatures in the blast). Each target loses invisibility and any concealment, and it cannot become invisible or gain concealment (save ends).

Quaal's Feather Tokens

The master wizard who created the original feather tokens, and whose name is still attached to those being crafted today, appreciated magic that was both spectacular and innocuous. Each of these seemingly nondescript feathers turns into something entirely different when the user commands its magic to come forth.

To do so, the wielder holds a feather in hand and announces in a firm voice, "The peerless magic of Grand Archwizard Quaal commands your obedience!" The feather instantly transforms into whatever item it was created to embody.

Among the known kinds of original feather tokens are enchanted anchors that cannot be moved, carrier pigeons that unerringly deliver messages over any distance, and sails that can move a ship even in a dead calm.

Numerous other versions of this item exist, and no doubt others are being reserached. There is no apparent relationship between certain kinds of feathers and their effects, so that it takes either studious investigation or actual use to determine what a particular Quaal's feather token does.

Quaal's Feather Anchor Level 12 Uncommon

You produce a heavy iron anchor that is immobile and sturdy.

Consumable 500 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You produce an anchor that cannot be moved from the location where it comes into being. The anchor persists for one year.

Quaal's Feather Pigeon Level 16 Uncommon

This feather turns into a messenger pigeon that awaits your instruction.

Consumable 1,800 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You produce a small bird that can travel 50 miles a day to unerringly reach any location or individual you name, carrying with it a small written message. The bird disappears after delivering its message.

Quaal's Feather Sail Level 12 Uncommon

With a wave of this feather, a sail unfurls from its tip, ready to be lashed to mast and ropes.

Consumable 500 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You produce a sail that, once installed on a ship, can move it at a normal sailing speed even in the absence of wind. The sail persists for 24 hours.

Sands of Restored Opportunity

It is said that every grain of the sands of restored opportunity originated in an hourglass stolen by an exarch of Sehanine from Ioun's own chambers. One of these deity-scale grains of sand—the size of a small pebble—is able to negate an event that just transpired when it is cast into the air at just the right moment. As the cast pebble disappears in a flash of light, a missed blow instead lands, an ill-timed stumble is corrected, or a mispronounced word of arcane might rings true.

If the tales about the sands are true, these specks will one day be exhausted, and the world will be left without recourse for misfortune. At least one cult that reveres Ioun believes that the expenditure of the last grain of the sands of restored opportunity will presage the end of the world.

Sands of Restored Opportunity Level 29 Uncommon

You fling this pebble into the air. As it flashes and is consumed, time rewinds slightly, allowing events to take a new course.

Consumable 105,000 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Free Action)

Trigger: The result (success or failure) of any check or roll that affects you is determined (for example, a check that you make or an attack that will damage you).

Effect: Reroll that die roll, and use the second result.

Scroll of Protection

Many kinds of protective scrolls are known among the learned, but all function similarly. Upon reading such a scroll, the reader and the area around him or her become inviolate to some category of creature, as determined when the scroll was scribed and enchanted.

When the first of these scrolls was made, it was easy to determine how large an area each one would protect, and it was easy to understand why the one who used the scroll had to refrain from making any attacks. Not so obvious, though, was the fact that allies of the scroll's user could attack from within the shielded area without causing the scroll's aura to vanish. The first warrior who inadvertently discovered that fact will be forever appreciated by those who have taken full advantage of that knowledge.

Scroll

A more scarce version of these scrolls also exists, offering protection against magic. This protection is inviolate against spells and similar effects, but does not physically repel wizards and their kin.

Scroll of Protection — Level 5+ Uncommon

You read words of power from this scroll that repel your enemies and prevent them from attacking.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 5 | +1 | 1,000 gp | Lvl 20 | +4 | 125,000 gp |
| Lvl 10 | +2 | 5,000 gp | Lvl 25 | +5 | 625,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | +3 | 25,000 gp | Lvl 30 | +6 | 3,125,000 gp |

Consumable

Special: When the scroll is created, it is tied to a creature type of the creator's choice: angels; demons; devils; dragons; elementals that have the air, earth, fire, or water keyword; or undead.

Utility Power (Aura) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You activate an aura 2 that lasts until the end of the encounter or until you make an attack. The aura affects any creature of the type chosen at the scroll's creation, as long as the creature's level is equal to or lower than the scroll's level. An affected creature takes a -4 penalty to attack rolls against targets in the aura, and the creature cannot enter the aura willingly. If the creature starts its turn in the aura, it must use its first action to leave the aura by the shortest route possible, unless no route exists.

Trackless Ashes

When mixed into the debris of a dying campfire, a single portion of trackless ashes renders the tracks of all those who were encamped around the fire (including mounts) undiscoverable.

A general in ancient times once experimented with the magic of trackless ashes, trying to keep the activities of his entire legion secret by mixing the ashes into the bonfire of the legion's main encampment, but every attempt at such broad effect failed. His supply of the ash ran out before he was able to learn anything conclusive about the maximum number of soldiers and mounts that could be affected.

Nowadays, this item is available in one size only—an amount sufficient for a typical group of adventurers, plus any mounts or pack animals traveling with them. Using more than one container of trackless ashes on the same campfire has no apparent additional benefit (but that hasn't kept people from giving it a try from time to time).

Trackless Ashes — Level 6 Common

You dump these ashes into your campfire, removing all signs of the camp and of your passage from it.

Consumable 75 gp

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You pour the ashes into a dying campfire. After 5 minutes, the remains of the campfire as well as all tracks within 20 squares of it vanish.

Unreadable Ink

In both its liquid and scribed forms, unreadable ink is invisible. Although difficult to write with because of this characteristic, it is the perfect medium for communicating messages that must remain safe from prying eyes and curious minds.

Any message scribed with unreadable ink must begin with the name, title, or description of the intended recipient. Only that individual can decipher the message, or even realize that a message exists on the material used to scribe it. That individual can be identified specifically ("Lord Blackwood") or generically ("the burgomaster of Watershed") or even by a broad statement ("the first half-elf who finds this parchment").

Unreadable Ink — Level 5 Common

You look at a blank folio, seeing the hidden message written there while others see nothing.

Consumable 50 gp

Property

When used, the ink is invisible to everyone but its intended recipient. The message's recipient need not be able to read the inscription, or even be literate. Due to the magic of the ink, the recipient understands the message as soon as he or she touches whatever material it was scribed upon.

Vial of Darkness

When the wax used to seal a vial of darkness is broken, the stuff of shadow trapped within it bursts forth to fill the area around the vial with impenetrable darkness. Although the darkness lasts only a moment, that is time enough for a clever thief to escape, hide, or launch a deadly attack.

Vial of Darkness — Level 5 Uncommon

This glass vial is filled to the brim with a black liquid and stoppered with a thick gob of dried black wax.

Consumable 50 gp

Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: Breaking the vial creates a zone in a close burst 1. The zone is totally obscured, and it lasts until the end of your next turn.

CHAPTER 5

Artifacts and Curses

JIM NELSON

SURELY THE most dangerous items are those designed to deceive. Adrift in the world, they lurk like icebergs in frigid seas. One might see a bright axe or a fine cloak, never suspecting the danger that lies beneath such surface beauty.

Artifacts are liars by their nature. They often do not appear to have much power at all, and yet they contain magic of devastating strength. I have encountered too many in my time, and never has the confrontation ended well. Any artifact puts the scales out of balance.

War leaders scour the world with their armies, fighting over the ownership of artifacts. Planes disgorge their demons or belch genies or unleash angels to claim them. Friends and family turn on one another just for a chance at gaining the power of an artifact. Yet when has anyone who gained such a prize died happy? Unfortunately, destroying artifacts has proven . . . inefficient. Better that they remain unfound and inaccessible.

I would say the same thing of cursed items, but curses have proved themselves useful on occasion. Curses can afflict the innocent, of course, but rarely has a great entity contrived a cursed item for such a shallow purpose, nor does fate tie itself in knots to twist dark magic about an everyday object or person. No, every cursed item has its own story. It exists because someone sought to punish another.

Like artifacts, cursed items usually do not reveal themselves to superficial investigation. This is because those who create cursed items often act under the mistaken assumption that those who covet a magic item would not use it if they knew it was cursed. Had they any sense about them, those who craft curses would realize that an obvious curse can be more effective. Even the most avaricious learn to look askance at good fortune, but bad fortune seems as normal to them as clouds in the sky. When a gift or a discovered treasure carries an apparent danger, a more insidious and hidden second curse proves most efficacious.

–Mordenkainen, from a treatise in his master copy of the Magnificent Emporium

For the DM: This chapter is meant for the eyes of the Dungeon Master. Players are encouraged to avoid reading this material so that their characters can discover it through seeing how the DM incorporates artifacts and curses into the campaign.

Artifacts

Legends swirl about them. Kingdoms go to war over their possession. Generations of heroes die in their pursuit. Artifacts are the most powerful items in existence, essential parts of the world's weave and pieces of the story of the universe.

Artifact Rules

Artifacts break the rules.

They aren't normal items that you account for in treasure distribution, and you don't need to worry about play balance. They exist to help you tell the stories you want to tell in your game.

An artifact can't typically be created, disenchanted, or destroyed by any of the normal means available with other magic items. The characters' access to artifacts and their retention of recovered artifacts is entirely within your control. A character can quest after a particular artifact whose existence is known or suspected, but even then the character acquires an artifact only if you say so.

Similarly, a character can research a specific method to destroy a known artifact, if destroying it fits with your plans for the campaign. Destroying an artifact should require an extraordinary effort—artifacts are normally immune to all forms of damage or unwanted alterations to their form—and each artifact might have a unique means of destroying it. For instance, you might decide that to destroy the Book of Infinite Spells, one must cross out each of its pages with ink made from the memory-stealing water of the River Lethe.

Artifacts in Your Game

At a fundamental level, artifacts are magic items whose role in the game has far more to do with the story of your adventure or campaign than it does with the actual game effects of the item. Characters might buy, sell, enchant, and disenchant any of the hundreds of magic items. They might even quest after those items. But when an artifact enters the characters' lives, the story of the campaign revolves around it for a time.

Remember that artifacts are always completely under your control. It's up to you when you introduce an artifact to your game, and it's up to you when the artifact leaves the characters' hands. Possession of an artifact is the one element of a character's capabilities that the character's player has no control over—it rests in your hands. Use that power for good—the good of your campaign story.

Use Artifacts at Any Level: Each artifacts is associated with a tier at which its powers are on a par with the powers of other items available to the PCs, but that doesn't mean you can't introduce even an epic tier item at an earlier level. The amazing power of an artifact is precisely why it is wondrous. So, go ahead and use artifacts even in a heroic tier game. Introducing an artifact at low levels can help the players see the grand scope of the story they're involved in.

By the same token, an artifact for a lower tier can still be an interesting element of higher-level stories. Artifacts are significantly different from ordinary magic items of roughly the same level.

Allow Artifacts to Do More: Artifacts will be more magical and mysterious if they do more than their rules describe. Allow players to experiment with an artifact and try to use it in new ways. There might not be a wizard spell to repair a hole in a ship's hull, and the Book of Infinite Spells might normally require an extended rest to gain such a spell even if it did exist, but when the PCs' ship is sinking, it's a great moment if they can frantically search through the Book to find the spell and cast it.

When and how such additional effects operate is up to you. Perhaps an artifact can exhibit such unusual effects only once per day, and then it becomes inert until it regains its power. Maybe instead such a use simply takes the place of a normal encounter or daily power of the item. Alternatively, unconstrained use of invented powers might be possible, but each use might have a chance of unleashing some disastrous effect.

Tie Artifacts to Campaign Themes: Use artifacts to reinforce the story you want to tell with your campaign. If you want to explore themes of how power corrupts those who wield it, introducing an evil artifact that the PCs are tempted to use can help reinforce that story.

Recast Stories and Goals: Add details from your campaign to the origin story for an artifact or alter its goals to strengthen its ties with the themes of your campaign. If restoring the lost glory of the eladrin is a goal of your campaign, you can use the Jacinth of Inestimable Beauty as a prize the characters seek to aid in that effort. This goal is in concert with the original intent of the artifact, which was to keep the eladrin realm strong and far-reaching.

Wait Until Players Have Bought In: Hold off on introducing an artifact to your campaign until after the characters have completed an adventure or two and the players are fully invested in the story of the campaign. They should already know what's at stake and have at least a hint of the nature of the major villain in the story. With that groundwork laid, the artifact's arrival carries the appropriate weight.

Sentient Artifacts

You can treat artifacts as sentient items that have goals and emotions, if not an actual voice. Perhaps an artifact in the characters' possession speaks telepathically to whoever holds it. Maybe instead it tugs upon a character's conscience or it causes someone to have emotions or visions.

If you decide an artifact is sentient, you can play it however you like, but if you want a system for how that works in the game, consider using the rules below.

Goals

As a sentient object, an artifact should have one or more goals related to the reason for its creation. A sentient lance made by a deity for the purpose of slaying Tiamat would obviously want to accomplish that goal, but it might also drive its wielder to slay all chromatic dragons, or even every dragon the character encounters regardless of kind or alignment.

Concordance

A sentient artifact's concordance score measures the artifact's attitude toward its wielder based upon the wielder's actions in relation to its goals. The scale ranges from 0 (angered) to 20 (most pleased).

When a character takes possession of an artifact, it starts with a concordance of 5. (The owner's race, class, outlook, or other characteristics might adjust this starting concordance.) When the artifact is pleased with its wielder's actions, its concordance increases. When the wielder acts contrary to the artifact's desires, its concordance decreases. Other factors might influence concordance as you see fit.

| Concordance | Artifact's Attitude |
|---|---|
| 16-20 | Pleased |
| 12-15 | Satisfied |
| 5-11 | Normal |
| 1-4 | Unsatisfied |
| 0 or lower | Angered |

Concordance Effects

A sentient artifact should have properties and powers that function no matter what its concordance with its wielder is, but you can alter or add to some features of an artifact depending on its concordance. An artifact that is satisfied or pleased with the character who wields it might grant a new power, impart some lore, warn the character of danger, or otherwise aid the character. An item that is unsatisfied or angered might impose a penalty on the character, not allow itself to be put down or put away, lie to the character, or otherwise manipulate the situation so that the character does what the artifact wants, or so that the artifact can find a more fitting wielder.

Moving On

A sentient artifact moves on when you decide it does. A particularly mighty quest might provide a great finale for the artifact's presence—perhaps it must be sacrificed to complete the quest, or the final act of slaying the evil champion drains the artifact of its power, or the artifact just decides that it has other places to be and other things to do. Of course, not all exit points are heroic—a villain might steal the artifact for his own use, the artifact's evil might move the characters to seek its destruction, or it might move on when its concordance reaches 0.

An artifact that is happy with its wielder might choose a quiet time to go, leaving a more mundane but still powerful item in its wake. If the artifact's concordance is not high, it could disappear at the end of an encounter, communicating its disappointment in its wielder as it departs. An artifact that is displeased or angry with its wielder might choose to vanish at a most inopportune moment.

In all my travels, I have never encountered any magic so pernicious as that of artifacts. Why the gods allow such items to exist escapes me, but mayhaps they are as powerless against them as we mortals are. Indeed, it is not uncommon for creations to escape the control of their creators. Ask any parent—or any who have an apprentice.

Artifact Descriptions

Artifacts vary widely in appearance and the degree to which they hide or reveal their true nature. Some artifacts, such as Zax, Cloak of Kings, are clearly examples of extraordinary craftsmanship; anyone can tell at a glance that they're something special. Other artifacts such as the Shield of Prator present a relatively ordinary—or even defective—appearance. Beyond their physical characteristics, artifacts might reek of magical power, or the extent of their enchantments might be deeply hidden. However, fate often takes a hand in the winding paths that artifacts follow down through history; through seeming accidents or coincidences, those heroes and villains who are meant to find artifacts usually do so, even if someone else might easily overlook an ordinary-looking object with deeply dormant powers.

Book of Infinite Spells

Legend has it that this tome is the spellbook of the goddess Ioun, dropped from the heavens into the world, and that it is the source of all arcane knowledge. Others say Vecna used the Book of Infinite Spells as his spellbook during his lifetime, and that he knows how any spell cast from it is used. Perhaps both bits of lore are true.

The Book of Infinite Spells is a hefty tome that shows signs of its great age. Scars of battle mar its weather-beaten cover, and the edges of its yellowed pages are blotched with every sort of stain from blood to wine to strange reagents. Yet no wound can ever do great harm to the book, and nothing can obscure the arcane scribbles and runes that describe its spells. Liquids spilled upon the pages bead and slide away from words and diagrams toward the margins. Anything written in the book vanishes unless it pertains to the spells inside. Fire cannot harm it, nor can even the mightiest titan tear out its pages.

The volume's original title, if it had one, is long lost to antiquity. The name it is known by today, Book of Infinite Spells, is seemingly not a misnomer: Even a newly created piece of wizardly magic appears instantly in the book, its ink still slightly moist as if the spell had been penned just an hour before. What many—including wizards—don't know is that the book proves powerful in anyone's hands, allowing whoever studies it to cast spells.

Book of Infinite Spells — Paragon Level

Opening this thick spellbook, bound in strange leather, causes its pages to flip in rapid succession.

Artifact: Implement (tome)
Enhancement Bonus: +3 to attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +3d8 damage

Properties

- ✦ At the end of an extended rest, a character who studied the book for at least an hour of the rest can replace any attack power that he or she knows with a wizard attack power that is the same level or lower and of the same usage (at-will, encounter, or daily). Similarly, the character can replace any utility power with a wizard utility power of the same level or lower. The replacement lasts until the end of the character's next extended rest.
- ✦ When preparing powers from a spellbook at the end of an extended rest, a wizard can use the Book of Infinite Spells to retrain any number of powers in his or her spellbook, choosing from all wizard powers available and following the normal rules for retraining.

Special: A character can draw a particular wizard power from the book only once, regardless of which property the character uses.

Codex of Infinite Planes

This enormous book, the size of a small table, seems fit more for the hands of gods than mortals. Its obsidian covers enclose pages made from thin sheets of dull gray metal. Embossed upon or etched into the surface of every page are images both beautiful and horrific, and words in languages both rare and unknown. No matter how many pages its owner turns, another and another still remains, because the number of scenes that the book can depict from throughout the multiverse is truly without limit.

The origin of the Codex of the Infinite Planes seems to be somehow entwined with the formation of the planes themselves. Certainly the book contains writing that cannot now be deciphered, but particular symbols in the book use the language of creation—those mysterious figures that runepriests now use to make their magic. Regardless of its origin, the codex appears in legend as an object upon which empires are founded—and one that brings them to utter ruin. Its powers seem to shift each time it comes to the fore in history, but it is said to have been used in eons past to transport whole armies from one plane to another. At one point a careless or inept user ended up bringing Garniax, the Indestructible Fiend, into the world—whereupon the codex had to be used again to send the demon back to the Abyss.

Codex of Infinite Planes — Epic Level

Sandwiched between the heavy covers of this outsized volume are uncountable pages of metal with a dizzying array of images of symbols inscribed upon them.

Artifact: Wondrous item

Utility Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: Choose a location on any plane, even a location that you have never visited or seen. You and each willing ally within 5 squares of the codex is transported to that location. You could choose "a king's treasure room," and you would appear in a king's treasure room somewhere. You could choose "a safe place," and you would appear somewhere safe, although it might be surrounded by dangers.

When you choose the location, make an Arcana check against a hard DC of your level. If the check succeeds, the transport occurs without incident. If the check fails, the transport occurs, but disaster follows you. The disaster could be anything: an earthquake, a disease, demons appearing with you when you arrive, years of winter, or worse.

Nothing can stop the transport, short of the will of a deity or a primordial, and even that might be surmounted by sufficient arcane skill (at the DM's option).

Utility Power (Psychic) ✦ Daily (Standard Action)

Effect: Make a Charisma, Intelligence, or Wisdom ranged attack against the Will of a target from another plane. On a hit, the target is sent back to its home plane and cannot return to the plane you are in for 100 years or until the codex's other power is used. On a miss, you and the target take 6d10 psychic damage, and you are stunned until the end of your next turn.

Hammer of Thunderbolts

The Hammer of Thunderbolts has found its way into many hands over the millennia of its existence. Many dwarves believe that Moradin crafted the Hammer as his original weapon of choice. Yet the legends of most other races attribute the artifact to the ambition of Kord, who gained his power over storms by slaying a primordial of tempests. According to such stories, the Hammer is the primordial's heart, ripped free from its body and twisted into its present shape by Kord's bare hands.

If Moradin or Kord did create the Hammer of Thunderbolts, neither seems to miss it. Instead, the weapon has cascaded through history from the possession of one great hero or villain to the next. Though it is certainly a weapon of nearly inestimable value in melee, the true power of the hammer manifests only when it is hurled at foes. Then the roar of the storm echoes about it, and some of these throws culminate in a radiating wave of thunder that flattens every creature nearby.

Hammer of Thunderbolts Epic Level

This mighty weapon seems made of mithral and adamantine swirled together, and lightninglike lines of platinum crawl over its surface. When you heft it, all your hair stands on end as if you sense the coming of a great storm.

Artifact: Weapon (warhammer)
Enhancement Bonus: +5 to attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +5d10 thunder damage, or +10d10 if the target is a giant.

Properties

- ✦ You gain resist 20 lightning and resist 20 thunder.
- ✦ You can throw the hammer as a heavy thrown weapon (range 10/20). It returns to your hand after being thrown as normal for a magic thrown weapon.
- ✦ This weapon deals 2d10 extra lightning and thunder damage when used as a thrown weapon as part of a weapon attack. Each time you throw it, a peal of thunder explodes around you.

Attack Power (Thunder) ✦ Encounter (No Action)
Trigger: You hit or miss with a ranged weapon attack using the hammer as a thrown weapon.
Effect: Make the following attack.
Attack: Close burst 2 (creatures in the burst); Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 5d10 thunder damage, the target falls prone, and the target is deafened until the end of your next turn.
Miss: Half damage.

Jacinth of Inestimable Beauty

A famous eladrin heirloom, the Jacinth of Inestimable Beauty is a large orange jewel cut in the shape of a flower and mounted in a brooch of gold.

Long ago, an eladrin master jewelsmith named Immeral Silverleaf invented a way to use high elven magic to enhance the beauty and durability of natural gemstones. The magic gems he created were the wonder of the realm, and with each one he made, his skill and confidence grew. One day the dwarves of a neighboring realm unearthed a striking gemstone of perfect orange corundum—a blazing sapphire the color of fire. Immeral acquired the great gemstone from the dwarves in exchange for lavish gifts of his earlier work and promises of more to come, and then set about the task of creating his masterwork. Utterly devoted to his queen, he crafted a piece for her that would capture and reflect her beauty forever, which he dubbed the Jacinth of Inestimable Beauty.

When the eladrin queen donned Immeral's jewel, all who stood before her fell under the influence of her beauty. Her realm flourished for many years, and she was famed far and wide for the aid and comfort that she provided for her subjects through the power of the artifact. Yet finally the long golden afternoon of her realm faded into dusk; her enemies grew strong, and the untold value of the jewel incited avarice in the hearts of the wicked. One dark day the queen was murdered by her husband, who was half-mad with jealousy because of the love so many nobles and courtiers held for his queen. The prince-consort was put to death, but the deed was done. The jacinth was sequestered away in the royal vaults, only to disappear when evil forces sacked the kingdom a few years later. As for Immeral, he never made another jewel after the jacinth.

Since the days of the ancient eladrin kingdoms, the jacinth has appeared now and again in the possession of a series of monarchs. It is associated with gracefulness, justice, and prosperity . . . but also with vanity and avarice. Any monarch in the world would be strengthened by mere possession of the jacinth, and yet all too often the owners who have come after the queen have become obsessed with continuing to add to their own splendor, seeking to gain ever more objects of art and other items treasured for their beauty. Scholars speculate that the jacinth began planting this objective in the minds of its owners after leaving the queen's care. It prompts this greedy behavior in them precisely for the reason of making them vulnerable to others who envy their exquisite treasures. In such a way do these items of utmost value change hands from time to time, perhaps destined to land ultimately in the possession of a great ruler whose appreciation of their beauty knows no bounds, and whose ability to hold onto them despite threats is just as great. So it is with the jacinth itself, which is said to gravitate from owner to owner in a search for one who can truly replace the queen.

Jacinth of Inestimable Beauty Paragon Level

A fiery orange-red gemstone cut in the shape of an exotic flower, this dazzling jewel is set in a graceful necklace of purest gold.

Artifact: Neck slot item
Enhancement Bonus: +3 to Fortitude, Reflex, and Will
Properties
- ✦ You gain a +5 item bonus to Charisma-based skill checks.
- ✦ Enemies take a -2 penalty to saving throws against your charm powers and effects.

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)
Effect: Melee 1 (one creature). The target can make a saving throw against each effect on it that a save can end, and can spend a healing surge (or two healing surges if the target is bloodied).

☼ Utility Power (Aura, Charm) ✦ Daily (Standard Action)
Effect: You activate an aura 5 that lasts until the end of the encounter or until you make an attack or are hit by an attack. While in the aura, creatures take a -4 penalty to the attack rolls of powers that include you as a target.

Goals of the Jacinth

- ✦ Be treasured and worn by the most beautiful, graceful, and noble owner; urge an owner lacking in these traits to improve himself or herself.
- ✦ Reign in splendor and magnificence, adored by all.
- ✦ Celebrate and protect works of art and those who create and cherish them.

Concordance

| | |
|---|---|
| Starting score | 5 |
| Owner gains a level | +1d6 |
| Owner gains rank, title, or nobility | +1d4 |
| Owner has a Charisma score of 16 or higher | +2 |
| Owner does not wear the Jacinth for a month | -1 |
| Owner has a Charisma score of 10 or lower | -4 |

Pleased (16–20)

The jacinth is enchanted with the personal majesty of its owner, and gladly reflects and magnifies its owner's glory for all to see.

The jacinth's enhancement bonus becomes +5, and its owner gains the use of the item's attack power for as long as the jacinth remains at this concordance.

Attack Power ✦ Daily (Standard Action)
Attack: Ranged 5 (one creature in range); your level + 5 vs. Will.
Hit: The target is dominated (save ends). While the target is affected by this domination, you can direct it to make an attack as normal, but only against a creature that has attacked you.

Satisfied (12–15)

The jacinth is content that its owner is providing opportunities for all to see and admire its beauty.

The jacinth's enhancement bonus becomes +4, and its owner gains the use of the following property for as long as the jacinth remains at this concordance or higher.

Property
You gain a +2 bonus to any skill check associated with ruling, governing, or leading a realm.

Normal (5–11)

The jacinth sees potential in its owner, but is not prepared to give him or her its full allegiance yet.

At this concordance, the jacinth has the properties, powers, and other characteristics included in its description at left.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

The jacinth believes that its owner is behaving in an ugly, grasping, or ungracious manner. It might entertain some small hope that he or she is a diamond in the rough, and if so it begins to make its prodding more and more obvious. If the owner doesn't show signs of improvement, the jacinth soon leaves.

The jacinth's enhancement bonus becomes +3, and its owner loses the use of the item's aura power, until the jacinth's concordance again increases to 5 or higher.

Angered (0 or lower)

The owner refuses to behave in a manner befitting the jacinth's owner. The artifact seeks to abandon him or her at the first opportunity, and it incites greed and jealousy in those nearby.

The jacinth's enhancement bonus becomes +2, and its owner loses the use of the item's healing power, for as long as the jacinth remains at this concordance.

Moving On

The jacinth is eternally compelled to search for the quintessential site of beauty, splendor, and wealth in the world. When the prospects of a monarch or some other rich individual exceed its current owner's prospects, the jacinth finds its way into the custody of a new owner.

If the jacinth is pleased when it moves on, the previous owner gains a permanent +2 increase to his or her Charisma score.

The Shadowstaff

Made from strands of congealed shadow, the Shadowstaff is the handiwork of a long-dead shadar-kai warlock prince named Amarethydd. One of the most powerful of his race, he is said to have entered into a pact with the very essence of shadow in order to forge a suitable implement for himself.

Armed with the Shadowstaff, Amarethydd ruled over his people for centuries and exacted tribute from many realms. But in time, the deadly ennui that afflicts the shadar-kai overcame Amarethydd as well, and he faded away after bequeathing his staff to his foremost apprentice. That young individual was soon killed by her rivals, and various shadar-kai wizards and warlocks murdered each other over the staff for many years before a band of human adventurers carried it back to the mortal world—where it has again changed hands several times.

The infamous wizard Evard is the last known owner of the Shadowstaff. He seems to have been parted from it under mysterious circumstances, and who or what owns the Shadowstaff now is a matter of speculation. Some believe that the staff abandoned Evard, and that the wizard is looking for the artifact and will deal harshly with anyone who tries to keep it from him. Others say that Evard bargained away the Shadowstaff to a powerful drow prince, who intends to use the device to further his evil designs against the surface world.

The Shadowstaff — Heroic Level

This staff appears to be made from twisted strands of smoky black glass, but it's harder than steel.

Artifact: Implement (staff)
Enhancement Bonus: +2 to attack rolls and damage rolls, or +3 if the wielder is 11th level or higher
Critical: The target takes ongoing 10 necrotic damage and is slowed (save ends both).

Property

While holding the staff, you have partial concealment and resist 10 necrotic.

Attack Power (Implement, Necrotic) ✦ Encounter (Standard Action)

Attack: Ranged 10 (one creature in range); Intelligence or Charisma vs. Fortitude.
Hit: 3d8 + Intelligence or Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed and weakened (save ends both).
Miss: Half damage.

Utility Power (Summoning) ✦ Daily (Minor Action)

Effect: You summon three servants of the staff in unoccupied squares within 5 squares of you. The servants are allies to you and your allies, and act on your turn. When a servant makes a check, you make the roll using your game statistics. Unlike most summoned creatures, the servants of the staff act independently to attack your enemies, and do not require your actions. The servants must remain within 10 squares of the staff.

Servant of the Staff — Summoned Creature (minion)
Medium shadow humanoid

HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6; phasing

Traits

Shadowy Invisibility
The servant is invisible in dim light.

Standard Actions

Shadow Touch (necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 5 vs. Reflex
Hit: 3 + your Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Shield of Prator

The paladin Prator was a mighty hero of old, famed as a slayer of evil dragons and a champion of justice. The shield he carried through his many battles is imbued with the memory of his courage and selflessness. Prator fell during a desperate fight in Minauros, third of the Nine Hells, and his famous shield disappeared for many years, presumably taken as a trophy by some archdevil or pit fiend. About two centuries ago, the Shield of Prator turned up in the clutches of a githyanki pirate defeated by a band of mortal heroes. In the time since, it has been reported in the hands of a different hero or villain every few years.

From tales of its ancient history, the shield is renowned as a formidable defense against the threat of evil. In point of practical application, its powers and properties are equally effective against enemies of any alignment. As with almost all enchanted items, how the Shield of Prator is used depends greatly on the mindset and desires of its current owner.

Shield of Prator — Heroic Level

Creased and dented, this large steel shield is emblazoned with the symbol of Pelor. Despite its appearance, it weighs lightly on the arm and almost seems to anticipate the next strike.

Artifact: Arms slot item (heavy shield)

Properties

✦ You gain resist 10 to the following damage types: acid, cold, fire, lightning, and thunder.
✦ You gain a +1 bonus to AC and Reflex while using the shield.

Utility Power (Aura, Healing, Radiant) ✦ Encounter (Minor Action)

Effect: You activate an aura 2 that lasts until the end of your next turn. Any ally who starts his or her turn in the aura regains 5 hit points. Any enemy that ends its turn in the aura takes 5 radiant damage, and until the end of its next turn it takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls against targets other than you.

Utility Power (Healing) ✦ Daily (No Action)

Effect: All effects that a save can end immediately end on you, and you can spend a healing surge.

Zax, Cloak of Kings

The Cloak of Kings looks spun entirely from gold, and its hem and edges glitter with gemstones. It would be counted among the most beautiful objects in the world even without its intricate embroidery that depicts scenes of great castles in settings of natural beauty, and crowned and enthroned figures seated before their bowing subjects.

The origin of the cloak is shrouded in conflicting claims. Dwarf scholars say that only one of their race could have spun the gold so finely. Elven legends tell of a star that fell from the sky, leaving a crater in which the cloak was found. Humans attribute its creation to various deities, including Erathis and Pelor.

Regardless of its history, the Cloak of Kings has become a dynastic relic to several empires. It has served a host of kings, empresses, dukes, marchionesses, and others of less noble title. Wars have been fought over its possession, and legends formed about those who sought and won it from great dangers.

The cloak knows itself as Zax, a garment of great power that deigns itself to be worn by someone of equally great importance. When worn by a leader, Zax communicates mentally to help settle disputes, warn of danger, and educate its wearer on the exploits of earlier rulers who bore the cloak.

Zax, Cloak of Kings Paragon Level

This brilliant cloak of spun gold is bedecked with gems and delicately embroidered with scenes of great beauty.

Artifact: Neck slot item
Enhancement Bonus: +4 to Fortitude, Reflex, and Will

Properties

- ✦ You gain a +5 item bonus to Diplomacy checks, History checks, and Insight checks.
- ✦ When worn, the cloak sheds dim light in a radius of 5 squares. Invisible creatures and objects are rendered visible while in this light.

Goals of Zax, the Cloak of Kings

- ✦ Maintain its status as an object of renown by being worn or sought by a great ruler.
- ✦ Make its wearer a ruler of ever greater importance.
- ✦ Avoid obscurity at all costs.

Concordance

| | |
|---|---|
| Starting score | 5 |
| Owner gains a level | +1d10 |
| Owner is considered a leader of many people | +2 |
| Owner gains more political power (1/day) | +1 |
| Owner kills a rival for leadership (1/day) | +1 |
| Owner uses stealth against an enemy (1/encounter) | -2 |
| Owner disobeys a directive from the cloak | -2 |

Pleased (16–20)

Zax enjoys sharing the power and accolades of its wearer, and it offers greater protection in order to maintain that position.

The cloak's enhancement bonus increases to +6, and its owner gains the use of the following property and power for as long as the cloak remains at this concordance.

Property
Enemies that score a critical hit against you are blinded (save ends).

Utility Power ✦ Daily (No Action)
Trigger: An attack hits you while you are surprised.
Effect: The attack misses you instead.

Satisfied (12–15)

The wearer has proved worthy of Zax, and the cloak becomes a loquacious companion, offering counsel on many topics.

The cloak's owner gains the use of the following property for as long as the cloak remains at this concordance or higher.

Property
You gain a +10 item bonus to Diplomacy checks, History checks, and Insight checks.

Normal (5–11)

The cloak is reserved and cautious with its wearer until the character proves or reaffirms his or her leadership potential.

At this concordance, the cloak has the properties and other characteristics included in its description at left.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

Zax dislikes the wearer's attitude or believes the wearer is a weak leader. If the wearer doesn't change, Zax soon leaves.

For as long as the cloak remains at this concordance or lower, it does not shed dim light when its owner wears it.

Angered (0 or lower)

The wearer is not meeting Zax's expectations, and it looks to leave unless a dramatic turnaround occurs soon.

The cloak's enhancement bonus becomes +3, and its owner gains the use of the following properties for as long as the cloak remains at this concordance.

Properties

- ✦ You gain a +2 item bonus to Diplomacy checks, History checks, and Insight checks.
- ✦ You take a -2 penalty to attack rolls and damage rolls against any creatures that have the leader role or that are leaders of others.

Moving On

Zax desires fame and to be borne upon the shoulders of greatness, and now it seeks those objectives elsewhere. If Zax is at least satisfied, it leaves behind a normal +4 cloak for its former wearer.

Item Curses

Cursed magic items were a mainstay of older editions of the Dungeons & Dragons game, much to Dungeon Masters' delight and players' occasional frustration. Items that hold curses seem just like normal magic items. They are, in fact, perfectly useful magic items in their own right. Under certain conditions, however, the dark magic of an item's curse causes the item to fail or malfunction in some spectacular way.

Cursed items should never be placed maliciously in a game or treated simply as a way to thwart the players. Such items can be a useful tool for the Dungeon Master, leading to interesting roleplaying opportunities and adventure hooks.

Item Curses in the Game

Each item curse described here is a quality that makes a cursed item of that kind seem as though it's another magic item of the same general sort. For example, a character might don a ring of the ram that turns out to be a ring of weakness, or purchase hero's gauntlets that are actually gauntlets of fumbling.

A cursed item functions normally until its curse is triggered, and it becomes a fully functioning beneficial magic item after its curse is lifted. When its curse is triggered, a cursed item imposes penalties or effects upon its wielder that run the gamut from irritating to deadly.

A cursed item looks and functions like a normal magic item, and it is the same level as the item on which the curse has been placed. Cursed items cannot be detected by any means; a character can use a cursed item normally—sometimes for weeks—until its curse is triggered.

REMOVING AN ITEM CURSE

A character can use expertise in magical lore to try to remove the curse on an item, but first the character must know that the item is cursed. Normally this knowledge is gained only when the curse is triggered, for there is no tried-and-true way of detecting curses.

To remove an item curse, a character must spend 1 hour in study while the cursed item is within arm's reach. At the end of the hour, the character makes an Arcana check (hard DC of the item's level). If the check succeeds, the curse is broken, and the magic item functions normally. If the check fails, the magic of the curse lashes out, causing the character to lose a healing surge, and everyone must wait 24 hours before trying to remove the curse again using Arcana in this way.

Once the curse on a cursed item has been triggered and identified, the curse can be removed. Most curses can be lifted with a successful Arcana check (see the sidebar). You might also assign alternative methods of lifting the curse (which become known to an item's wielder when the curse is studied). They could range from bathing the item in the breath of a red dragon, to completing a skill challenge in the arcane foundry where the item was crafted, to taking the item to a powerful magical nexus where its curse will be cleansed. When a party undertakes a specific activity to lift a curse from an item, you should make lifting the curse a minor or a major quest.

A cursed magic item can be destroyed with the Disenchant Magic Item ritual, but the curse's presence halves the amount of residuum collected. A cursed item can be destroyed by other effects that would destroy a normal magic item, including the attack of a rust monster, powers that specifically target items (such as disintegrate), and so on.

Using Cursed Items

Cursed items can be placed in a campaign as an ad hoc additional challenge. A cursed item does not create the same degree of challenge as an entire encounter or even a single creature, but any encounter in which an item's curse is activated might have an additional XP reward based on how much the curse increases the challenge of the encounter.

Each item curse has a statistics block, just like a normal magic item. This statistics block explains the trigger and the effect of the curse, which functions in addition to the item's base powers and properties. When an item's curse is triggered, the curse typically stays in effect until the end of the encounter.

Once an item's curse is triggered for the first time, the item's owner cannot be rid of the item until the curse is broken. A cursed item that is being worn cannot be physically removed. A cursed item that is being wielded (including an implement, a shield, or a weapon) can be put away on the owner's person, but it cannot be discarded.

If a cursed item is removed by extraordinary means (such as by an unusual ritual), the item magically reappears in its owner's possession in 1d4 days.

The owner of a cursed weapon or implement can choose not to wield the item, but if the item's curse has been triggered, he or she must succeed on a saving throw in order to attack with a different item. If the saving throw fails, he or she must use the cursed item and must do so for the rest of the encounter.

Curses are typically named for their most commonly found form. Many of them can be imposed on other items. The berserker's axe curse, for instance, might be applied to a greatsword or a scimitar. The periapt of foul rotting curse can be embodied in an Ioun stone, an amulet, a scarab crafted from a single gem, and so on.

Curse Descriptions

Any of the curses described here can be used "off the shelf" or as inspiration for others of the DM's devising.

Armor of Powerlessness

This curse was first named in the lore of the fallen King Firah, who is said to have crafted armor of powerlessness as gifts and punishments for overly ambitious court wizards and priests. All masters of magic fear such items, and many attempt to destroy one when it is found, regardless of its worth.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a set of armor that has this curse siphons away its wielder's powers.

Armor of Powerlessness — Item Curse

You feel a sudden wrenching as your mind and soul are laid open by the malicious magic of this armor.

Armor: Any

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: The wearer misses with a daily attack power that has a power source other than martial.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the wearer cannot use daily attack powers that have a power source other than martial. In addition, when the wearer misses with an at-will attack power that has a power source other than martial, he or she loses the ability to use that power again until the end of the encounter.

Armor of Vulnerability

Enchanted armor is one of the most common forms of magic item craft, the oldest examples of which have been passed from fallen hero to hero for uncounted generations. But the rigors of combat—especially when other magic is involved—can taint and corrupt the protective enchantment on a suit of magic armor. Although some examples of armor of vulnerability are specifically crafted with the intent of tricking enemies into using them, most versions of this curse are found in ancient relics whose magic has become warped over time.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a set of armor that has this curse loses its defensive properties at the worst possible time.

Armor of Vulnerability — Item Curse

As your enemies make their deadliest attacks against you, you feel the protective ability of this armor suddenly flag.

Armor: Any

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: While bloodied, the wearer takes damage from an attack equal to 5 + the level of the armor.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the armor loses its enhancement bonus, and the wearer takes a -2 penalty to all defenses.

Backbiter Spear

The shamans of the hobgoblin empire of Ushakak crafted the first spears bearing this curse with specific intent, designing them to deliver a nonharmful warning to anyone wielding such a weapon whose attacks were not forceful enough. Over time, the magic of the curse has been warped so that the consequences to an unskilled or unlucky wielder can be deadly.

Backbiter Spear — Item Curse

In response to your botched attack, this weapon lurches in your hands, striking you instead of your foe.

Weapon: Spear

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: The wielder rolls a 1 through 5 on an attack roll with this weapon.

Effect: The attack ignores the intended target, and it targets the wielder instead, hitting automatically. Until the end of the encounter, whenever the wielder rolls a 1 or 2 on an attack roll with this weapon, the attack ignores the intended target and targets the wielder instead, hitting automatically.

Berserker's Weapon

It is said that the primal power of the Rashena barbarians is imbued in this curse, though those people saw such power as a boon, not a thing to be avoided. Most warriors who inadvertently pick up a weapon bearing this curse have a different opinion—particularly those whose own companions fall to their accursed bloodlust.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a weapon that has this curse harms its wielder when an enemy scores a critical hit on him or her.

Berserker's Weapon — Item Curse

A sudden frenzy overtakes you, blinding you to everything but battle.

Weapon: Axe or heavy blade

Utility Power (Charm) ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: While bloodied, the wielder is subject to a critical hit.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the wielder gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls and takes a -4 penalty to all defenses. All the wielder's attacks using this weapon must be melee basic attacks or charge attacks. Additionally, the wielder chooses a random creature as the target of his or her attack each round. If the wielder cannot attack, he or she takes 1d10 damage, and the penalty to all defenses worsens to -6 until the start of his or her next turn.

Blood-Crazed Weapon

The clerics of the noble god-king Garakun were poised to take their final vengeance on the crumbling forces of the necromancer Haylah when that dark wizard unleashed his revenge. The curse of the blood-crazed weapon infected the weapons of Garakun's servants, setting off a barrage of brutality that eventually sundered the god-king's faith.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a weapon that has this curse must be routinely appeased by the death of an enemy.

Blood-Crazed Weapon Item Curse

Each attack with this weapon fills you with a thirst for vengeance that can be slaked only by blood.

Weapon: Any

Utility Power (Charm) ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: The wielder scores a critical hit or deals maximum damage with this weapon.

Effect: If the weapon is not used in an attack that slays an enemy before the end of the encounter, the encounter continues, and the wielder must attack the nearest ally before the end of each of his or her turns or else take damage equal to his or her healing surge value (save ends).

Boots of Uncontrollable Dancing

The crazed archmage Tigla created the first boots of uncontrollable dancing as a means of torturing servants who lost his favor, driving them to exhaustion and death. Lesser versions of this curse (such as the one described here) continue to plague enchanted footwear. Though these versions are less potent, many adventurers have suffered greatly from them.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, magic footwear that has this curse forces the wearer to perform an irresistible dance.

Boots of Uncontrollable Dancing Item Curse

Even as you skid to a stop, your feet begin to move against your will.

Feet Slot

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: An enemy's attack pulls, pushes, or slides the wearer 2 or more squares.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the wearer takes a -2 penalty to speed, AC, and Reflex, and he or she must spend a minor action each round to dance uncontrollably.

Bracers of Defenselessness

Many of the learned believe that this curse originated during ancient times when the rites for creating magical protective items were first crafted. The mispronunciation of a single word during those rites created the curse effect, and the incorrect ceremony is still used by some to craft protective items. The curse is most disadvantageous to warriors who fight in the thick of combat.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a set of bracers that has this curse depletes its wearer's defenses.

Bracers of Defenselessness Item Curse

As your shrug off a hard blow in the heat of battle, a feeling of weakness overcomes you. Your enemies rush forward to test your lagging defenses.

Arms Slot

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: The wearer takes damage from a single attack greater than 5 + his or her level.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the wearer takes a -2 penalty to all defenses and grants combat advantage.

Gauntlets of Fumbling

The mage Fedhari of Kiza was said to have developed the means to attach vicious curses to the magic items worn by his enemies. The gauntlets of fumbling curse is one remaining example of his legacy of dark magic, but it is rumored that even more devious examples of his craft still linger in the world.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, an item that has this curse undermines its wearer's manual dexterity.

Gauntlets of Fumbling Item Curse

Your grip suddenly falters as your feel these gauntlets tighten, sending tremors through your hands and arms.

Hands Slot

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: The wearer rolls a 1 or a 2 on a weapon attack roll or a Thievery check.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the character takes a -2 penalty to weapon attack rolls and Thievery checks. In addition, whenever the character hits with a weapon attack, he or she must make a successful Dexterity check against a DC equal to the attack roll result or drop the weapon. It takes a minor action for the wearer to pick up a weapon dropped in this way.

Necklace of Strangulation

Though the origin of the curse remains unknown, the necklace of strangulation appears time and again in history and lore, and it has played a dark part in the deaths of countless heroes and monarchs.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, an item that has this curse strangles its wearer during combat.

Necklace of Strangulation — Item Curse

The chain at your neck suddenly tightens, resisting all your attempts to tear it off as it chokes the life from you.

Neck Slot

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: While bloodied, the wearer takes ongoing damage.

Effect: The ongoing damage increases by 5, and the wearer takes a -2 penalty to saving throws. In addition, whenever the wearer takes a standard action while being subjected to ongoing damage, he or she takes 10 damage. This effect lasts until the end of the encounter.

Periapt of Foul Rotting

This curse was first seen in the spoils taken from Itimish, the Tower of Tombs, but its tenebrous essence has long since spread. A periapt of foul rotting curse inflicts a deadly plague upon its wearer—a horrific scourge that few survive.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, an item that has this curse infects its wearer with a flesh-eating disease.

Periapt of Foul Rotting — Item Curse

A stinging pain suddenly lances into you from this periapt, and the stench of death staggers you as your body begins to rot away.

Neck Slot

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: The wearer takes damage from a single attack equal to 5 + the periapt's level.

Effect: The wearer contracts the disease foul rotting (stage 1).

Foul Rotting — Variable Level Disease

Grotesque lesions form on your skin as your flesh begins to loosen and your bones soften.

Stage 0: The target recovers from the disease.

Stage 1: While affected by this stage, the target takes a -2 penalty to Fortitude and loses a healing surge.

Stage 2: While affected by this stage, the target takes a -2 penalty to Fortitude, loses a healing surge, and grants combat advantage.

Stage 3: The target dies, collapsing into a pool of noxious slime.

Check: At the end of each extended rest, the target makes an Endurance check if it is at stage 1 or 2.

Lower than Easy DC: The stage of the disease increases by 1.

Easy DC: No change.

Moderate DC: The stage of the disease decreases by 1.

Special: The level of the disease equals the target's level.

Ring of Weakness

When Bael Turath fought Arkhosia, magic rings imbued with this sinister curse were seeded among the tieflings, who would carry but not wear them. The dragonborn claimed the rings from the tieflings who fell in battle, realizing only too late the price of their looting.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a ring that has this curse inflicts a crippling weakness on its wearer.

Ring of Weakness — Item Curse

Sudden and searing pain courses through your body from this ring, making your every movement require great strength of will.

Ring Slot

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: One of the item's other powers is used.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the wearer takes a -2 penalty to Strength-, Dexterity-, or Constitution-based attack rolls, damage rolls, skill checks, and ability checks.

Scarab of Death

The warlocks of Bael Turath first crafted items bearing this curse. They were originally given out as "awards" to those who had been discovered to be traitors of the empire. Later, such items became highly sought after for use in assassinations. Rival nobles, jilted lovers, and outright enemies would give or send one of these objects as a gift, making it more likely that a hired assassin's subsequent strike would be fatal.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, an item that has this curse hastens the demise of its wearer when that creature is at death's door.

Scarab of Death — Item Curse

With a shudder, this scarab transforms into a horrible demonic beetle that tears through armor, cloth, and flesh as it burrows toward your heart.

Neck Slot

Property

The wearer takes a -10 penalty to death saving throws.

A necklace of strangulation makes for a gruesome death, but it proves relatively quick. Similarly, the subtle scarab of death does you little harm until it suddenly slams death's door behind you. But the slow wasting and ultimate fate of the curse of foul rotting . . . a truly twisted mind devised this blight.

Shield of Arrow Attraction

It is said that the elves of Chelwood first crafted this curse, placing it on the shields of their hated orc enemies through the use of stealth and dangerous magical practices. Items bearing the shield of arrow attraction curse are most commonly found in uncivilized lands, where people lack the magical skill to identify and destroy these treacherous relics.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a shield that has this curse attracts ranged attacks to the wearer with fatal effect.

Shield of Arrow Attraction Item Curse

This shield begins to tremble on your arm, loosing a near-silent cry that draws your enemies' ranged attacks.

Arms Slot: Any shield

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Activation: The wearer is the subject of a critical hit or takes damage greater than 5 + the shield's level from a ranged attack.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, the wearer takes a -5 penalty to AC and Reflex against ranged attacks.

The shield of arrow attraction does not actually attract arrows. That would be too useful. Imagine wielding a shield that drew arrows into it when they were aimed in your direction. That seems far preferable to, say, the helmet of arrow attraction—to say nothing of the codpiece of sword attraction. I mean, where would you rather have arrows land? Unfortunately for those who wield such a shield, it merely makes you a more attractive target for those who attack from range. That effectively turns your whole body into the arrow attractor. Worse, the magic compels no one to shoot at you. So even if you wanted to draw the attention of your enemies, such as in some foolhardy and misguided effort to save a companion, your foes can simply ignore you. However, if you can get a hated foe to wield such a shield . . .

Stone of Weight

This subtle curse was first seen in amulets and jewelry crafted by the royal mages of the tyrannical city-state of Rathay. Some believe the curse of the stone of weight to be indicative of deep flaws in the Rathayan mages' magical art, but others swear that this curse was originally designed for remote triggering, as a way to hinder the movements of enemies of the state.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, an item that has this curse imposes a magical weight on its owner that slows that creature's movement.

Stone of Weight Item Curse

A great weight suddenly presses down on you, threatening to hold you fast.

Neck Slot

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: The wearer makes an attack that hits.

Effect: The wearer's speed is halved until the end of the encounter.

Sword of the Fallen

First spoken of in the annals of the martyred King Hargawa, the sword of the fallen curse can strip away the combat prowess of even the most seasoned warrior. Whether a weapon bearing this curse has been corrupted by the lingering magic of ancient treasure troves or was crafted intentionally as a ruinous gift for would-be thieves, every such item has been the bane of countless heroes.

In addition to its normal properties and powers, a weapon that has this curse loses its magic while its wielder is in combat.

Sword of the Fallen Item Curse

When you need it the most, this weapon's power suddenly fails, leaving you at the mercy of your foe, unable to break away.

Weapon: Any melee

Utility Power ✦ Encounter (No Action)

Trigger: While bloodied, the wielder scores a critical hit or deals maximum damage.

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, this weapon loses its enhancement bonus and all its properties and powers (except this one). The wielder can use a minor action to reactivate the weapon's properties (but not its other powers) until the start of his or her next turn.

Story Items

Story items are unique, named magic items whose creation or existence cannot be explained by the normal laws of magic. They are the province of myths, legends, and fairy tales, functioning as key components in the most fantastical of stories. Unlike traditional magic items, story items do not have levels and employ few game mechanics.

Story items enable you to use fantasy effects that fall outside the normal mechanics of the game and allow for scenarios that might otherwise be impossible within the rules. A story item is designed to unlock one part of an adventure's saga and then pass out of the characters' ownership.

How They Work

A story item requires a story obstacle—a challenge or condition within the adventure that would be difficult to overcome without the story item that fits with it, just as a key fits a lock. Invulnerable monsters, impassable portals, and dangerous spellcasters whose magic imposes permanent effects exemplify story obstacles that might require a story item to resist or overcome.

A heart-shaped silver stone that grows warm and pulsates whenever Bloodreaver the werewolf lord draws near is a story item. It interacts only with Bloodreaver (the story obstacle) and isn't generally useful beyond the current adventure or set of adventures, but it adds an element of suspense when the powerful lycanthrope lurks nearby. The stone doesn't give the characters any mechanical bonuses, or even necessarily require an area of effect beyond what is appropriate in a given scene. It simply alerts the characters to events unfolding in their vicinity when it's important for them to know.

Adding this kind of item to a standard treasure trove gives the characters something to think about and investigate. The discovery of a story item acts as a hook, encouraging the characters to solve the mystery of the item's true purpose—smoothly drawing them into the heart of the adventure.

JACK AND THE BEANSTALK

The magic beans in the story of Jack and the Beanstalk are one kind of story item. Their purpose in the classic story was to grow the beanstalk that Jack climbed to reach the giant's castle in the clouds. Although the beanstalk might require game mechanics (Athletics DC to climb, resistances, hit points), the magic beans do not; they exist only to transport Jack to the giants' cloud castle. Once the characters find or acquire the beans and use them to overcome the story obstacle (getting to the castle), the item's role in the story is complete.

Story items aren't meant to last forever—an adventure or two, a campaign arc, or even a tier of play, and they move on—although, at your discretion, a fun or compelling story item that does not unbalance play might last longer.

Designing a Story Item

When designing a story item for your game, consider the following questions.

What does it look like? A story item should have a recognizable shape, but what it does might not be obvious from its appearance. If you want the characters to readily discern what the item is for, use its appearance as a clue. If you want the item's nature to be less obvious, put a spin on the "form follows function" principle. For example, a dimensional gateway (page 118) in the shape of a key tells the characters something straightforward about how the item is employed. The same item in the form of a stick of chalk (for drawing the outline of a door) might not be as easy to figure out, but it'll be rewarding and fun when the characters do get the hang of it.

What does it do? A story item needs to accomplish something fantastic within the story. In fable, myth, and saga, fey spells can put creatures to sleep for hundreds of years, genies can grant wishes, straw is spun into gold, an enchanted arrow slays a mighty dragon, a bucket of water destroys a witch, and so on. How is your story item meant to interact with its obstacle?

What are its limitations? The characters should be curious about a story item and will try to find ways to use it, perhaps in a manner you did not anticipate. Although story items can be fun, make sure their lack of precise mechanics doesn't cause them to be abused. Reward clever thinking by expanding an item's utility, but if you're uncomfortable with the characters using the object for something other than its intended purpose, don't be afraid to say no. Always keep in mind that story items and obstacles exist only to make the game more colorful; they should stop short of granting the characters or the monsters unfair mechanical advantages.

What happens once it has accomplished its purpose? Invent an exit strategy for a story item before you introduce it. Ultimately, a story item should exist until it has fulfilled its purpose and then move on. If the characters fail to use it, it will leave their ownership one way or another. This removal can be as simple as the individual who gave them the item asking for it back once it has achieved its purpose. Or perhaps the item's magic is spent, or it just vanishes. A character could even retire the object by placing it on his or her mantel as a memento of the adventure. Story items are as difficult or as easy to destroy as you want them to be.

NO ROADBLOCKS

A story item should be the easiest and most efficient way to overcome a story obstacle, but it might not be the only way. Similar to failing a skill challenge, losing a story item or failing to obtain it is an opportunity to place complications in the heroes' path; it should not stop the adventure. However, in case the characters don't obtain a story item required for the adventure's completion, you might present an alternate—perhaps indirect—game solution two or three levels higher than the party's level that does not require the use of the story item for success.

Item Descriptions

Each story item description consists of three elements.

Story Obstacle: The challenge the item ties into or overcomes.

Property: The manner in which the obstacle and the item interact.

Form: Although a story item can take any physical form you desire, this entry offers some suitable examples.

Blessed Weapon

Story Obstacle: A unique creature cannot be slain until someone wielding the item harms it.

Property: When struck with the story item, the associated creature can then be slain.

Form: Blessed crossbow bolt, rune-carved sword, wooden stake.

Box of the Seven Demons

Story Obstacle: At the dawn of time, the god Tharizdun created a golden box containing physical embodiments of the greatest mortal evils. Before the other gods chained him, he used the box to unleash chaos and misery upon all that they created. Now the box travels randomly throughout the planes, its beautiful exterior tempting mortals' curiosity, and leaving horrors in its wake. Only one creature can own the box at a time. When its owner opens the box, a level-appropriate demon emerges and attempts to possess a creature other than the owner. If the demon succeeds, it forces the creature to exemplify one of the evils embodied by the box to horrible extremes, or else the demon simply engages in brutal violence. If the demon drops to 0 hit points, it immediately possesses a different body or re-forms within a day and continues its spree. Each time a demon drops to 0 hit points, the owner can open the box again to release another demon into the world (maximum seven).

Property: When a demon from the box dropsto 0 hit points, any creature holding the box can command the demon back inside as a minor action. As long as this is done within 7 rounds of the demon's defeat, the demon is bound within the box once more. The instant all seven demons are bound within the box, it vanishes.

Form: A beautiful golden box engraved with seven scenes of mortals enjoying romance, food, wealth, leisure, righteousness, friendship, and fame.

Consecrating Altar

Story Obstacle: A magical plague is spreading through the land, and a forgotten ritual of a long-dead deity is the only way to stop it.

Property: Once the deity's last holy relic is recovered and placed upon this altar, the god's voice will recite the words to the ritual that will destroy the plague. The altar lies in a warded area, and the characters must overcome the three deadly trials of the dead deity before they can gain access to it.

Form: Large carving of a forgotten holy symbol, statue of the deity's likeness, worn stone plinth.

Curse Carrier

Story Obstacle: An evil wizard or warlock either uses an item to place a curse upon one of the characters (or a nonplayer character the heroes know), or places a curse upon an item, which is delivered to a character. As the curse grows within the character, it brings on many harmful and horrific effects, and eventually causes death or some other terrible effect. The curse cannot be removed by normal means, and the characters must either kill whoever placed the curse, or find the item that caused the curse and destroy it.

Property: If the curse was delivered through an item, then the item is no longer special (though it might yield clues to whoever sent it), and the only way to break the curse is to kill the one who enchanted the item. Otherwise, finding and destroying the item will remove the curse. As the curse takes hold, the cursed person has dreams that reveal details about the item and its location. The cursed character's personality also changes as the curse progresses, making that person work against the group in secret.

Form: Enchanted fruit, poison garment, spinning wheel.

Demonic Tome

Story Obstacle: Demon-worshipers have discovered a profane tome and are using a ritual within it to open a portal to the Abyss, allowing demons to freely enter the world to sow chaos. The worshipers must be stopped, and the tome must be destroyed so this can't happen again.

Property: The ritual the demon-worshipers are attempting is powerful and takes time to complete. It requires the sacrifice of many innocents. To help acquire victims, the demon-worshipers used the tome to summon some minor demons, who have been kidnapping youths from the local area for those sacrifices. The characters can follow the clues of the missing youths and magical emanations of the powerful ritual back to the tome's location.

Form: Codex, grimoire, libram, scrolls written on humanoid skin.

Dimensional Gateway

Story Obstacle: The characters must travel quickly between planes to complete their quest.

Property: Whenever the item is placed upon a door, or used to draw the outline of one, the door opens upon a plane of the user's choice. When the door closes, it reverts to a normal door (or no door at all, if the item was used to draw one). This item is either usable once and then its power is expended, or it is usable within a certain time period (usually the course of the adventure).

Form: Chalk (for drawing), doorknob, key.

Fannigan's Dream Ale

Story Obstacle: The characters seek hidden knowledge or they need to reach a distant location, yet they lack the means to make such a discovery or journey.

Property: No one knows just who or what Fannigan was—a powerful wizard, or perhaps an immortal fey who walked in the guise of a human—but he left small casks of this special ale behind before he left this world. Those who drink of the heady brew pass into a deep, dream-filled slumber that transports them to any place or time they desire for eight hours. While they inhabit this place, they can gather information and speak to the dreaming forms of other creatures, but events and items do not carry over into the waking world—only information and communication. Dreaming characters might become idealized versions of themselves in their travels; this could be an opportunity for the players to try out their characters at a different level of play, perhaps raising them to paragon or epic tier for the adventure (although experience is always awarded as though the challenges match the characters' true level).

Form: Fannigan branded the casks of his dream ale with the symbol of a closed eye. The ale is thick and dark, and it appears to glitter with tiny motes of color when it is disturbed.

Instrument of Planar Passage

Story Obstacle: The only planar gate to a location the characters must travel to stands closed and is guarded by a powerful fey creature. To open the portal, the characters must find a special magic instrument and challenge the fey creature that guards the portal to a duel of music, outplaying the guardian.

Property: The fey guardian is very talented, and those who lose the musical competition pay a heavy price. (Some stories claim that a powerful item must be wagered, while others say that the loser must serve the guardian for a decade.) Only someone playing the instrument has a chance of beating the guardian. Any attempt at harming the guardian results in a fight against the former losers of musical duels who are serving the guardian.

Form: Flute, harp, music box, scroll of musical notes.

Invulnerable Armor

Story Obstacle: A unique creature has a deadly melee or ranged attack that instantly kills or causes a permanent condition. Examples include a medusa, a basilisk, or a catoblepas that has an enhanced gaze attack, or a serpent whose venom instantly slays living creatures.

Property: The armor's wearer can resist the special attack of this creature; that attack is instead treated as one that does not instantly kill or cause a permanent condition.

Form: Armor, brooch, shield, protective salve.

Magical Simulacrum

Story Obstacle: A character must brave tremendous peril, or needs to appear in two places at once.

Property: A simulacrum looks, speaks, and acts exactly like the character it is modeled on, perfectly replicating all the character's personality traits and quirks. It has the same defenses, skills, and abilities, but cannot attack or defend itself, and has 1 hit point. As with a minion, any damage destroys it, but a character trained in Heal can heal the simulacrum by making a Heal check (hard DC) as a standard action. Only characters trained in Heal can aid this check. A character who fails this check can try again, but only after 24 hours have passed. After three such failures, the simulacrum is destroyed permanently. The simulacrum can operate independently from the character and recount its adventures at a later date.

Form: When first discovered or employed, a simulacrum is an unassuming humanoid shape, white and featureless. When activated by a character, the simulacrum's fragile exterior instantly mirrors that character's appearance, but its interior is hollow, like a drained eggshell. Mechanical simulacra with innards constructed of delicate moving parts are also rumored to exist.

Marut Warden's Token

Story Obstacle: Maruts have established a domain in the Astral Sea where they imprison the bodies and souls of creatures that have broken contracts with them. The characters need access to someone held within this fortress, but a Huge construct guards its massive mechanical gates, and this guardian requires a special token from anyone seeking access.

Combating the guardian is not a wise choice, because defeating it causes it to consume the life force of an imprisoned creature—perhaps the one the characters seek—and then it reanimates at full health on the same initiative count during the following round. Only the guardian knows the secret to opening the mechanical gates.

Property: The guardian will not harm the token's bearer unless it is provoked. The guardian places a proffered token into a slot in its head. Machine parts whir and click as the massive gates unlock and open. Whoever presents the token can remove one creature (or soul) from the prison without resistance from the guardian.

Form: The token is a 1-foot-diameter round bronze disc, divided into four quadrants by a cross. Each quadrant is inscribed with strange reliefs that seem to follow a pattern.

Messenger of the Gods

Story Obstacle: A problem of grave import captures the attention of the gods, who have a stake in the way the conflict resolves. One or more of the gods become aware of a world-ending threat, or of something that poses danger to their own existence. Due to the nature of the threat, or to the rules that govern the deities' interactions with the world, they cannot take direct action to fix the problem and need the help of mortals, preferably worshipers, to do so.

Property: One of the gods communicates with a devoted follower among the characters through an item that they acquire (or an item that the worshiper owns that didn't previously have any direct connection to the deity). The god uses the item to instruct, command, and guide his or her worshiper on how to defeat the threat. However, this communication isn't direct, requiring the characters to read portents, puzzle out obscure references, or seek out other agents who can decipher the clues imparted through the item.

Form: Brooch, sacred chest, talisman.

Miraculous Item

Story Obstacle: Reality has become a twisted nightmare or a hostile setting for the heroes, who require great support to survive or to defeat their mighty adversaries.

Property: This item holds the captive spirit of a powerful entity (such as a genie) or puts the characters in contact with an immortal creature that bestows a single wish. This creature is not required to grant wishes, and does not grant selfish wishes, except possibly those that would punish an unwary wisher. The entity refuses to kill for the characters, but it will aid them in a single endeavor on their quest, such as transporting them to a desired destination or lending them an item that will help them defeat their foe. This item yields story results, not mechanical results. At your discretion, a wish can provide temporary boosts, items, status, or anything else the players can dream up, but all of this fades once the adventure ends and reality returns.

Form: Bottle, holy relic, magic lamp, ornate box, ring.

Oracular Glass

Story Obstacle: The heroes are searching for a missing person, a lost treasure, or some form of guidance on their current quest.

Property: This reflective item shows the heroes what they seek, hinting with cryptic words or visions at a grave danger they must overcome to succeed. However, before the item can be used, the characters must fight past a guardian or face a series of trials to reach or acquire the item. Additionally, to use the item, the characters might have to pay a price, perhaps giving up an item, revealing a hidden secret, or accepting a limitation upon their abilities.

Form: Crystal sphere, mirror, scrying pool.

Pathfinder

Story Obstacle: A torturous labyrinth, a deadly dungeon, or a trackless wilderness stands between the characters and their hidden destination.

Property: This item reveals an invisible path through or past the obstacle. It could constantly reveal the path to its bearer, or it could show the way once per hour or once per day.

Form: Amulet, goggles, helm, lantern.

Restorer of the Earth

Story Obstacle: The land has been ravaged by unnatural famine, or by the tainted energy of a portal to the Abyss. The fields have been laid barren and the people sickened.

Property: This item restores the soil, driving out the curse that besets the land, or healing a particular region of blight. Afterward, the land thrives and bears healing fruit.

Form: Enchanted tilling tools, fey seeds, magical soil.

Ring of Mortal Delights

Story Obstacle: Some desperate need drives a character and, in answer to fervent prayers, a stranger gives this ring as a gift, or it is found unattended somewhere. This ring could also be found upon the hand of a powerful devil, which seemingly (though falsely) accounts for the ring's power.

Property: The first three times a creature bearing this ring makes a wish—usually an offhand desire mentioned in passing—the desire is realized. Wishes granted in this manner come to pass only if something terrible occurs in their fulfillment. The wishes affect neither powerfully evil creatures (so a character cannot wish Demogorgon dead) nor significant characters in the campaign. For example, a character can wish for and receive a magic longsword, but the sword's previous owner might resent him or her for the theft. If the character wishes for the death of some creature, that creature might die choking on the bones of one of the character's friends.

Once three desires have been voiced and fulfilled, the item disappears. It cannot be destroyed by any known means, and the ring always finds another greedy mortal to ruin, even if it is hidden away or secured. This item requires shrewd adjudication, but keeping its nature secret should give you enough opportunity to think of ways to make negative story effects occur.

Form: A golden ring encrusted with rubies.

Sacred Charm of Warding

Story Obstacle: A unique creature is stalking people in their sleep, feeding on them while they dream. The victims remember the attacks, but can't recall anything about what is stalking them or why. Within a few days of the first attack, each victim is found dead, apparently having expired in his or her sleep. No normal means has been found to stop the creature, and people are trying to keep themselves awake in order to keep themselves alive.

Property: To fight the nighttime terror, the characters must acquire this item and then use it to enter the world of dreams during their sleep so they can find and stop whatever is preying on people. In addition, the charm protects those sleeping near it from the creature's attacks within their dreams.

Form: Blessed oil, holy symbol, special herbs or incense.

Scales of Power

Story Obstacle: The party's enemy waxes and wanes in strength. When this foe is at its strongest, it is impossible to defeat.

Property: When activated, this item measures the strength of a single powerful creature and compares the party's strength to the current strength of that creature. By being able to determine when their enemy is at its weakest, the characters can plot when to strike.

Form: Abacus, balance, dowsing rod, knotted measuring cord.

Soul Vessel

Story Obstacle: A unique creature conceals its life force inside a vessel. As long as the creature's life force is tied to the vessel, the creature cannot truly be destroyed; when slain, it uses the vessel to quickly return to life and power.

Property: Destroying the vessel negates the creature's immortality and causes it to become a mortal creature of its kind.

Form: Amulet, earth-filled coffin, jar, piece of bone.

Summoning Instrument

Story Obstacle: The characters must cross a boundary between worlds, and they need a mystical creature or vessel to transport them from one realm to the next. This transport might inhabit the watery depths or soar at dizzying heights; it might sail the Astral Sea or the ether of the Far Realm.

Property: This instrument calls a creature or a vessel to the characters' location at a boundary between planes or worlds. The summoned conveyance might require a price for transport. After the characters move aboard, on, or in it (and any agreement is made), it carries the characters to their destination.

Form: Gong, horn, scroll of mystic poetry, coin.

Talking Object

Story Obstacle: The heroes need outside aid, clues, or specific knowledge to help them with a problem in their current adventure.

Property: This item is native to the area the characters are exploring. It represents an inanimate but sentient entity that the characters can pick up and carry with them. The item might reflect the characteristics of its surroundings (for example, a pure voice and a radiant glow if found in a temple of good, or oozing blood and spewing curses during conversation if found in a necromancer's lair). The item provides helpful advice and guides the characters toward clues that allow them to succeed on their quest. Depending on the nature of the item, it might direct the characters to follow a difficult or painful path, possibly causing them to unwittingly cause mischief that comes back on them later. The item might also intend to deceive the characters, revealing enough clues to keep the heroes on the right track before finally betraying them.

Form: Amulet, lantern, skull, statuette.

Talking lantern

JIM NELSON

True Name

Story Obstacle: A unique creature has unusually powerful abilities or is more than five levels higher than a normal creature of its kind.

Property: Intoning the creature's true name compels the creature to obey the speaker's commands, or weakens it by lowering its level to that of a normal creature of its kind.

Form: Oracular knowledge, scroll, tablet.

Ward of Protection

Story Obstacle: A horde of demons, a host of barbarian raiders, or some other large destructive force descends on a nation or a key population center. The characters must stop it from destroying the area.

Property: This item must be acquired, possibly from a dangerous location, and placed in front of the approaching horde, or the item must be found and activated before the horde arrives. Doing so will protect the region from the opposing force, causing it to be unable to approach (either physically, or by hiding the population center in a place the horde can't reach). Only small groups of the enemy that were already within the protected region when the item was placed, or those few enemies strong enough to force their way past the ward, can bypass this protection.

Form: Monument, obelisk, standard, statue, totem.

CHAPTER 6

Adventuring Gear

TYLER JACOBSON

I WOULD be remiss if I did not provide at least some slight guidance on certain ordinary topics. Though wizards and other spellcasters might not think much about items that do not rely upon enchantment, we live in a world full of individuals who spend most of their lives relying upon such mundane objects for their livelihood and their survival.

I will limit the discussion to those items most useful to ourselves and our hirelings: adventuring tools, architectural constructions, and alchemical items.

Alchemy is of some interest to one of our number, and I'll leave it to him to provide a more in-depth treatise of the topic. For my part, I shall merely observe that the process by which the reagents produce effects warrants closer observation. The system of interactions between ingredients bears a certain resemblance to the complexity of the systems through which we practice magic. As I noted earlier in the introduction to the chapter about magical equipment, such systems are ultimately false. Thus, keen observation of alchemy's "nonmagical" systems could lead to illuminating insights on the nature of the universe in which we exist.

And of course hirelings themselves warrant a certain amount of discussion. As we all know, a dependable hireling can make even the most complex plan feasible, whereas an untrustworthy mercenary can cause even the simplest endeavor to come crashing down around us. When assessing the reliability of a hireling, you should look not only for fidelity and earnestness, but for predictability of behavior. For example, a disloyal hireling can be a boon if you can surmise under what circumstances you will be betrayed.

—Mordenkainen, from his master copy of the Magnificent Emporium

Scholar's Note: The last sentence of this passage has always been unnerving to me. I do not doubt that Mordenkainen would consider my copying of a text he eradicated from existence to be a betrayal. And the manner in which I left his service can leave no doubt. Did he know that I would create this extra copy of the work? If so, did he predict that I would kill the other seven apprentices to protect my secret? I would not put such a callous calculation past the old scoundrel. But if he knew I would act this way, am I being allowed to live out my part in his plans, or shall I be eliminated now that my part is done?

Adventuring Gear

Most of the adventuring gear presented here has a specific application that makes it useful. Many of these items also lend temselves to being used in other creative ways.

Ball Bearings: As a standard action, you can drop these smooth metal spheres into an adjacent square (or gather them back up). Any creature moving on the ball bearings must either treat the square as difficult terrain or succeed on a saving throw to avoid falling prone. Creatures that are running can use only the latter option.

Bell and Whistle: A bell is useful for setting an alarm, while blowing a whistle lets you alert comrades at a greater distance.

Bestiary: Each of these books offers lore about a single combination of creature origin and type, such as fey humanoids. When you fail a monster knowledge check related to a creature with this origin and type, you can reroll the check by spending one hour studying the bestiary. You must use the second result.

Block, Tackle, and Winch: After you attach this set of simple machines to a solid surface, you can pass a rope through it to triple the weight you can lift, pull, or drag on the other end of the rope.

Caltrops: You can drop these pyramid-shaped metal spikes into a square adjacent to you (or gather them back up) as a standard action. Any creature moving on the caltrops must either treat the square as difficult terrain or become slowed (save ends). Creatures that are running can use only the latter option.

Camouflaged Clothing: While you are not moving, these garments allow you to blend into your surroundings by granting you a +2 bonus to Stealth checks.

Candle Clock: Lighting one of these wax tapers allows you to count hours by observing how far the candle has burned down against marks made in the wax. Each clock lasts for 8 hours and is consumed after use. Candle clocks are typically sold in pairs to help synchronize timing between separate groups.

Chalk and Slate: Use chalk to write on dungeon walls to help find your way back out or to leave messages for those who follow. Drawing on a slate lets you communicate simple ideas when you need to remain silent or work around a language barrier.

Charlatan's Kit: This kit includes caltrops, a crook-eye, disguise kit, gambler's gear, gambling cheats, and a glass cutter. Many purchasers supplement this kit with goodnight tincture (page 132).

Chirurgeon's Tools: This surgical gear includes brass wedges that can be heated to cauterize wounds and jars of leeches for bleeding patients. When you use these tools to treat an ally who has contracted a disease caused by an attack from a creature, that ally gains a +2 bonus to the next check he or she makes against the disease.

Cold-Weather Clothing: Wearing these furs gives you a +2 bonus to Endurance checks against cold weather. Wearing the snowshoes included in

KITS

Purchasing a kit is a good way to make sure you have all the adventuring gear you need. A standard adventurer's kit covers the basics, while the kits described here provide specialized equipment for different character concepts.

ADVENTURING GEAR

| Item | Price | Weight |
|---|---|---|
| Ball bearings | 10 gp | 1 lb. |
| Bell and whistle | 1 gp | — |
| Block, tackle, and winch | 10 gp | 10 lb. |
| Charlatan's kit | 136 gp | 13 lb. |
| Caltrops | 10 gp | 1 lb. |
| Crook-eye | 50 gp | 2 lb. |
| Disguise kit | 30 gp | 5 lb. |
| Gambler's gear | 1 gp | — |
| Gambling cheats | 20 gp | — |
| Glass cutter | 25 gp | 5 lb. |
| Dagger boots | 2 gp | 4 lb. |
| Delver's kit | 40 gp | 28 lb. |
| Crowbar | 2 gp | 4 lb. |
| Iron spikes (10) | 1 gp | 5 lb. |
| Manacles, iron | 10 gp | 2 lb. |
| Miner's helmet | 10 gp | 3 lb. |
| Sacks (2) | 1 gp | 1 lb. |
| Surveyor's gear | 15 gp | 5 lb. |
| Ten-foot pole | 1 gp | 8 lb. |
| Devotee's kit | 146 gp | 14 lb. |
| Candle clocks (2) | 1 gp | 1 lb. |
| Chalk and slate | 5 sp | — |
| Chirurgeon's tools | 20 gp | 4 lb. |
| Doctrinal book | 25 gp | 3 lb. |
| Regalia | 100 gp | 6 lb. |
| Footpads | 5 gp | — |
| Harness | 5 gp | 1 lb. |
| Manacles, adamantine | 650 gp | 2 lb. |
| Sage's kit | 135 gp | 12 lb. |
| Bestiary | 25 gp | 3 lb. |
| Hidden item compartment | 40 gp | 2 lb. |
| Investigation gear | 40 gp | 4 lb. |
| Iron filings and lodestone | 15 gp | — |
| Jar of glowworms | 5 gp | 1 lb. |
| Writing case | 10 gp | 2 lb. |
| Traveler's kit | | |
| Camouflaged clothing | 30 gp | 6 lb. |
| Cold-weather clothing | 10 gp | 10 lb. |
| Desert clothing | 5 gp | 4 lb. |
| Map case | 15 gp | 2 lb. |
| Signal ammunition (5) | 15 gp | 5 lb. |
| Snares | 5 gp | 4 lb. |

this gear allows you to ignore difficult terrain caused by snow and ice, but reduces your speed by 2.

Crook-Eye: You can look around corners with the angled mirrors in this leather-bound wooden tube. You grant combat advantage and take a –2 penalty to Perception checks while using a crook-eye, but you can trace your line of sight from a square adjacent to you.

Crowbar: Wielding this metal pry bar gives you a +2 bonus to Strength checks to break open locked doors or containers.

Dagger Boots: These spike-toed footwear help you kick notches into a surface you are climbing. While wearing dagger boots, you gain +2 bonus to Athletics checks to climb but take a –2 penalty to Stealth checks to move silently.

Delver's Kit: This kit includes a crowbar, ten iron spikes, iron manacles, a miner's helmet, two sacks, surveyor's gear, and a ten-foot pole. Many purchasers supplement this kit with clinging essence of fire (page 130).

Desert Clothing: Wearing this mask and loose-fitting robes gives you a +2 bonus to Endurance checks to resist heat or to avoid the effects of persistent dust or sun glare.

Devotee's Kit: This kit includes two candle clocks, chalk and slate, chirurgeon's tools, a doctrinal book, and regalia. Many purchasers supplement this kit with holy water (page 132).

Disguise Kit: Using these cosmetics and prosthetics gives you a +2 bonus to Bluff checks to pass off your disguises.

GAMBLING

Although a particular high-stakes wager might be the subject of a skill challenge, gambling is usually resolved by opposed checks. Each gambler chooses to make either a Bluff check or an Insight check. The gambler with the highest result wins the stakes; the others share the loss.

If you choose to cheat while gambling, make a Bluff check or an Insight check as usual. If you dislike the result, you can make a Thievery check and use that result instead. You are exposed as a cheater if your Thievery check does not exceed the passive Perception checks of the other participants, or their active Perception checks if they suspect you are cheating and are watching for it.

Introducing marked gambling gear (gambling cheats) into the game makes it easier to cheat. At the start of a wager, the process of deciding whose gambling gear will be used is typically resolved by an opposed Diplomacy check. To substitute marked gear once the gambling is under way, you must succeed on two opposed checks against the highest-level opponent: Bluff against Insight, and Thievery against Perception.

Doctrinal Book: Each of these volumes holds lore pertaining to a certain deity. After a failed Religion check associated with this deity or its followers, you can attempt the check again after spending 1 hour studying the doctrinal book. You must use the second result.

Footpads: While wearing these felt soles over your normal footwear, you gain a +1 bonus to Stealth checks to move quietly.

Gambler's Gear: These dice, cards, knucklebones, or diviner's sticks are necessary equipment for games of chance.

Gambling Cheats: This marked gambling gear gives you a +2 bonus to Thievery checks to cheat while gambling.

Glass Cutter: By affixing this tool to a piece of glass, you can quickly and silently etch the surface and create a round hole large enough to fit your arm through.

Hidden Item Compartment: While wearing this cunningly crafted piece of apparel, you can conceal an object on yourself that weighs 1 pound or less. You gain a +2 bonus to Stealth checks against Perception checks to notice the item.

Investigation Gear: This bag of equipment includes containers made from different materials, brushes, dusts, tweezers, picks, probes, a magnifying glass, ink and quills, parchment, and a small journal. You gain a +2 bonus to Perception checks when you use the kit to search an area for specific details.

Iron Filings and Lodestone: Watching for disruptions in the patterns that iron filings normally form around a lodestone can help you perceive strong magical forces. When you fail an Arcana check to detect magic on an object or a location, you can attempt the check again after spending 1 hour spreading and studying the iron filings. You must use the second result.

Iron Spikes: Hammering one of these blunt, wide metal wedges between a door and its frame requires a standard action and adds 5 to the DC of checks to open the door. If nothing but a spike is holding a door shut, the base DC to open it is 15. Spiking a door is noisy; each time you drive in a spike, creatures within 20 squares can make a Perception check with a +5 bonus to hear you.

Jar of Glowworms: The tiny insects in the jar create dim light in the jar's square.

THINGS TO DO WITH A JAR OF GLOWWORMS

The worms give off just enough light to read by, and the jar can be covered to avoid revealing your position in the darkness. You can use a ten-foot pole to push the jar into an ominous-looking area, sometimes revealing danger if the light goes out. This method of using the jar is also a good way to spring traps that are triggered by the presence of living things.

FOR THE DM: IMPROVISED EQUIPMENT

Sooner or later, someone in your game is sure to think of a new mundane item that's not mentioned in the rules, or a new use for one that is. These guidelines are meant to help you decide how to handle such situations.

Specific: If you have the right tool for the job, you might bypass the need for a skill check altogether. But if something gives a bonus to every possible use of a skill, it's a magic item. Mundane gear provides bonuses only in specific circumstances.

Tradeoffs: Gear sometimes gives a bonus when you're trying to do one thing but a penalty when doing something else. Using equipment can also create challenges for adventurers—using a grappling hook to swing across a chasm could enable someone to avoid making an Athletics check to jump, but it also might mean that an enemy can cut the rope when that person is halfway across.

Detailed: Bringing equipment into a scene establishes facts that both the players and you can use to make action happen. Visualizing the details is essential to making common-sense rulings about what mundane items can do.

Hefty: Adventuring gear is limited by weight in the same way that slots limit magic items. Players need to track whether the amount their characters are carrying exceeds their normal load (Strength × 10 in pounds) and pay attention to where the character keeps the items (in hand or stowed). You have the right to establish reasonable limits on the bulkiness of what a character can carry (Rules Compendium, page 265).

Flexible: When a character wants to take an improvised action that falls outside the standard rules, use a check if possible, keying the DC to the difficulty of the action. For example, if a character wants to jam an iron spike into an iron golem's knee joint to slow it, the act might require a hard Athletics check. However, if the action might deal damage, such as using a ten-foot pole to push a statue over onto a foe, set the DC for the check and establish an appropriate amount of damage if the check succeeds (perhaps equating it to a basic attack).

Always Possible: Arguments about what equipment is or isn't capable of can go on for a long time. Let everyone have a brief say, set the odds that something will work—for example,"It's a good plan, but there's still a 1 in 4 chance it will fail"—and then let the dice decide. Even if the plan seems impossible or a sure thing, the fact that the group has been arguing about it means that it's reasonable and fun to allow a 1 in 20 chance of miraculous success or failure.

Manacles: When you put these shackles on a helpless or otherwise incapacitated creature, that creature is restrained until it escapes or is freed. The Acrobatics check to escape from these restraints is against a hard DC of the creature's level.

The Strength check to break the manacles is against a DC that depends on the quality of the manacles, whether iron (DC 24) or adamantine (DC 31).

Map Case: This waterproof leather tube can be unrolled to form a writing surface. The maps you make with the tools inside, which include parchment, charcoal, ink, and strings with distance markings, can be sold to others interested in your discoveries.

Miner's Helmet: You can attach a lantern, a sunrod, or some other lighting device to the forehead reflector of this headgear to provide hands-free illumination.

Regalia: In social situations where appearances and wealth matter, wearing regalia gives you a +2 bonus to Bluff, Diplomacy, and Intimidate checks.

Sack: You can carry up to 100 pounds in one of these leather or canvas drawstring bags.

Sage's Kit: This kit includes a bestiary, a hidden item compartment, investigation gear, iron filings and lodestone, a jar of glowworms, and a writing case.

POCKET CHANGE

It's sometimes useful to know how much money a character might typically have on hand. The table below gives minor and major purchase values (in gp) for a character of a given level. A character can make a minor purchase with the monetary treasure he or she might earn in a single combat encounter, skill challenge, or minor quest. Major purchases are those the character would have to save up for an entire level's worth of adventuring to afford. A mage's tower (priced at 10,000 gp) is a major purchase when you're level 15, but a minor expense when you're level 22.

MINOR AND MAJOR PURCHASE VALUES

| Level | Minor | Major | Level | Minor | Major |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 10 | 144 | 16 | 1,800 | 18,000 |
| 2 | 20 | 208 | 17 | 2,600 | 26,000 |
| 3 | 30 | 271 | 18 | 3,400 | 34,000 |
| 4 | 40 | 336 | 19 | 4,200 | 42,000 |
| 5 | 50 | 400 | 20 | 5,000 | 50,000 |
| 6 | 75 | 720 | 21 | 9,000 | 90,000 |
| 7 | 100 | 1,040 | 22 | 13,000 | 130,000 |
| 8 | 125 | 1,360 | 23 | 17,000 | 170,000 |
| 9 | 150 | 1,680 | 24 | 21,000 | 210,000 |
| 10 | 200 | 2,000 | 25 | 25,000 | 250,000 |
| 11 | 350 | 3,600 | 26 | 45,000 | 450,000 |
| 12 | 500 | 5,200 | 27 | 65,000 | 650,000 |
| 13 | 650 | 6,800 | 28 | 85,000 | 850,000 |
| 14 | 800 | 8,400 | 29 | 105,000 | 1,050,000 |
| 15 | 1,000 | 10,000 | 30 | 125,000 | 1,250,000 |

Many purchasers supplement this kit with tracking dust (page 135).

Snares: When you use these baited tripwire traps, you gain a +2 bonus to Nature checks or Dungeoneering checks to forage, but each check requires 2 hours instead of 1 hour.

Signal Ammunition: These arrows, sling bullets, or crossbow bolts incorporate sunrod materials that ignite when the ammunition is fired, and are useful for coordinating maneuvers or signaling for help.

Surveyor's Gear: With this plumb line, measuring chain with pins, and slate for recording notes, you gain a +2 bonus to Perception checks to search for secret doors or hidden rooms, but using the gear takes at least 5 minutes.

Ten-Foot Pole: Prodding dangerous-looking things with a ten-foot pole lets you trigger many traps from the safety of 2 squares away.

Traveler's Kit: This kit includes camouflaged clothing, cold-weather clothing, desert clothing, a map case, five pieces of signal ammunition, and snares. Many purchasers supplement this kit with icening (page 132).

Writing Case: This leather case holds a blank journal, loose sheets of parchment, an ink stone and ink brushes, a blotter, quills, and penknives.

BUILDINGS

The prices in this section apply to creating a new structure or purchasing an existing one. A single-room dwelling in a desirable city neighborhood can cost as much as a castle overlooking a backwater province, and characters who take over a fort will not necessarily be able to find a buyer willing to purchase property in a monster-infested wilderness.

Castle: Hundreds or thousands of people live and work in safety between the curtain wall and keep of one of these massive stone structures.

Castle with Dungeon: The excavations below this structure are as extensive as the towers that crown it.

Cottage: This single-room hut typically has walls of wood or sod and a thatched roof.

Floating Castle: For those who want to travel without leaving home.

Gatehouse: This building has reinforced walls, its own gate and portcullis, and quarters for five guards.

Keep: This heavy stone fortification is built to withstand a siege.

Mansion: This stately edifice has multiple wings, making it a good guildhouse or residence in which to entertain guests in style.

Palace: The architecture and ornamentation of this immense complex is designed to impress.

Palisade Fort: Surrounded by a wall of sharpened logs, this wooden fort can be constructed quickly and garrisons up to fifty troops and their families.

Private Island: From beaches, docks, and sea caves to towers, villas, and observatories, it's all yours.

Quarters: These three small rooms might be a single-story wooden house, or an apartment within a larger building.

Stone Building: The stone walls of this building make it an ideal workshop or townhouse. It can be two stories tall and is typically 30 feet wide by 40 feet long.

Tower: A favorite residence for mages, this stone spire rises 30 feet high and is 20 feet in diameter.

Wood Building: This two-story structure is typically 30 feet wide by 40 feet long and makes a good tavern or farmhouse. However, its wooden walls make it susceptible to fire.

BUILDINGS

| Item | Price |
|---|---|
| Castle | 250,000 gp |
| Castle with dungeon | 1,000,000 gp |
| Cottage | 400 gp |
| Floating castle | 1,250,000 gp |
| Gatehouse | 6,500 gp |
| Keep | 75,000 gp |
| Mansion | 40,000 gp |
| Palace | 175,000 gp |
| Palisade fort | 25,000 gp |
| Private island | 650,000 gp |
| Quarters | 1,000 gp |
| Stone building | 3,000 gp |
| Tower | 10,000 gp |
| Wood building | 1,500 gp |

Trade Goods

Whether someone is a trapper bringing a cart full of furs to market or a ship captain pulling into port with a hold full of astral cloth, it is important to know the relationship between the amount of the goods one hopes to sell and the price one expects to earn. The table below presents this information for some of the most important valuables in the Dungeons & Dragons game, as well as the unit of finished goods in which each is typically encountered.

A seller might need to seek out a buyer for items such as rare wines or artwork, whose value is not always obvious to the untrained eye. Someone who wants to buy such items might need to worry about counterfeits.

Buying and Selling: To perform either of these transactions, establish the total value of the trade goods in question. Use the major purchase column on the table in the Pocket Change sidebar (page 127) to figure out the level of this transaction. For example, unloading a rare book worth 10,000 gp—or a forged copy of the same—would be a 15th-level transaction. Use this information with the Difficulty Class by Level table (Rules Compendium, page 126) to determine the DC to sell or buy a trade good, or to recognize or pass off a fake item.

Then make a check (usually Streetwise) to find either a buyer or a seller. Use the moderate DC for the level of the transaction in a location with a good-sized marketplace or population. Use the easy DC in major trading hubs such as the City of Brass, and the hard DC if the value of the items far exceeds the locals' wealth. A successful check indicates that the transaction has been completed.

Counterfeits and Forgeries: In the case of a counterfeit, the buyer has a chance to recognize the fake before purchasing it, and the check is based on how much the forger invested in the item. Use the easy DC if the forger spent one-tenth of the item's true value on the forgery, the moderate DC if one-fifth the value was spent, or the hard DC if one-half the value was spent.

TRADE GOODS

| Item | Finished Unit | Weight per Unit | Value per Unit | Value per Pound |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Artwork, epic | statuette | 5 lb. | 5,000,000 gp | 1,000,000 gp |

| Wine, rare | bottle | 1 lb. | 500 gp | 500 gp |

Alchemical Items

In a fantasy setting where magic is real, how does alchemy fit in? In our own history, alchemy was a precursor to science, but you can avoid many arguments by not applying scientific reasoning to fantasy concepts. Here are some guidelines for thinking about alchemy.

Alchemy is formulaic. Much like wizardry or ritual magic, alchemy relies on following certain steps in a particular order. Alchemy will reliably produce a desired result, but its effects are less flexible than a wizard's spells or an artificer's creations because it does not directly channel a power source.

Alchemy is earthy. Alchemy uses the traces of magic left in the world when power is channeled through base matter. Alchemists seek to collect the parts of exotic beasts, such as a unicorn's horn or a dragon's blood, because such objects are a rich source of these magical remnants.

Alchemy is risky. Alchemy makes no distinctions between friend and foe. Its effects are often long lasting and can do more harm to the party than good. Be careful when using alchemy against enemies with forced movement powers that can push you into the area of your own alchemical effects.

Using Alchemy

The craft of creating alchemical items is more accessible to most characters than creating full-fledged magic items or learning and performing rituals. If you have the Alchemist feat (below), you can concoct items for which you have the formula and the necessary skill training.

All alchemical items are consumable. An item is expended when put into use, although its effects might last well beyond the time when it is applied or otherwise employed.

Alchemist

If you are equipped with the proper formula and sufficient talent, you can concoct alchemical items for the use of yourself or others.

Benefit: You can make alchemical items of your level or lower. You must have the correct formula and training in an appropriate skill.

Special: If you receive the Ritual Caster feat as a class feature, you can take the Alchemist feat instead.

Reading the Table

The alchemical formulas used to create the items in this section have three common characteristics, all summarized on the table below.

Key Skills: You must have training in at least one of the indicated skills to use a particular formula.

Market Price: This is what you pay to purchase the formula (which can also be thought of as the recipe).

Creation Time: How long it takes to produce one dose or application of the alchemical item of the same name.

Item Categories

Each alchemical item in the following section has a category that defines how the item is used or its general effect.

ALCHEMICAL FORMULAS

| Name | Key Skills | Market Price | Creation Time |
|---|---|---|---|
| Alchemist's essence | Arcana, Thievery | 70 gp | 30 minutes |
| Chartreuse gas | Nature, Thievery | 250 gp | 1 hour |
| Clinging essence | Arcana, Nature, Thievery | 120 gp | 1 hour |
| Corpseburster | Arcana, Thievery | 200 gp | 30 minutes |
| Elemental accelerant | Arcana | 70 gp | 1 hour |
| Foaming plaster | Arcana, Thievery | 70 gp | 30 minutes |
| Goodnight tincture | Nature, Thievery | 750 gp | 1 hour |
| Greater sovereign glue | Arcana, Thievery | 120 gp | 2 hours |
| Holy water | Religion | 50 gp | 1 hour |
| Icening | Arcana | 100 gp | 1 hour |
| Oil of etherealness | Arcana | 6,750 gp | 1 hour |
| Oil of slipperiness | Nature, Thievery | 375 gp | 1 hour |
| Ossip wax | Arcana, Nature, Thievery | 600 gp | 30 minutes |
| Precarious crystal | Arcana, Thievery | 120 gp | 30 minutes |
| Protean silk | Arcana, Nature, Thievery | 450 gp | 1 hour |
| Smoke snake | Arcana, Nature | 800 gp | 30 minutes |
| Sweet water | Arcana, Nature, Religion | 100 gp | 30 minutes |
| Tracking dust | Nature. Thievery | 160 gp | 1 hour |
| Twinned flames | Arcana, Nature | 120 gp | 30 minutes |
| Universal solvent | Arcana, Thievery | 600 gp | 30 minutes |

Oil: Oils are applied to other objects (typically weapons), granting those objects temporary properties or powers.

Volatile: An item of this category explodes or expands when shattered or broken, often dealing damage by the creation of a specific type of energy, such as acid, cold, fire, or lightning.

Poison: A poison is a toxin that hampers or harms a creature.

Other: Some items create miscellaneous effects that don't fall into one of the above categories. These have no designation aside from "Alchemical Item."

Item Descriptions

For convenience, the formula cost of each of the alchemical items in this section is repeated in its statistics block. The other gold piece values represent the cost of the components (or ingredients) needed to create the substance. For instance, the formula for chartreuse gas will set you back 250 gp as a one-time purchase, and if you want to brew a level 9 version of that item it'll cost another 320 gp for the ingredients for that dose.

Alchemist's Essence

All agree that fire was the first element to be distilled into a pure essence whose destructive energy could be safely contained. Some say Vol Tomo created alchemist's fire to give common people a weapon against the young empire of Bael Turath, and that the tieflings' rise to imperial power was hastened because only they could survive when peasants threw a flask of the fiery stuff through a noble's carriage window. The variant essences that were later developed are often called alchemist's frost, alchemist's acid, alchemist's spark, and alchemist's venom.

Alchemist's Essence — Level 1+ Common

When this flask is shattered, its contents fill an area with a deadly distilled element.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 1 | 20 gp | Lvl 16 | 1,800 gp |
| Lvl 6 | 75 gp | Lvl 21 | 9,000 gp |
| Lvl 11 | 350 gp | Lvl 26 | 45,000 gp |

Alchemical Item: Volatile — Formula Cost: 70 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Thievery — Time: 30 min.
Special: When this item is created, the alchemist chooses acid, cold, fire, lightning, or poison. The item gains that keyword, and all damage dealt by the item is of that damage type.

Attack Power (Varies) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Attack: Area burst 1 within 10 (creatures in the burst); the item's level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: The target takes 1d6 damage of the chosen type.
Level 6: 2d6 damage of the chosen type.
Level 11 or 16: 3d6 damage of the chosen type.
Level 21 or 26: 4d6 damage of the chosen type.
Miss: Half damage.

Chartreuse Gas

Inhaling these green vapors, which are usually contained within a glass sphere, causes the victim to mistake memories and fantasies for reality, experiencing them as if they were truly unfolding. In some disreputable quarters of decadent cities, customers pay to be tied down and exposed to chartreuse gas. The proprietors of these establishments often turn a secondary profit by tricking their clients into revealing valuable secrets during their reveries.

Chartreuse Gas — Level 4+ Common

The green mist contained in this glass globe can make dreams and memories seem real.

Alchemical Item: Poison — Formula Cost: 250 gp
Key Skill: Nature or Thievery — Time: 1 hour

Attack Power (Poison) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Attack: Ranged 2/5 (one creature); the item's level + 3 vs. Will
Hit: The target is dazed until the end of your next turn. While dazed, the target takes a -5 penalty to Insight checks to resist Bluff attempts or to recognize effects as illusory, and the target is not aware that this attack has been made against it.

Clinging Essence

One of the most successful new formulas that followed the development of alchemist's fire and its diversification into different elements added a caustic tar that allowed the essence to stick to a target or a weapon. Because many magic weapons are enchanted to repel grime, gore, and other foreign agents, the sophistication of the alchemy required is proportional to the power of the weapon.

Clinging Essence — Level 3+ Common

This vial holds enough sticky essence of a distilled element to apply to one weapon or to douse one enemy.

Alchemical Item: Oil — Formula Cost: 120 gp
Key Skill: Arcana, Nature, or Thievery — Time: 1 hour
Special: When this item is created, the alchemist chooses acid, cold, fire, lightning, or poison. The item gains that keyword, and all damage dealt by the item is of that type.

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You apply the essence to a weapon or ammunition. The level of the clinging essence must be equal to or higher than the level of the weapon or ammunition. Until the end of your next turn, damage dealt by a weapon attack using that weapon or ammunition is of the chosen type instead of any other type.

Corpseburster

Few remember that the original version of this unpleasant toxin was made by alchemists of the fallen empire of Zannad for use by rat catchers. A single rat would be poisoned and then allowed to return to its nest before it expired, at which point its life force would be explosively converted to necrotic energy. The toxin's subsequent battlefield use depended on the ability of the yuan-ti wizards using it to time its release so that an enemy was among its own forces when it was hit by the fluid.

Corpseburster — Level 5+ Common

Death is the trigger for the true virulence of this poisonous purplish fluid.

Key Skill: Arcana or Thievery — Time: 30 min.

Attack Power (Necrotic, Poison) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Attack: Ranged 5/10 (one creature); the item's level + 3 vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target takes ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends).
Aftereffect: The target takes ongoing 1 poison damage (save ends).
Level 15 or 20: Ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends); aftereffect ongoing 2 poison damage (save ends).
Level 25 or 30: Ongoing 15 poison damage (save ends); aftereffect ongoing 3 poison damage (save ends).
Effect: If the target drops below 1 hit point while still taking ongoing damage from this power, make a secondary attack.
Secondary Attack: Close burst 1 centered on the primary target (each creature in the burst); the item's level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d8 necrotic damage.
Level 15 or 20: 2d8 necrotic damage.
Level 25 or 30: 3d8 necrotic damage.

Elemental Accelerant

One principle of alchemy is that every reaction has an associated fuel. For example, because adding wood to a fire heightens the blaze, alchemists hold that wood contains the latent essence of fire.

At the time of the creation of the Elemental Chaos, matter had not yet been separated into different essences. This formula recreates that early protomatter to produce a powder that blankets an area and fuels whatever type of reaction first gives it form.

Elemental Accelerant — Level 3+ Common

This pouch is designed to break apart when thrown, coating everything around it with a dust that intensifies the next reaction in its area.

Alchemical Item: Volatile — Formula Cost: 70 gp
Key Skill: Arcana — Time: 1 hour

Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: Area burst 1 within 10 squares. The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. The first time a creature in the zone takes cold, fire, lightning, radiant, or thunder damage, the following effect is triggered: Attacks against creatures in the zone gain a +2 power bonus to damage rolls that include the triggering damage type. In addition, creatures in the zone take a -2 penalty to saving throws against ongoing damage of that type. These effects last until the end of the triggering creature's next turn, at which point the zone ends.
Level 13: +4 power bonus.
Level 23: +6 power bonus.

Foaming Plaster

The utility of this alchemical item is limited only by the volume of the shape it can be used to simulate. Some people have tried to combine multiple batches of foaming plaster in an attempt to capture an impression of an exceedingly large object (such as a bas relief carved into a wall). The problem they encountered was that as the amount of each reagent is increased, the length of time the plaster stays wet decreases. Whoever came up with the original formula seems to have found the right balance between the volume of the plaster and how long it remains malleable.

Foaming Plaster — Level 1 Common

When you combine these two reagents, one chalky and one viscous, a billow of expanding foam quickly forms in the area and then soon afterward hardens.

| | |
|---|---|
| Lvl 1 | 20 gp |

Alchemical Item — Formula Cost: 70 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Thievery — Time: 30 min.

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You mix the plaster. Once before the end of the encounter, you can use a minor action to create an impression in the wet plaster of a footprint, a key, or a similar small object. Giving the hardened plaster to someone else allows that person to identify the footprint, duplicate the key, and so on as if he or she had the original item.

If the plaster is not used by the end of the encounter, it hardens into a lump.

Goodnight Tincture

This liquid is dissolved into the food or drink of an unsuspecting victim to knock the subject unconscious. It is said that street vendors in the City of Brass spread fearful tales about how the city's taverns dose their patrons with goodnight tincture to sell sweet water to visitors.

Goodnight Tincture — Level 6+ Common

This odorless, tasteless elixir can incapacitate a foe without harming it.

| Lvl 11 | 350 gp | Lvl 26 | 45,000 gp |
| Lvl 16 | 1,800 gp | | |

Alchemical Item: Poison — Formula Cost: 750 gp
Key Skill: Nature or Thievery — Time: 1 hour

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You apply the goodnight tincture to an item of food or drink you are holding or that is adjacent to you. A creature that consumes the food or drink is subject to the following attack 1 minute later: the tincture's level + 6 vs. Fortitude; on a hit, the creature falls unconscious for 1 hour, or until it is subject to an attack or to violent motion.

Greater Sovereign Glue

This ultimate adhesive is stored in a special vial. Greater sovereign glue can be applied directly to bond two objects together, or thrown at an enemy to keep that creature stuck in place.

Greater Sovereign Glue — Level 3+ Common

This vial of gray paste creates a virtually unbreakable bond between the objects it glues together.

| Lvl 8 | 125 gp | Lvl 23 | 17,000 gp |
| Lvl 13 | 650 gp | Lvl 28 | 85,000 gp |

Alchemical Item — Formula Cost: 120 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Thievery — Time: 2 hours

Attack Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Attack: Ranged 5/10 (one creature); the item's level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: The target is slowed (save ends).
Effect: The item is consumed.

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You apply this glue to an object and affix that object to another object within 1 square of you. Doing so consumes this item. If the two objects remain affixed to one another until the end of your next turn (which might require you to hold them together), the items are adhered, and separating them requires a Strength check against a hard DC of the glue's level. A successful Strength check deals 2d10 damage to each adhered object.

Holy Water

It is thought that the secret of making holy water was given to mortals by the gods. Most members of good and unaligned faiths see holy water as a symbol of the deities' common origin in the Astral Sea, despite the many differences in religious iconography that have emerged since the deities carved out their individual dominions. Adventurers who have little time for devotion still value holy water for its effectiveness in harming the traditional enemies of the non-evil gods.

Aside from its effect on undead and demons, holy water acts as normal water in all ways. It can be distinguished from normal water with a successful Arcana check or Religion check.

Holy Water — Level 1+ Common

Undead and demons react poorly to the touch of this liquid.

Key Skill: Religion — Time: 1 hour

Attack Power (Radiant) ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Attack: Ranged 3/6 (one undead creature or demon); the item's level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 radiant damage.
Level 11 or 16: 2d10 radiant damage.
Level 21 or 26: 3d10 radiant damage.

Icening

A now-deceased deity of winter carved her dominion from the Astral Sea with a single snowflake—when she exposed it to the formless stuff of creation, the silvery material took on the snowflake's rigid perfection, forming a crystalline structure. This alchemical formula creates a seed crystal whose shape resembles that primal snowflake, and it can influence normal water in the same way.

Icening — Level 5+ Common

When you toss this crystal into water, it freezes that liquid solid.

Alchemical Item: Volatile — Formula Cost: 100 gp
Key Skill: Arcana — Time: 1 hour

Attack Power (Zone) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Attack: Area burst 1 within 10 (each creature at least partially submerged in water); the item's level + 3 vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target is immobilized until the end of its next turn.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. Water in the zone is difficult terrain. However, if no creatures are in the zone when it is created, water in the zone turns to solid ice.

Oil of Etherealness

Delvers report that a mad wizard's dungeon holds a fountain that seems empty but actually brims with this invisible oil. Expeditions intending to grow rich from bottling it have fallen prey to the dungeon's denizens, who coat themselves in the oil and rise through the floor in ambush. Groups still make the attempt, however, because spending too much time in ethereal form weakens a creature's physical health and many believe all those guardians will eventually be slain.

Oil of Etherealness Level 20 Common

When you apply this oil to yourself or an object, it is momentarily removed from the physical world.

Lvl 20 5,000 gp
Alchemical Item: Oil Formula Cost: 6,750 gp
Key Skill: Arcana Time: 1 hour
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You apply the oil to yourself or to an adjacent creature or object. That creature or object becomes insubstantial and gains phasing until the end of your next turn. As a minor action, a creature benefiting from this power can lose a healing surge to sustain this power until the end of its next turn.

Oil of Slipperiness

The original impetus for the development of this alchemical item was the search for an agent that would allow sovereign glue to be poured from a vial without bonding to the glass. This greenish-black fluid soon found other industrial uses, such as lubricating iron golem gears. After burglars stole the formula, oil of slipperiness became popular among adventurers, who anticipated needing to squirm free from a choker's grasp or slip away from a pursuing band of bugbears.

Oil of Slipperiness Level 8 Common

The oily gel in this vial quickly spreads to make your body or a patch of ground very slick.

Lvl 8 125 gp
Alchemical Item: Oil Formula Cost: 375 gp
Key Skill: Nature or Thievery Time: 1 hour
Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: Area burst 1 within 10. The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. Whenever a creature on the ground enters the zone, it must succeed on a saving throw or fall prone. When forced movement moves a creature into the zone, that forced movement increases by 1 square, and creatures in the zone take a -2 penalty to saving throws to avoid entering hindering terrain.

Special: Recognizing the zone requires a hard Perception check.

FRANZ VOHWINKEL

Ossip Wax

Records from the Anauli Empire suggest that this wax, which induces weightlessness, was originally harvested directly from a now-extinct creature of the beholder family called an ossip. The reconstruction of this formula used by contemporary alchemists is a compound created by a sage who was a noted expert on both beholder anatomy and the Ruined Realms.

Ossip Wax — Level 10 Common

This stiff yellow wax makes anything it's spread on lighter.

Lvl 10 200 gp
Alchemical Item Formula Cost: 600 gp
Key Skill: Arcana, Nature, or Thievery Time: 30 min.
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You smear the wax on one adjacent object of Large or smaller size. The object's weight is reduced by 500 pounds. If this reduction causes the object to become weightless, it floats 5 feet above the ground. Pushing a floating object causes it to continue moving in the direction of the push, at an initial speed of 10. At the end of each round of movement, the object's speed is reduced by 1. This power lasts for 5 minutes or until the end of the encounter.

Precarious Crystal

This item is a favorite of trap makers who want to ward an area against flying creatures. The item has two parts—a bag of chemical salts and a small glass flask of alchemist's essence (fire). In preparing the crystal, the salts are dropped into the flask, and the fire fuses them into a highly unstable crystal in a short amount of time. Thereafter, any major movement near the crystal will cause it to collapse, releasing the fire to trigger another alchemical item or sound an alarm.

Precarious Crystal — Level 3+ Common

This small, clear crystal collapses into a tiny flame in response to motion, activating another nearby alchemical item.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 5 | 50 gp | Lvl 20 | 5,000 gp |
| Lvl 10 | 200 gp | Lvl 25 | 25,000 gp |
| Lvl 15 | 1,000 gp | Lvl 30 | 125,000 gp |

Alchemical Item Formula Cost: 120 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Thievery Time: 30 min.
Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You place the crystal in a square adjacent to you, along with a volatile alchemical item that the crystal will activate. The level of that item must be the same as or lower than the crystal's level. At the end of your next turn, the crystal creates a zone in a burst 1 centered on its square. The first time a creature enters the zone, the crystal vanishes in a bright flash, the volatile alchemical item activates, and the zone ends.

Special: Recognizing the zone requires a Perception check. Disarming it requires an Arcana check or a Thievery check as a standard action. All of these checks are against a hard DC of the crystal's level.

Protean Silk

Some believe that the drow first developed the formula for protean silk. Drow raiders certainly appreciate its ability to form a lightweight rope that can be retracted without leaving a trace, as well as its association with spiders. Having the glands and spinneret extracted from a spider is useful when preparing this item, but not necessary.

Protean Silk — Level 6 Common

You draw forth a long, thin filament from this viscous glob that you can turn into a strong rope that lasts for a short time.

Lvl 6 75 gp
Alchemical Item Formula Cost: 450 gp
Key Skill: Arcana, Nature, or Thievery Time: 1 hour
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You extract a silk strand that can stretch up to 40 squares away. The strand does not move on its own, but it can be carried or attached to an arrow, a bolt, or some other ammunition. As a second minor action, you can turn the strand into a silk rope. As a third minor action, you can cause the rope to dissolve, leaving no trace of it.

Smoke Snake

When lit, this twist of tightly compressed powder leaves a growing tail of ash, creating a cloud of dark, caustic smoke that obscures the area around it.

Smoke Snake — Level 10 Common

You throw this tab of compacted black powder to the ground and it ignites, releasing a cloud of foul-smelling smoke.

Lvl 10 200 gp
Alchemical Item Formula Cost: 800 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Nature Time: 30 min.
Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: Area burst 1 within 10. The burst creates a zone of lightly obscured squares that lasts until the end of the encounter.

Sweet Water

Mixing sweet water into food provides protection against poisoned meals, making it a favorite among wealthy nobles.

Sweet Water — Level 1 Common

This small glob of white jelly purifies even the most toxic food and drink, from poisons to dwarven spirits.

Lvl 1 20 gp
Alchemical Item Formula Cost: 100 gp
Key Skill: Arcana, Nature, or Religion Time: 30 min.
Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Minor Action)

Effect: You apply the sweet water to a portion of food equivalent to a light meal for one person or to a single serving of a beverage. The sweet water removes any poison or disease present in the food or beverage after 1 minute. It cannot remove poison or disease from food or drink that is already in a creature's system.

Tracking Dust

This fine dust is typically applied in areas where you are searching for existing tracks or where you want to detect a creature passing through at a later time. Thieves in areas where tracking dust is common often employ ossip wax to enter an area without leaving footprints.

Tracking Dust — Level 4+ Common

You spread the fine grains of this silver dust to reveal the subtlest tracks.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 4 | 80 gp | Lvl 19 | 8,400 gp |
| Lvl 9 | 320 gp | Lvl 24 | 42,000 gp |

Alchemical Item — Formula Cost: 160 gp
Key Skill: Nature or Thievery — Time: 1 hour

Utility Power (Zone) ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: The tracking dust creates a zone of 5 contiguous squares that lasts for 1 hour (you can arrange the squares however you like). When a creature makes a Perception check to track in the zone, the creature can make the check using either its normal Perception modifier or the +7 bonus provided by the dust.

Level 9: +9 bonus.
Level 14: +12 bonus.
Level 19: +14 bonus.
Level 24: +17 bonus.
Level 29: +19 bonus.

Special: Recognizing the zone requires a hard Perception check of the item's level.

Twinned Flames

Twinned flames is the name given to pairs of inert magical flames that are commonly used to detonate alchemical traps, either at a safe distance or through the use of a precarious crystal. Alchemists create these items using a process that squeezes a candle flame down to its tiniest essence, then splits it into two flames, making their fire inert. When one half of the flame is magically reignited, its twin flares at the same moment.

Twinned Flames — Level 10+ Common

This tiny spark is almost invisible until it is fanned into life. When it is, its twin flame reignites as well.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lvl 10 | 200 gp | Lvl 30 | 125,000 gp |
| Lvl 20 | 5,000 gp | | |

Alchemical Item — Formula Cost: 120 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Nature — Time: 30 min.

Property

To use this item's power, you must first link the item to another alchemical item in hand or in an adjacent square as a standard action. The level of the linked item must be the same as or lower than the level of the twinned flames.

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: You activate the power of the linked alchemical item. You do not need to have line of effect to the item, but you must be within 1 mile of it.

Universal Solvent

The first alchemists to pursue an ultimate dissolving agent took great precautions against the possibility that the universal solvent would eat its way to the center of the earth and gradually unmake the foundations of the world. Although the final product proved not to be as effective as they feared, it is still considered a classic of alchemy.

Universal Solvent — Level 10 Common

This clear solution can dissolve almost any adhesive.

Lvl 10 200 gp

Alchemical Item — Formula Cost: 600 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Thievery — Time: 30 min.

Utility Power ✦ Consumable (Standard Action)

Effect: When you apply this substance to a creature or object in your square or an adjacent square, it destroys any type of mundane bonding agent affecting that creature or object (including sovereign glue).

Universal solvent allows a creature immobilized by mundane agents such as a kobold slinger's gluepot or an aboleth slime mage's slime burst power to immediately succeed on a saving throw against the effect when it's applied. It does not affect the aftereffects of those substances (such as slime burst's slowing effect), nor does it have any effect on creatures immobilized by other effects (for example, a ghoul's claw attack).

RETURN TO SENDER

News of the discovery of the location of the Arkhosian Winter Palace reached two adventuring parties at the same time. As each excavated the rubble in search of an entrance to the buried ruin, a rivalry developed between the Spellblades and the Wildroot Wanderers. The Spellblades hired a salamander mercenary to set the Wanderers' dig site on fire.

Unfortunately for them, the Wanderers were able to subdue the salamander. They took two slabs of stone and used sovereign glue to hold them together, and then glued the salamander onto this impromptu platform. They then piled vials of alchemist's fire on top of the salamander, and smeared ossip wax on the bottom of the slab to enable it to float through the air. Finally, they stuck a precarious crystal onto the bottom of the slab, connected to a flask of universal solvent. Then they kicked the slab to send it floating over the Spellblades' camp.

When those adventurers scrambled out of their tents, their motion caused the precarious crystal to burn through the cork holding in the universal solvent, which dissolved the sovereign glue between the slabs and caused a freed and angry salamander to fall onto the heads of its former employers in a rain of fire.

Appendix 1: Hirelings and Henchmen

Adventurers are a cut above the commoners inhabiting the world—they have talent, specialized training, and access to magic that makes them akin to gods among mortals. Well, maybe not that far, but heroes are something special. Who else can beard the dragon in its lair? Who else can survive a trap-laden gauntlet to root out the goblin bandits lurking in the cavern beyond? Who else can put down zombies by the dozens?

The thing is, for all that heroes can accomplish beyond most peoples' wildest imagining, adventurers need the common people. Non-adventuring men and women do the things that heroes are unable or unwilling to do. What good is a knight without the suit of armor someone else made? How is the paladin going to survive his or her quest without a sword in hand? Horses? Someone has to breed them and train them. And when the adventure is done, when the heroes return, burdened with their spoils, they're bound to be craving a hot meal and warm bed that only the sleepy little communities on the frontier can provide. The mundane tasks fall to the ordinary people to handle, and without those people, there's little point to squaring off against monsters and plundering their vaults.

Commoners are content to leave the adventuring business to the professionals. They happily take their coins and provide services in return. They listen to the tales of high adventure, danger, and daring, living through the stories the adventurers tell, but they are also relieved to go about their lives without having to follow in those people's steps or face those same challenges.

That said, with the right motivation, these common people might be coaxed from relative safety into a wider world of adventure, accompanying the heroes on their quests and lending aid, albeit in minor ways, to help the heroes accomplish their goals. These companions are the henchmen, the lackeys, the hirelings, and the servants. For the right price, they can lend their unique talents to an adventurer's cause.

Hirelings and henchmen have been part of the Dungeons & Dragons® game since the beginning. In older editions, henchmen gave adventuring parties a bit of extra muscle, took the brunt of enemy attacks, and gave the heroes the extra help they needed to achieve their objectives and survive their challenges. Thus far, 4th Edition has nibbled on the henchmen concept by offering different avenues for characters to acquire companions. Certain classes, such as the beastmaster ranger and the sentinel druid, have pets. Dungeon Master's Guide 2 provides extensive rules for creating companion characters, either from scratch or by adapting an existing creature to fill this role. While these options are sufficient for most groups, there's something missing—an element of leadership that harkens back to the classic experiences of the game. This appendix provides an expansion to the existing options that cover hirelings and henchmen and puts in your hands the ability to gather and hire the nonplayer characters you need.

The optional rules in this section add a level of complexity that might not be suitable for every group. For large parties, hirelings and henchmen add to the challenges posed by having so many people around the table. Novices might find extra characters in the mix too difficult to manage, and adding several nonplayer characters can dilute other characters' roles in the party.

On the other hand, hirelings and henchmen can solve some of the problems that arise from having too few players in the group. They can step into missing roles, bolster characters having a tough time performing in their role, and act as special rewards for roleplaying or fulfilling a quest. They can serve as a development from the campaign's unfolding story. Before you put this material to use, check with your Dungeon Master to ensure that a companion is suitable for your group.

Hirelings

The young man who carries your torch lights the way down the dungeon corridor. The valet cleans and mends your clothes, ensuring that all the final preparations are made before you meet the king. The mercenary guard watches over the camp at night, letting you get your rest before you continue your hunt for the troll that made off with the merchant's daughter. These characters are all hirelings: men and women in your employ whose efforts make your travels and missions easier.

Hirelings are similar to companion characters in that they accompany you, but they differ in the capabilities they possess. Hirelings are minor characters and thus do not provide the same degree of support a companion character can provide. Where a companion character might work for a share of the treasure, a hireling is directly in your employ and works for a fee.

Gaining a Hireling

You don't have to hunt for hirelings. Go to just about any settlement, and you're bound to find some enterprising entrepreneur who has a talent you might find useful. Any number of mercenaries, porters, and similar kinds are ready and willing to work for a price. To gain a hireling, you have to find a willing servant and meet the hireling's fee. At the DM's discretion, you might have to succeed on a skill check to convince the character to accompany you, with Bluff, Diplomacy, Intimidate, and Streetwise being the most common skills. Alternatively, you might find a hireling as part of treasure. As strange as this might sound, a monster might keep any number of potential hirelings as prisoners. It's no stretch to think a dragon might keep a minstrel on hand to entertain it, or an artist to paint its portrait, or a mercenary in the larder to gobble up when cows and sheep grow scarce.

Hirelings

FOR THE DM: ABUSE

Coin ensures a hireling's loyalty up to a point.

Just as an adventurer isn't likely to put up with abuse from his or her employer, a hireling isn't likely to stick around if mistreated. Other hirelings can grow wise to a callous master who carelessly sends servants to their doom.

You don't have to track attitudes or a list of offenses. Just think about the adventurer's personality and how well he or she treats the hireling. If you can't imagine someone putting up with that treatment, have the hireling make his or her exit at the first opportunity. As word gets out about the adventurer, you might increase the skill check DCs required to hire these followers.

Hireling Statistics

Regardless of a hireling's occupation, all have certain common statistics.

Level: Hirelings exist at every level. Heroic tier hirelings are the common kinds one expects to find pretty much anywhere people gather. Paragon tier hirelings are experts in their fields. Finding non-player characters at this level of accomplishment who are willing to work for someone else can be hard. Epic tier hirelings are tremendously rare; they are the greatest crafters and artists in their respective fields. Such characters have plans, ventures, and goals of their own to pursue, so they are never available for hire without the DM's consent.

Price: A hireling's price depends on his or her level. The price is generally per day of service. Long-term service can sometimes be gotten at a lower rate or in return for a share of any profit from the expedition or undertaking. Included in the price are the hireling's initial fee, salary, food, equipment, and the materials the hireling might need along the way. It's important to note the price is an abstraction intended to simplify the process of acquiring and maintaining hirelings.

Duration: A hireling remains in your service for as long as you keep paying him or her.

Beast Handler

Cost: Standard

These grooms care for your beasts. They can keep your horse in excellent health, your dog fed, and your falcon ready to hunt.

Traits

Beast Handler ✦ Aura 5

All allied beasts in the aura gain a +1 power bonus to Fortitude and Will.

Guide

Cost: Standard

Expeditions into the wilderness can only benefit from a well-trained guide. These hirelings blaze the trail to the heroes' destination. The cost doubles if the guide is leading you into dangerous territory.

Traits

Trailblazer ✦ Aura 5

Allies in the aura gain a +2 power bonus to Dungeoneering checks and Nature checks.
Level 15: +3 power bonus.
Level 25: +4 power bonus.

Linkboy

Cost: Standard

Few fighters are willing to sacrifice a two-handed weapon or their shield to haul the party's torch. When no one is able or willing to attend to the group's light, a linkboy provides an extra pair of hands.

Traits

Torch ✦ Aura 5

Squares in the aura are illuminated with bright light.

Mercenary

Cost: Standard × 3

Mercenaries are the perfect soldiers for hire, ready to lend their swords and shields provided the pay is right.

Traits

Veteran Warrior ✦ Aura 1

Allies in the aura gain a +1 power bonus to AC and Reflex. In addition, the hireling gains a +2 power bonus to AC and Reflex.

Standard Actions

Melee Attack (weapon) ✦ At-Will

Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); level + 5 vs. AC
Hit: The hireling's level + 3 damage.

Ranged Attack (weapon) ✦ At-Will

Attack: Ranged 10 (one creature); level + 5 vs. AC
Hit: The hireling's level + 3 damage.

Pilot

Cost: Standard × 2

Whether commanding the mariner's wheel on a greatship, driving a wagon team, or guiding an airship to dock, a seasoned pilot is an asset to any crew.

Traits

Seasoned Pilot

When used as a pilot, the hireling grants the vehicle a +1 bonus to the vehicle's speed.

Porter

Cost: Standard

Porters make their living hauling stuff. They are useful hirelings since they can heft considerable weight and still reach places a mule or horse could not.

Traits

Strong

The hireling's normal load is 75 pounds, heavy load is 150 pounds, and maximum drag load is 375 pounds.
Level 1-5: Base speed 5, travel 6 hours per day.
Level 6-10: Base speed 6, travel 8 hours per day.
Level 11-30: Base speed 7, travel 10 hours per day.

Sage

Cost: Standard × 3

Sages are experts in a particular field of knowledge. Few sages venture from their personal domains, though if you can convince one to accompany you, his or her knowledge is yours for the asking.

Traits

☼ Sage Knowledge ✦ Aura 5

Choose one knowledge skill for the sage: Arcana, Dungeoneering, History, Nature, or Religion. Allies in the aura gain a +2 power bonus to skill checks involving the chosen skill.
Level 15: +3 power bonus.
Level 25: +4 power bonus.

Standard Actions

Lore Use ✦ Daily

Effect: One ally gains a +5 item bonus to the next skill check made involving the skill chosen for sage knowledge.

Scribe

Cost: Standard × 2

Limners and copyists, these trained individuals are adept at recording and copying whatever you put in front of them.

Traits

Scribe Document

During a short or an extended rest, the hireling copies one page of text or illustrations. It is a rough copy if performed during a short rest or a perfect copy if performed during an extended rest.

FOR THE DM: HIRELING TRAITS

Like companion characters, hirelings have traits to help them stand out as more than trap springers and door openers. You don't need extensive details; you need only enough information to give them a little life.

Race: A hireling's race does not affect his or her statistics, but it can reveal a lot about personality and appearance. Hirelings favor employers who are friendly to their people.

Physical Description: Come up with one or two distinguishing characteristics to make the hireling stand out. Height, weight, and coloring are good places to start, as are interesting elements such as a limp, a squint, boils, or a ruddy complexion.

Personality: Don't worry too much about motivations, secrets, or behaviors when it comes to hirelings. Instead, assign a word to the hireling to summarize his or her personality. Examples include serious, driven, craven, unhinged, reckless, or loyal.

Seasoned Crew Member

Cost: Standard

These able sailors can ensure that a ship reaches a distant port safe and sound.

Traits

Able Crew

If a vehicle's crew is entirely made up of seasoned crew member hirelings, the vehicle gains a +1 bonus to all defenses.

Spy

Cost: Standard × 3

Spies can keep you supplied with the information you need when you need it most.

Traits

Espionage

The controlling hero gains a +2 power bonus to Streetwise checks.
Level 15: +3 power bonus.
Level 25: +4 power bonus.

Valet

Cost: Standard

Skilled valets are indispensable to those moving through high society because these servants know how to make you look and act your best when you're dealing with the rich and powerful.

Traits

☼ Etiquette ✦ Aura 3

When dressed in suitable clothing, the controlling hero and all allies gain a +2 power bonus to Diplomacy checks while in the aura.
Level 15: +3 power bonus.
Level 25: +4 power bonus.

PETS

A pet can be an interesting way to develop your character's personality and appearance. A house cat, a small snake, a raven, or another animal adds color and can reveal something about the character's interests. If you're interested in acquiring a companion animal, consider the following options.

Class: As of this writing, two classes provide animal companions. The first is the beastmaster ranger introduced in Martial Power™ and the second is the sentinel druid from Heroes of the Forgotten Kingdoms™. In both cases, you get the benefit of a companion creature, with supporting powers to let you coordinate your efforts. If you're not inclined to play either class, you can use the hybrid rules from Player's Handbook® 3 to pick up the Beast Mastery class feature and add to the class you want to play.

Familiars: Another option, specifically for arcane characters, is to take the Arcane Familiar feat from

Arcane Power™. In addition to cats, falcons, and serpents, you can also pick up strange pets such as bound demons and book imps. Any arcane class can take the feat, so if you have a multiclass or hybrid class, this is a great option.

Companion Character: With your DM's permission, you can use the companion character rules from Dungeon Master's Guide® 2 to turn a monster into a companion character. This is a good solution if you have a smaller than normal party since the pet counts as a full member of the party.

Pet Background: Perhaps the easiest solution to acquiring a pet is to add it to your character sheet as a background element. A pet as a background element abstracts a creature with no significant statistics or ability to affect a combat's outcome in a meaningful way. A pet snake, a trained raven, a house cat, and a small dog are all suitable creatures for this option. Think about how you acquired the pet and how you feel about it. Come up with at least one way the pet helped you in the past. And don't forget to name it!

If you choose the pet as your major background benefit, work with your DM to find an appropriate skill. A raven trained to filch small objects might grant a +2 bonus to Thievery checks. A small, vicious dog might grant a +2 bonus to Intimidate checks or Perception checks. A chatty parrot or raven might grant a +2 bonus to Bluff checks.

Henchmen

Where hirelings are minor supporting characters, lending aid to an adventuring group in small ways, henchmen are nearly full-fledged characters in their own right, whose presence in the adventuring group gives the heroes an edge. These characters are counted as full members of the adventuring party. Henchmen have many of the same features, traits, and powers available to player characters, but simplified to allow a player to manage a henchman at the same time that he or she plays a primary character.

Henchmen, also known as companion characters, can take many forms. Some might be beasts and monsters, being creatures drawn from the Monster Manual® or Monster Vault™ books. Others are akin to characters, using the same kinds of powers available to heroes. A few might be unique, crafted by a DM or drawn from a published supplement such as the ones presented below.

Gaining a Henchman

Adding a henchman to your adventuring party can be as simple as posting a notice in a local tavern or as complicated as completing a minor quest, negotiating payment, or tracking down the companion in a city, a wilderness setting, or a dungeon.

Companion: Henchmen are best used to fill in missing roles or to take the place of absent players. If the group lacks a leader, you might recruit one to accompany you on your adventurers to improve your chances for success. A companion can be a constant presence in your group or a sporadic one, depending on the game's needs.

Employee: Sometimes you might want a little help in taking on a dangerous mission. An extra warrior or striker could make a difference, especially if your group is light in these roles. A henchman can serve an adventuring group in exchange for something, such as coin, but sometimes the henchman might join the party so that he or she can gain the party's help in completing a minor or major quest. Employees are not open-ended allies. Their contracts stipulate an end point for their services.

If a henchman's compensation is monetary, the fee equals one-fifth of the value of a magic item equal to the party's level.

Ally: During your hero's adventures, he or she is bound to encounter friendly and helpful characters. You might make a short-term alliance against a common enemy, join forces with a rival adventuring group, or rescue an important character who chooses to fight at your side until you reach safety.

Creating a Henchman

Unlike hirelings, creating a henchman is the DM's job. Dungeon Master's Guide 2 includes the rules the DM needs to turn a monster into a companion character or to create a unique companion.

Running a Henchman

Although the DM creates the henchman, it falls to you to use the character in combat and skill challenges. Outside combat, the DM controls the character, playing the character in accordance with his or her personality, motives, and secrets. In combat, the DM might hand off the character to a player to run.

Henchmen in Play

Remember a couple of things when using henchmen in your group. First, henchmen don't need magic items and thus should never be included in magic item distribution. Second, henchmen earn experience points just as you do and thus earn a full share of XP. Finally, henchmen gain levels and advance at the same rate as other characters in the group.

Sample Henchmen

If you need a henchman in a pinch, you can use any of the following characters.

Anaxana

Reckless Battle Mage

Anaxana is an eladrin magician—a reckless battle mage hungry for vengeance against her people's enemies.

She has a spare frame to the point of being gaunt. Her features are severe, with a long nose that gives her a hawkish appearance. She prefers simple gray robes and keeps a longsword in a scabbard on her weapon belt.

Missions involving hunting down and killing orcs or drow are the easiest ways to recruit Anaxana to the group. She hasn't a kind word for these monsters and delights in fighting them. She might linger with a party for missions that don't involve hunting her enemies but moves on if her bloodlust isn't sated.

Sir Michael Everdawn

Disgraced Knight

Once a promising knight, renowned for his skill at arms and his fine pedigree, Michael fell from grace and is now a pariah in his own lands. He never speaks of how he reached his present state, though his overindulgence in spirits suggests a predilection for drunkenness that might have played a part in his fall.

Michael is a heavyset man with a paunch, red nose, and rheumy eyes. Despite his haggard appearance, he remains strong, powerful, and ferocious in battle. His battered armor shows signs of previous contests, and the faded heraldry, a rampant boar, hints at the better life he once lived.

The disgraced knight craves redemption. He eagerly joins any adventuring group that can promise him a chance to restore his name. While involved in a noble pursuit, he stays clear of the drink until idleness and frustration overcome him.

Tide of Iron (weapon) ✦ At-Will
Requirement: Michael must be using a shield.
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); +9 vs. AC
Hit: 1d8 + 5 damage, and Michael can push the target 1 square, and then shift 1 square into the space the target last occupied.

Minor Actions

Glowering Threat ✦ Encounter
Effect: Close burst 2 (enemies in the burst). Until the end of Michael's next turn, each target takes a -5 penalty to attack rolls against any creature other than Michael.

Triggered Actions

Heroic Effort ✦ Encounter
Trigger: Michael misses with an attack or fails a saving throw.
Effect (No Action): Michael gains a +4 bonus to the attack roll or saving throw.

Power Strike ✦ Encounter
Trigger: Michael hits an enemy with longsword.
Effect (No Action): The triggering attack deals 1d8 extra damage.

Skills Athletics +10, Endurance +8, Intimidate +8

Cadra Forgesworn

Zealous Priestess

Cadra Forgesworn is a devout follower of Moradin. She's so zealous she comes off as a fanatic. She left her clan, not to seek fortune or glory, but to champion her patron in the world.

As with most dwarves, Cadra is short and stocky. Her determination makes up for any shortcomings in physical might, and when committed to a cause, she is as tenacious as a troll with a fresh carcass in its maw. She shaved her head and inked her scalp with battle scenes described in the Book of Spite, a holy tome favored by Moradin's more militant priests.

| Cadra Forgesworn | Level 2 Leader |

| Speed 5 | Low-light vision |
| Saving Throws +5 against poison effects | |
| Traits | |
| Stand Your Ground | |
| Cadra can move 1 square less than the effect specifies when subjected to a pull, a push, or a slide. In addition, when an effect would cause Cadra to fall prone, she can make a saving throw to avoid falling prone. | |
| Standard Actions | |
| Warhammer (weapon) ✦ At-Will | |
| Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); +8 vs. AC | |
| Hit: 1d10 + 1 damage. | |

| Sanctuary ✦ Encounter | |
| Effect: Ranged 10 (Cadra or one creature). The target gains a +5 bonus to all defenses until the target attacks or until the end of Cadra's next turn. | |
| Divine Glow (implement, radiant) ✦ Encounter | |
| Attack: Close blast 3 (enemies in the blast); +6 vs. Reflex | |
| Hit: 1d8 + 5 radiant damage. | |
| Effect: Allies in the blast gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls until the end of Cadra's next turn. | |
| Minor Actions | |
| Healing Word (healing) ✦ 2/Encounter | |
| Effect: Close burst 5 (Cadra or one ally in the burst). The target spends a healing surge. | |
| Dwarven Resilience ✦ Encounter | |
| Effect: Cadra uses her second wind. | |
| Skills Dungeoneering +10, Endurance +11, Heal +10 | |

| Alignment lawful good Languages Common, Dwarven | |
| Equipment scale armor, warhammer, 2 throwing hammers, holy symbol, adventurer's kit | |

More than anything, Cadra hopes to leave a mark on the world, as Moradin commands. How she will do so has not yet revealed itself. She believes the adventurer's life is the surest way to achieve this end. She has worked with other groups before, and each association ended badly. Her abrasive personality could be to blame.

Ghesh

Mercenary Captain

A veteran officer from a disbanded mercenary company, Ghesh is now a sword-for-hire, selling his services to anyone who pays him the highest price.

Ghesh cuts an impressive figure. He's tall, muscled, and covered in glittering bronze scales. He keeps his equipment in impeccable condition, cleaning and oiling his mail and spear every night before bedding down.

Command comes easy to Ghesh, and he's not one to keep his opinions to himself. He believes his battlefield experience gives him the wisdom to advise his comrades in all things, from the way they grip their weapons to the tactics they use in combat. Some people find Ghesh domineering, though none deny his expertise.

FOR THE DM: USING THE SAMPLE HENCHMEN

The henchmen included here are set at 2nd level. Use the rules in Dungeon Master's Guide 2 to increase the level as needed. The descriptive elements give you enough to get started with these characters, but don't feel bound by them. Alter them as needed. Finally, be sure to give the character a secret to help ground the character in the campaign.

EMRAH ELMASLI

Rook

Shadowy Killer

Rook is the quintessential product of the drow city Erelhei-Cinlu. On its treacherous streets, Rook learned to survive by any means he had, cultivating his natural talents and his knack for knifework to carve a path to freedom. With the city years behind him, Rook has become an assassin who asks no questions and does the job with a professional detachment.

Not especially tall and rather spare of frame, Rook conceals himself with a hooded gray cloak and dark clothing. He fights with blades and crossbow from hidden positions to take his enemies by surprise. He regards every situation as a potentially violent one, so he keeps to himself when not on a mission.

Rook makes no apologies for who he is and what he does. He is a pragmatist and never hesitates to do what it takes to get the job done. Rook does not make friends. Instead, he takes clients. Every arrangement is a business agreement, and he expects payment for the work he does.

Appendix 2: Magic Item Stories

In fantasy fiction, the protagonists often acquire enchanted objects that move the story forward. In some campaigns, however, magic items are often irrelevant to the plot, tending only to improve characters' mechanical abilities.

Yet even the lowliest magic items are created for a purpose. Artisans do not labor to craft an item of exceptional quality without intending for it to accomplish something extraordinary. Every magic item, even a +1 magic dagger, has a story, whether or not the party ever learns it.

Although it's certainly not necessary to define the history of all the items the characters obtain, every story created for an item adds color to the campaign world and the shared experience of the DM and the players. Using the rules for adding item levels as treasure (see the sidebar), the same +1 magic dagger a character acquires at the beginning of his or her career can become the world-renowned weapon he or she wields as part of his or her epic destiny. Such an item deserves a story.

The following lists present some sample story hooks and details that you can add to standard magic items to provide adventure ideas or to inspire a quest. You can also create your own hooks customized to your campaign setting.

SAMPLE STORY HOOKS

| The item was or is . . . |
|---|
| 1. Stolen from a king's treasury |
| 2. Owned by a priest who sold his soul to devils |
| 3. Found in the severed hand of its former owner |
| 4. Inherited from a friend or a stranger |
| 5. Once the property of a mighty war chief |
| 6. Created to prevent a war; started one instead |
| 7. A gift between lovers—a token of affection |
| 8. The triumphant life's work of an amateur crafter |
| 9. Sought after by powerful evil creatures |
| 10. Created by a god |
| 11. The container for a soul |
| 12. One of a pair that seek to be reunited |
| 13. Extraordinarily lucky or unlucky for its bearer |
| 14. Made on another plane of existence |
| 15. Once used to defeat a supremely powerful foe |
| 16. Under constant surveillance by otherworldly beings |
| 17. Occasionally wet with blood or tears |
| 18. Part of a rare series of items crafted by a fabled smith |
| 19. Owned by someone who is now a jealous ghost |
| 20. Prophesied to cause either disaster or peace |

SAMPLE ITEM DETAILS

| The item (is) . . . |
|---|
| 1. Covered in runes viewable only by starlight |
| 2. Completely transparent |
| 3. Etched with the symbol of a devil or demon |
| 4. Inscribed with a date in the future |
| 5. Topped with a gemlike eye that watches the bearer |
| 6. Heavier than it should be |
| 7. Well used; nicks and scratches score its surface |
| 8. Well made; has been passed down over generations |
| 9. Festooned with totemic feathers or tokens |
| 10. Resonates continuously with low, unpleasant sound |
| 11. Barbed and sharp-edged |
| 12. Always looks dirty |
| 13. Seems exceptionally fragile or delicate |
| 14. Wholly or partially constructed from bone or flesh |
| 15. Gives off a faint glow that cannot be dimmed |
| 16. Exudes a fragrant or pungent odor when it is used |
| 17. Permanently bloodstained |
| 18. Inscribed with a famous name |
| 19. Recites a verse or riddle when used |
| 20. Always looks clean |

Appendix 3: Item Levels as Treasure

Sometimes a magic item enters the campaign at the correct level, but a player wants her character to hold onto that item at higher levels rather than replacing it with a newer, higher-level item. You can allow the character to invest monetary treasure in Enchant Magic Item rituals to increase the item's power. Or, alternatively, item level increases can be given out as treasure.

Item levels granted as treasure follow the same guidelines as normal magic item placement. An increase in an item's enhancement bonus should be given out only when the characters have attained an appropriate level to earn magic items with the improved bonus.

MAGIC ITEM SCALING

| Item Level | Enhancement Bonus |
|---|---|
| 1-5 | +1 |
| 6-10 | +2 |
| 11-15 | +3 |
| 16-20 | +4 |
| 21-25 | +5 |
| 26-30 | +6 |

The value of an item's enhancement bonus increase equals the difference in cost between the item's lower-level form and its higher-level form. This value should be primarily subtracted from the magic items given out in an adventure, with only a small portion coming from gold or other monetary treasure.

For example, a character who has +1 delver's armor wants to increase the effectiveness of that armor rather than seek another set of more powerful armor. According to the table, that character should be of a level suitable for using 6th-level items before such an increase can occur. The difference in cost between +1 delver's armor and +2 delver's armor in the Player's Handbook is 2,720 gp—roughly the cost of a 7th-level magic item (2,600 gp). The item level can thus replace a 7th-level item normally placed as treasure, with the additional 120 gp taken out of monetary treasure. Likewise, the increase in the armor's enhancement bonus could partially take the place of an 8th-level treasure (worth 3,400 gp), with the difference (680 gp) made up by a 3rd-level magic item of use to the party.

This system can even be used to turn mundane items into magic items. A character's nonmagical heirloom longsword might be empowered by exposure to magic or a heroic deed to become a signature magic weapon.

Appendix 4: Item Lists

The following section contains master lists for all the magic items in Mordenkainen's Magnificent Emporium. Items are sorted by level, by rarity (common, uncommon, or rare), and by type. Each level header indicates the price of items of that level. Each entry includes the page number on which the item can be found. Weapons and armor entries include information about the category of each item. Common items sell for 20 percent of their purchase value, while uncommon items sell for 50 percent of their purchase value. Rare items are highly prized, and sell for their full purchase value.

Equip Your Heroes with the Best

Few wizards know more about magic than the mighty Mordenkainen, whose arcane achievements are without peer. He's the Archmage of Adventure . . . and no stranger to unearthing hidden lore. Stand aside, Tenser! Back to the books, Otiluke! No one can match Mordenkainen's collection of magic items. Still, he hardly seems the type to settle down and open a magic shop. And yet . . .

Welcome to Mordenkainen's Magnificent Emporium™, a wondrous collection of magic items—each one with a story to tell. This tome provides Dungeon Masters with an assortment of treasures to tempt adventurers, and it supplies players with an arsenal to take on the most dangerous monsters. This book adds stories and adventure possibilities to the treasures presented within, setting these items apart from run-of-the-mill adventuring gear. Hold on to your magic hats—everything must go!

Building on the design of previous editions by E. Gary Gygax and Dave Arneson (1st Edition and earlier); David "Zeb" Cook (2nd Edition); Jonathan Tweet, Monte Cook Skip Williams, Richard Baker, and Peter Adkison (3rd Edition).

This book is also built from the bones of giants. From the initial planar visions of Gary Gygax and Dave Sutherland, through the original, inspiring Manual of the Planes by Jeff Grubb, with its contributions by Roger Moore and Ed Greenwood, to the vibrant Planescape® work of David Cook, Colin McComb, Michele Carter, and Monte Cook, the planes have been an ever-evolving cosmology. Other resources for this work include the 3rd Edition Manual of the Planes by Jeff Grubb, Bruce R. Cordell, and David Noonan; Fiendish Codex I: Hordes of the Abyss™ by Ed Stark, James Jacobs, and Erik Mona; and Fiendish Codex II: Tyrants of the Nine Hells™ by Robin D. Laws and Robert J. Schwalb.

Exploring the Planes

Beyond the circles of the world await peril, power, and adventure unimagined. Fomorians brood in the purple gloom of caverns illuminated by dancing auras of wizard's fire. Titanic stone sphinxes half buried in white sand guard the gates of a forgotten deity's ruined heaven. Hooded sorrowsworn assassins glide silently through the streets of a city perpetually veiled in shadows. Demon princes brood on thrones of skulls in the terrible depths of the Abyss, plotting the destruction of the mortal realms and the ruin of all.

Welcome to the planes.

Great heroes face quests that require them to venture into the far corners of the cosmos in search of lore and treasure forgotten in the mortal realms. The boldest heroes are called to fight their battles across many different planes of existence, and venture into dimensions where few mortals have ever dared to go. Other heroes venture into the planes for nothing more than the desire to see wonders unimagined. To those who have studied their secrets, the planes offer infinite experiences and possibilities.

This chapter explains the basics of venturing into the planes, including:

- Planar Traits: The different qualities and characteristics that planes demonstrate.
- The Cosmology: How the components of the D&D® game universe fit together.
- Portals: Portals are the most common means of planar travel. Here's how they work.
- Planar Vehicles: When you can't find a portal leading to where you want to go, you have to find a different means of transportation.
- Planar Hazards: Learn about some of the more common hazards planar travelers face.
- Sigil, City of Doors: The most well-known demiplane is Sigil, City of Doors. No one knows who created it or how, but Sigil holds portals aplenty.
- The Far Realm: The Far Realm is "beyond" or "above" the normal cosmos.
- The Plane of Dreams: The nature of this plane is a matter for debate. The Plane of Dreams is a vast repository where dreams go when they are dreamt.

THE PLANES AND YOUR CAMPAIGN

The world (sometimes called the mortal world or the natural world) of the DUNGEONS & DRAGONS® game is only one piece of a much larger cosmos. The world is surrounded by the Feywild and the Shadowfell, parallel dimensions that lie tantalizingly close at hand. It stands on foundations of matter drawn from the seething Elemental Chaos that preceded creation. And yet, at the same time, the mortal world drifts as a lonely speck of light and life in the eternal expanse of the astral mists. All these realities that exist beyond the world of mortals are known as the planes of existence—or just "the planes" for those who come to know them well.

A plane is an alternate reality, an otherworld that exists alongside the world of mortals. Some planes are small, no larger than a city of the mortal realm. Other planes are nearly infinite in expanse. The planes are a place where you can create literally any adventure or story you can imagine. Given the incredible possibilities the planes open up for your D&D campaign, it's a good idea for a Dungeon Master to decide exactly how he or she wants to use the material presented in Manual of the Planes. Here are a few suggestions.

THE ORIGIN OF MONSTERS

The simplest way to incorporate planar material in your campaign is to treat the planes as "the places where the most exotic monsters are from." Even at low levels, heroes might encounter creatures native to other planes, such as the fey panther, the magma claw, or the spined devil. At higher levels, heroes encounter progressively more powerful planar beings abroad in the mortal world—beings such as vrocks, efreets, or sorrowsworn. Each is clearly an outsider, a creature that does not arise within the natural order.

Some planar creatures are permanent residents of the mortal world. Other planar creatures may be summoned by mortals for sinister purposes, or may intrude in the world by venturing through portals the heroes must close.

THE EXOTIC ADVENTURE

An exotic adventure is the most common model for planar campaigns. Many Dungeon Masters treat the planes as exotic locales that, on rare occasions, serve as the backdrop for otherwise normal adventures. Rather than exploring a dead archmage's ruined tower on a lonely hilltop a few miles outside town, the player characters explore a similar tower on the slopes of a mountain in the Feywild or drifting on an earthmote in the Elemental Chaos.

To make an otherwise world-bound adventure into a planar adventure, all you (the DM) need to do is provide a portal, a scroll with the right ritual, or a magic item to convey the player characters from their native world to the site of the adventure. Ideally, the adventure should soak up at least some of the planar flavor of its setting.

THE PLANAR PROGRESSION

Some campaigns follow adventure arcs that naturally introduce the player characters to ever-greater vistas of the cosmos as they rise in level. Player characters must learn how to successfully venture into these otherworlds to confront monsters and villains, to unearth lore, or to recover treasures that can be found only beyond the circles of the world.

In the beginning of their adventuring careers, player characters face the occasional monster from another plane. Once they've earned a few levels, they meet challenges that lie in fantastic locales just on the other side of mysterious portals, or find that their missions take them into the planes that lie closest to the world—the Feywild and the Shadowfell. Paragon and epic adventures hurl the heroes into the vastness of the Elemental Chaos or into the astral dominions of immortal powers. Learning how to reach the object of a quest, to competently navigate the vastness of the cosmology, and to deal with the supernatural perils of distant planes are adventures in and of themselves.

THE EXTRAPLANAR CAMPAIGN

Some cities or strongholds of mortalkind exist outside the mortal world—for example, the eladrin realms of the Feywild, the shadowborn city of Gloomwrought, or Sigil, the legendary City of Doors. Many great heroes are natives of planes beyond the mortal world. Much as world-bound heroes might journey widely from city to city or kingdom to kingdom, extraplanar heroes travel from plane to plane as their own whims and purposes demand. Using knowledge of the universe's portals, rifts, and fundamental properties, even low-level characters can get to any place imaginable—although plenty of planes are so hostile or dangerous that no well-informed extraplanar character in his or her right mind would voluntarily venture there.

The best place for you to set a truly extraplanar campaign is Sigil. Planar-born player characters (natives to the planes) can get to any place imaginable through its myriad portals—even someplace as strange and unfathomable (to the planar-born, at least) as the mundane world. Or, you could also set your extraplanar campaign aboard a planar vessel such as a spelljammer, visiting new worlds with each adventure.

CHARACTERISTICS OF PLANES

Most planes are much like the natural world. Mortal visitors find the air breathable, the climate endurable, and some amount of food and water accessible. However, each plane has its own unusual characteristics and embodies its own particular set of natural laws.

Types of Planes

A plane's type describes its basic nature and place in the cosmos. The term "plane" applies to many different places. Sigil, City of Doors, is a plane, even though it's no more than a few dozen miles in extent. It drifts in the multiverse unconnected to any other physical reality. The Abyss is also a plane. It is many thousands of miles in extent, large enough to swallow planets, but it's only a finite region of the Elemental Chaos. A traveler can walk (or more likely fall) into the Abyss from the surrounding Elemental Chaos, but a different set of physical and metaphysical laws apply in the Abyss than in the Elemental Chaos. In that sense, the Abyss is a plane separate from the surrounding Elemental Chaos.

PLANAR TYPE

- The world
- Fundamental planes
- Astral dominions
- Elemental realms
- Parallel planes
- Demiplanes
- Anomalous planes

The World

The first of the planes is the world in which humans and other mortals are born and have their existence. The world often is known only by its name. For example, the sages of Faerûn call their world Abeir-Toril. Those who study such matters in the city of Greyhawk know their world as Oerth, and the sages of Ansalon know their world as Krynn. In reference to the planes, the world is sometimes known as "the mortal world," "the material world," "the natural world," or "the middle world," to distinguish it from the supernatural realms surrounding it.

Fundamental Planes

The cosmos is composed largely of two infinite expanses from which all other planes formed: the Astral Sea and the Elemental Chaos. These planes are levels of reality in which countless specific locales exist like finite islands adrift in the infinite—the various astral dominions and elemental realms.

The fundamental planes provide the substance linking all the dominions and realms of deities and elemental powers together. To reach these specific places, a traveler must trek across the Astral Sea or the Elemental Chaos. Fortunately, planar portals and conduits make it possible to span vast distances with a single step—if a traveler knows where to find the portal he or she needs.

Although the fundamental planes are infinite, the known astral dominions and elemental realms lie within a finite distance of each other. If a traveler journeys through a fundamental plane into the trackless reaches outside the known dominions and realms, sooner or later he or she comes to the divine dominions or elemental kingdoms of different mortal worlds. Such a journey would be unthinkably long, and it would undoubtedly be easier to find or create a portal to reach them.

Astral Dominions

The astral dominions are distinct planes that exist within the Astral Sea. Most are the creations of deities, and as such, each dominion reflects the aesthetics (or whims) of its creator. Dominions may have wildly different properties and characteristics. Some are the size of worlds, whereas others are solitary towers or small cities on the shores of the Astral Sea. In artwork and in literature, they are often depicted as majestic islands or floating shards of landscape surrounded by a gossamer sea as flat and smooth as mirrored glass.

Astral dominions are commonly regarded as the heavens and hells of the mortal world. The dominions are where most deities are enthroned. Deities claim some mortal spirits after death—those chosen for special reward, or trapped and tormented by devils or dark deities. However, most mortal spirits pass through the realm of the Raven Queen in the Shadowfell after death and then into the eternal beyond.

Elemental Realms

Within the Elemental Chaos lie countless elemental realms—domains where some powerful being has claimed a portion of the chaos and shaped it with will and purpose. Like astral dominions, elemental realms reflect the whims of those beings that create them. In artwork and literature, elemental realms are often portrayed as crude stone bergs and mighty structures floating in a churning sea of elements.

Although many elemental realms are the work of powerful elementals—for example, the efreet City of Brass—other realms are created by mighty mortals. Anyone of strong will and magical power can create anything he or she likes within the Elemental Chaos, and set a boundary around these creations in which the physical traits the creator prefers dominate. Scores of archmage towers, assassin strongholds, and mighty monuments lie scattered through the Elemental Chaos that were created by mortals centuries or millennia ago. Some still remain much as they were when they were made, whereas new masters have occupied others.

Parallel Planes

Close by the mortal world lie its echoes, the parallel planes: the Feywild and the Shadowfell. Parallel planes are strange copies of the material world. Where seas and mountains lie in the world, similar seas and mountains exist in these parallel planes. Yet they are not perfect copies. A thriving human city in the mortal world might be a forested vale in the Feywild and a haunted ruin in the Shadowfell. It seems that the Feywild's version of a locale in the natural world is a pristine memory of what that place was like in the youth of the world, whereas the Shadowfell's version shows a vision of how that same spot will look when its people pass away and it falls into ruin.

Although some natural features vary between these planes, the biggest differences between them are the structures of sentient creatures. The kingdoms and castles of the eladrin are not replicated in the mortal world or the Shadowfell. Similarly, the city of Gloomwrought exists only in the Shadowfell, and no city stands in the corresponding spot in either the mortal world or the Feywild.

Demiplanes

The last regular type of plane is a demiplane—a unique place where anything might be encountered. Like astral dominions or elemental realms, demiplanes are things created by some power or agency after the formation of the world. They are not part of either the Astral Sea or the Elemental Chaos, but instead exist as bubbles of existence beyond the normal bounds of the cosmos.

Most demiplanes are small and secret. They're created to be refuges, vaults, or more rarely tombs or prisons. It takes extremely powerful magic to create something out of nothing. It's much easier to build a sanctuary in the Elemental Chaos than to create a secret plane of your own outside the bounds of the universe.

The most well known demiplane is Sigil, City of Doors. No one knows who created it or how, but Sigil holds portals uncounted that lead to every other plane of existence. Veteran planar explorers soon learn that Sigil is the first place to look when a door to somewhere else is needed.

Anomalous Planes

The cosmology includes some planes whose exact nature is not clear. These include the Far Realm, the Plane of Dreams, the Plane of Mirrors, and other mortal worlds. Anomalous planes stretch the boundaries of an already fantastic cosmology. They are the weirdest of the weird. They are conceived of as beyond the normal cosmology of planes (even more "outside" than demiplanes), being created from the dreams of all mortals, existing on the other side of mirrors, or built on other mind-straining concepts. Adventures rarely present themselves in these locations, as anomalous planes are genuinely inhospitable to most outsiders. However, denizens of anomalous planes often find their way into the world.

Planar Structure and Laws

The most basic question about a plane is its size. Is it infinite, or is it finite? If the plane is finite, how big is it?

The Astral Sea and Elemental Chaos are infinite. The mortal world (and therefore the parallel planes, too) may be infinite or it may not be. It depends on if one considers the vast starry void beyond the skies of the mortal world to be part of the world or if the stars are merely lights suspended inside a vast but finite crystal sphere.

PLANAR STRUCTURE AND LAWS

- Layers
- Bounded or recursive shape
- Gravity
- Mutability

Layers

Some astral dominions and elemental realms are organized into layers. These layers are distinct, geographically separate regions or domains. A layer is a subplane, and often has its own distinct flora, fauna, and features. However, the overall properties of a plane remain true no matter which layer of a plane a traveler ventures into. For example, the Abyss consists of hundreds of distinct island-continents of matter within the bounds of a single elemental realm. Many of these are the domains of individual demon lords, who create in their own layers conditions they find pleasing.

Most rituals of planar travel, portals, and conduits deposit travelers in a plane's outermost layer first. From that region, travelers must find their way into the deeper layers of the plane. Portals, or difficult roads or pathways that are often guarded, link the different layers of a plane. For example, most portals to the Abyss from elsewhere open into the first layer, the Plain of a Thousand Portals. From there, travelers can find other portals leading to deeper layers. They could conceivably fly or fall from one Abyssal layer to another through the vast, storm-wracked gulf of air, energy, and matter the Abyssal layers drift through, but the distances between them are vast, and the journey is unspeakably dangerous. Even demons prefer to use portals to move around from layer to layer.

Bounded or Recursive Shape

Does the plane have an edge that you can reach, or do you return to the same spot by traveling in a straight line? The surface of the mortal world is recursive, because it's a sphere. Sigil is a recursive demiplane. The city fills the interior of a torus, so a traveler can't help but circle back to where he started by continuing in a straight line. On the other hand, a plane such as Hestavar or Arvandor is bounded. Travel far enough, and eventually you reach the edge—the shores of the Astral Sea, whatever form that takes in that plane.

Gravity

Gravity works normally on the vast majority of planes. A few planes manifest one of two exceptional types of gravity: elemental buoyancy and subjective gravity.

Normal gravity is, well, normal. It acts as one would expect in the mortal world.

Elemental buoyancy is strange: Objects and materials native to the plane aren't subject to the force of gravity, but creatures and nonnative objects are. The Elemental Chaos experiences this type of gravity. Gigantic earthmotes, drifting boulders, and flowing seas arc through the "skies" and do not fall because they're held aloft by their elemental buoyancy in the plane's natural stratification. You can pick up a rock and "hang" it in the air in front of you, and the rock floats there indefinitely. However, living creatures and their possessions are subject to "normal" gravity, and they can and do can easily fall off floating earthmotes or plummet into fiery chasms.

STEVE ELLIS

Subjective gravity is a property of the Astral Sea and the Far Realm. If a traveler is standing on or in something he or she wishes to exert gravity on him or her, it does so. In other words, if you want to stand on it, you can.

Gravity remains in force even if the traveler leaps into the air or flies—as long as the traveler wants it to. Unattended objects do not experience gravity. Attended objects are subject to a traveler's will. If you drop something and want it to fall, it does—but you can't "will it" to "fall" back to you.

In the absence of gravity (in other words, when you don't want to be affected by it), a creature can fly through a plane of subjective gravity by exercising its will. This mode of movement is slow, however.

SUBJECTIVE GRAVITY

On a plane that has subjective gravity, you can choose whether gravity affects you.

- You can stand on any surface equal to your space (1 square for most characters) or larger than your space.
- You gain the ability to fly at one-half your normal speed if not under the effect of gravity. You can hover, but you are a clumsy flier.
- A creature with the ability to fly can use its innate flying speed instead. It gains hover.

Mutability

One of the fundamental laws of nature in the mortal world is that things remain where they are and how they are unless some force works on them. Boulders don't spontaneously change to sand or melt into water unless something causes them to. Some planes are not so reliable.

Divinely mutable planes assume the form willed by deities (or other powerful beings) who own the plane. The deity of the plane can cause great palaces to appear from nowhere, create or replace terrain, change the form of creatures native to the plane, or alter the weather with a mere thought. Normal mutability (defined as mortal inertia and constancy) applies otherwise. Most astral dominions are divinely mutable, although in cases where several deities share the same dominion, they exercise control over only their specific realms within the plane.

Unstable planes feature terrain and elements that change continuously and randomly. The Elemental Chaos is the prime example. Although vast stretches are relatively calm for long periods of time, change is inevitable. A great frozen sea might remain that way for centuries, only to shatter when an outburst of magma comes into being in its center and begins to grow into a range of volcanic mountains.

INFLUENCE UNSTABLE PLANE (INTELLIGENCE)

Someone with a powerful will or armed with the right ritual can stabilize a portion of an unstable plane and hold it in the desired shape. The only questions are how long it takes to impose stability and how long the stability lasts once the being creating the stability stops concentrating. It's easy to freeze existing conditions in place, but much harder to impose entirely different conditions in an area.

Move Object: Standard action.

- DC: The DC is based on the object's size—Tiny or smaller, DC 5; Small or Medium, DC 10; Large, DC 15; Huge, DC 20; Gargantuan, DC 25.
- Success: You move an unattended object. You move the object 1 square, +1 square for every 5 points by which you beat the DC.
- Failure: You can't try to move the same object until after a short rest.

Alter Object: Standard action.

- DC: The DC is based on the object's size—Tiny or smaller, DC 20; Small or Medium, DC 25; Large, DC 30; Huge, DC 35; Gargantuan, DC 40.
- Success: You change an unattended natural object into a different element or energy of the same size. For example, change a boulder into a ball of fire.
- Failure: You can't try to alter the same object until after a short rest.

Stabilize Area: 1 minute.

- DC: The DC is 5 + 1 per square affected.
- Success: You lock an area into its current form for 24 hours. Double the area or the duration for every 5 points you beat the DC by.
- Failure: You can't try to stabilize an area until after an extended rest.

Alter Area: 1 minute.

- DC: The DC is 20 + 1 per square affected. Add +10 to the DC if the area has been stabilized (see above). Double the area or the duration for every 5 points by which you beat the DC.
- Success: You change the terrain of an area for 24 hours. For example, change a bare rocky plain into a forest.
- Failure: You can't try to alter an area until after an extended rest.

Planar Traits

Some planes possess magical or metaphysical qualities that affect the powers and abilities of creatures. For example, the City of Brass lies in a fiery portion of the Elemental Chaos, and within this particular dominion characters find that powers with the fire keyword are enhanced, while cold powers in the city of the efreet are diminished.

Large planes rarely have planar traits that affect their entirety. Planar traits usually manifest in specific locations within a larger plane (such as a particular dominion within the Astral Sea or a particular realm within the Elemental Chaos). For example, the characters might stumble upon a forest in the Feywild that heightens one's powers of inveiglement, and all creatures in the forest gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls when they use powers with the charm or illusion keyword.

Psychic Signature

Planes other than the natural world possess a certain otherworldly quality. A mortal wandering the forests of Arvandor can sense that he or she is no longer in the natural world. Planar explorers can't always tell exactly where in the cosmos they are, but they can sense when they've passed from one plane to another. This phenomenon is known as a plane's psychic signature. Psychic signature has no other mechanical effect, although the impressions can be strong.

For example, a feeling of gloom permeates the Shadowfell. The Shadowfell's atmosphere is oppressive, and it deadens the spirits of its inhabitants. A feeling of malaise slowly creeps over the visitor, deadening the spirit. On the other hand, the Feywild seems charged with some magical quality that sharpens the senses and intensifies the experience of being there. This intensification is enchanting in a pleasant place, but in the darker locales in the Feywild it magnifies the sense of danger and excitement as if such places were waiting in suspense for something wild and sinister to happen.

Astral dominions are marked by a sort of emotional relativity in which the viewer's emotional state colors things he or she sees, hears, and feels. When the viewer is calm and familiar with what he or she is looking at, things seem supernaturally clear and obvious. When the viewer is fearful or angry, things take on a dark, confusing overtone. When the viewer is resolved, he or she sees things as he or she is determined to see them—so a devil's insidious lies seem obvious to someone determined to resist them. However, when the viewer is wrongly resolved and stubbornly clings to a mistaken impression, the "truth" of his or her position seems just as obvious.

Elemental realms possess a psychic signature of mass and changeableness. Physical objects feel heavier and seem bigger, even though they aren't really. At the same time, objects appear to move as the viewer expects them to move, as if the viewer's will is what causes the flow of a river or the drifting of earthmotes in the sky. The sensation is nothing more than a strange sort of déjà vu, and it has no real effect other than bemusing those unfamiliar with the Elemental Chaos and its domains.

The World Axis Cosmology

Although various campaign settings may have their own arrangement of planes, the default planar structure of the D&D game is the World Axis cosmology. The World Axis cosmology is so named because the mortal world and its parallel planes form an axis or pivot point linking the two great infinite planes—the Astral Sea and the Elemental Chaos. The world is therefore the fulcrum where elemental forces and divine forces meet. This model provides a mix of benign, strange, wondrous, and sinister planes you can use in your game without the necessity of designing your own unique cosmology.

The World Axis cosmos consists of a core of five planes that have their own discrete existence, plus scores of dominions or realms that are features or locales of another plane. The planes are:

The World: The mortal plane of existence is the natural world. This world may be Abeir-Toril, Athas, Eberron, Krynn, Oerth, or a world of your own devising. This plane also encompasses the space between worlds.

Parallel Planes: Inextricably linked to the natural world are two parallel planes: the Feywild (or Plane of Faerie) and the Shadowfell (or Plane of Shadow). They are the closest of the planes to the mortal world.

Fundamental Planes: The mortal world and its parallel planes exist between two great infinite expanses—the Astral Sea and the Elemental Chaos. The Astral Sea is dotted with smaller planes called astral dominions, the Elemental Chaos with elemental realms.

Astral Dominions: All astral dominions are clearly delineated from the surrounding fundamental plane. These are planes in every sense of the term. Some are the domains of deities. Others were abandoned or had their inhabitants and structures destroyed long ago. Major astral dominions include:

- Arvandor, the Verdant Isles
- Carceri, the Red Prison
- Celestia, the Radiant Throne
- Chernoggar, the Iron Fortress
- Hestavar, the Bright City
- Kalandurren, the Darkened Pillars
- The Nine Hells of Baator
- Pandemonium, the Howling Depths
- Pluton, the Gray Waste
- The White Desert of Shom
- Tu'narath, City of the Githyanki
- Tytherion, the Endless Night

Elemental Realms: In the vastness of the Elemental Chaos lie scores of elemental realms. Some of these, such as the Abyss, are differentiated enough from the surrounding elemental maelstrom to be planes within a plane. Others are specific locales within the chaos. Major elemental realms include:

- The Abyss
- The City of Brass
- The Ninth Bastion
- Zerthadlun

Demiplanes: Demiplanes are places that exist outside the fundamental planes. Each was created by artifice at some point in the past, since they do not naturally occur. Many demiplanes exist, but only a few are known by more than a handful of individuals. The most famous demiplane is Sigil, City of Doors.

Anomalous Planes: Finally, the cosmology includes some planes whose exact nature is not clear. Major anomalous planes include:

- The Far Realm
- The Plane of Dreams

Customizing the Cosmology

The World Axis cosmology only represents one of many possible planar arrangements for a D&D campaign. It's the default setting, and all upcoming 4th Edition Dungeons & Dragons game products assume that the World Axis cosmology is the one you're using in your campaign. However, you can create your own cosmology for your campaign.

We recommend leaving the parallel planes and fundamental planes in place. Many spells, effects, and monsters are tied to the Astral Sea, Elemental Chaos, Feywild, and Shadowfell. If you eliminate these "structure" planes, you may create gaps in the game rules. For example, if you get rid of the Shadowfell or greatly alter it, the Shadow Walk ritual would have to be changed, too. Relatively minor alterations are possible. If you don't want a goddess of death on your plane of shadow, you can remove the Raven Queen and her palace of Letherna, and move a similar deity of death to the astral dominions. It won't interfere with any rules operations in the game.

When considering your cosmology, make sure you address the following:

- A place for good-aligned deities, angels, and immortals to come from.
- A place for devils and evil-aligned deities or angels to come from.
- A place for demons and elemental creatures to come from.
- A place for fey creatures to come from.
- A place for shadow creatures to come from.
- A way of getting from one plane to another.
- A way for spells or effects referring to astral, elemental, fey, or shadow planes or creatures to function.

One of the simplest adjustments to the cosmology is substituting the deities of the core pantheon for the deities of a specific campaign world. For example, you can remove Bane from Chernoggar and replace him with Tuern the Merciless, the god of war in your own home campaign.

The next step up in difficulty is adding or deleting specific astral dominions and elemental realms. The exact number, name, and inhabitants of the various astral dominions can be switched out to reflect the Dungeon Master's campaign preferences. This customization leaves the fundamental planes and parallel planes intact, so planar travel works pretty much as it does in the core cosmology. As an example, you could add the plane of Ysgard (or Asgard) and several of the ancient Norse deities to your cosmology. If Thor replaces Kord in your game—or even exists as a rival or ally of Kord—everything still works just fine.

If you are ambitious, you can overhaul the basic planar structure. In your game, the Elemental Chaos may not exist, and all elemental creatures come from the natural world. In your game, perhaps, all the astral dominions and major elemental realms are parallel planes. Therefore, venturing to the domains of deities is a matter of finding the correct "echo" of the mortal world.

NAVIGATING THE PLANES

Although many places in the planes are impossibly distant from the mortal world, the mortal world is riddled with rifts in the fabric of reality and hidden planar doorways. Volcanoes in the mortal world spew magma and burning ash from fiery seas within the Elemental Chaos. Rune-graven doors of iron protect gates leading to the Nine Hells. Mystic archways forgotten in ruined temples lead to the dominions of the gods themselves. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of doors to these infinite realms lie scattered across the world.

Although the means may vary, the methods of planar travel fall into one of several broad types: portals, rituals, vessels, and phenomena.

Portals

A portal is a door or conduit created by powerful magic that links two distant points. In a way, portals are like backdoors in the universe, allowing a traveler to bypass the obstacles of distance and boundaries by stepping through. Permanent portals are often called gates, but they are few and far between. Many portals lead to destinations within the same plane, providing an expeditious means of covering vast distances. Others lead travelers to wondrous realms such as the Feywild, the Shadowfell, and even astral dominions. Rare and hidden portals may lead to places beyond the cosmology, depositing travelers in the Far Realm or on alternate natural worlds. Portals can also access demiplanes such as the city of Sigil, the sanctums of archmages, domains of demigods, or dimensional vaults created to hold unspeakable entities.

Portals are curiosities. They stand in defiance to the natural order of things. It's within the power of mortals to construct new portals, but short of the most powerful rituals, created portals are fleeting things, consuming vast amounts of magic and requiring arcane mastery to sustain. Thus, permanent portals are subjects of much heated debate between scholars and sages, and theories abound about their origins and purpose.

One of the most common beliefs about independent permanent portals is that they are the natural products of an incomplete and flawed creation. As the primordials gathered the protomatter that would become creation, the protomatter clumps held gaps and fissures—holes worming through the work and leading to unexpected places. Another theory suggests the portals are remnants of the ancient wars between the primordials and deities, reflecting a universe damaged by their catastrophic struggle. Some portals may have been created by upheavals in the natural order as primordials died or were imprisoned and sealed away for all time. Other possibilities exist, many of which are upheld by different philosophies found throughout the planes. For example, the Doomguard (see page 141) believe the planes are in a state of decay, and that independent permanent portals are either the cause or the result of this march toward oblivion.

Moving Around the Planes

Here's a quick overview of the most common methods for traveling from the world to different planes.

Portal: A portal is a magical doorway that instantly teleports the user somewhere else. Portals might go anywhere, and many require specific keys or actions in order to function. A portal is the easiest way to get to another plane, but you have to find a working portal that goes where you want to go.

Crossing: A crossing is a place where the veil between the worlds is thin. Crossings lead to the Feywild, the Shadowfell, and other parallel planes. Crossings sometimes activate and function much like portals leading to corresponding points on the parallel planes. They also mark places where travelers can use passage rituals to reach the parallel planes.

Worldfall: Large areas of the Feywild—for example, certain eladrin cities—sometimes shift to the natural world or back again. A traveler in the area of a worldfall is carried along when the area shifts to the other plane.

Passage Rituals: If you're at a crossing to the Feywild or Shadowfell, the ritual Fey Passage or Shadow Passage can transport you into the parallel plane. Passage rituals are easy ways to move to another plane, but are limited because you need to find a suitable crossing point first.

Transfer Rituals: The ritual Astral Sojourn or Elemental Transference shifts a traveler to a random point in the Astral Sea or Elemental Chaos. You don't need any kind of crossing point. If you have to find something lost or hidden in the Astral Sea or the Elemental Chaos, you might need to use a transfer ritual.

Teleport Rituals: The rituals Planar Portal and True Portal create short-lived teleportation circles that can take travelers to specific locations on other planes. If you know exactly where you're going and you have the sigil sequence to get there, a teleport ritual is the fastest way to get there.

Planar Vessel: Magical ships such as planar dromonds or spelljammers have the ability to serve as navigation foci for the Plane Shift ritual. The Plane Shift ritual is a comparatively easy ritual that shifts the vessel and all its occupants into another plane.

THE GREAT WHEEL

An example of an alternative cosmology is the Great Wheel used in earlier editions of the D&D game. This cosmology featured the following planes:

Material Plane: The mortal world.

Astral Plane: This fundamental plane is much like the Astral Sea. The Astral Plane links the Material Plane to the Outer Planes.

Plane of Shadow: This plane, parallel to the Material Plane, is essentially the same as the Shadowfell.

Plane of Faerie: This plane is the Feywild. It exists in parallel to the Material Plane in this cosmology.

Ethereal Plane: This plane combines some features of parallel planes and some features of fundamental planes. It is infinite in scope, and links the Material Plane to the Inner Planes (or elemental planes). Characters and creatures in the border regions of the Ethereal Plane are in a parallel plane. They can still perceive the Material Plane. Ethereal creatures are invisible and insubstantial to Material Plane creatures, and they can phase through Material Plane objects. The Deep Ethereal is a fundamental plane of endless gray mist that can be shaped into various demiplanes.

The Ethereal Plane is the most difficult part of this cosmology, because it's a new fundamental plane that no game effects refer to in the rules. Various powers or magic items may confer temporary etherealness, and rituals can shift travelers into the Deep Ethereal to journey to the Inner Planes.

Six Inner (Elemental) Planes: In the Great Wheel cosmology, the Elemental Chaos does not exist. Instead, the Planes of Air, Earth, Fire, and Water are all separate from each other. In addition, the Positive Energy Plane and Negative Energy Plane embody the power of light, radiance, and life on the one hand, and death, decay, darkness, and the void on the other. All these planes are infinite in extent and impassable (if not instantly lethal) to mortal travelers. "Pockets" of other elements intrude in these planes. For example, the Elemental Plane of Air features a few floating earthmotes, and the Elemental Plane of Fire has regions of air and earth among its endless flames.

Seventeen Outer Planes: These planes are much like astral dominions. However, each one embodies its own gradation of good, evil, law, and chaos. Each plane is infinite in extent. Some have many layers, and others have only one or two layers. Deities inhabit the Outer Planes, dwelling on the plane that most closely matches their particular ethics and morals. The Outer Planes are:

- Ysgard (Unaligned): A warlike domain, where great heroes battle giants.
- Limbo (Unaligned): Like the Elemental Chaos, Limbo is a plane where matter assumes random forms.
- Pandemonium (Chaotic Evil): As described in Chapter 5.
- The Abyss (Chaotic Evil): As described in Chapter 4, although in this cosmology the Abyss consists of layered infinite planes. The Abyss is an Outer Plane in this cosmology and is not part of the elemental planes. Demons should be treated as immortals, rather than elementals.
- Carceri (Chaotic Evil): A prison plane similar to that described in Chapter 5.
- Hades (Evil): A gloomy plane of despair and disease, like the worst parts of the Shadowfell.
- Gehenna (Evil): A plane of darkness and fire, somewhat like Tytherion (see Chapter 5).
- The Nine Hells (Evil): As described in Chapter 5.
- Acheron (Unaligned): Much like Chernoggar (see Chapter 5).
- Mechanus (Unaligned): An astral dominion of perfect law and inflexible order.
- Arcadia (Lawful Good): A peaceful kingdom somewhat like Hestavar (see Chapter 5).
- Celestia (Lawful Good): As described in Chapter 5.
- Bytopia (Lawful Good): A domain consisting of two idyllic layers, each forming the other's sky.
- Elysium (Good): A domain of golden fields, where the deserving find rest.
- The Beastlands (Good): A wilderness domain populated by wise animal like spirits and guardians.
- Arborea (Good): A forest realm similar to Arvandor (see Chapter 5).
- The Concordant Domain (Unaligned): A neutral plane influenced by all the others and populated by a smattering of folk from other planes.

Demiplanes: Sigil and the Far Realm are demiplanes in the Great Wheel cosmology. Their exact location in the cosmos is not known.

A reasonable explanation is that these theories are all correct. Persistent portals are the product of a variety of mistakes and achievements. Powerful wizards ripped open the planes to facilitate their travel, and deities themselves connected the planes to fight the primordials and their servants. Whether or not portals endanger the fragile balance of the planes is unclear. What is clear is that planar travelers find these doorways useful and seek out more of these portals so that they can use them to find new worlds to explore.

Portals have a number of characteristics to describe their destination, function, and nature. These characteristics include their appearance, transparency, frequency, access, and precision.

Appearance

A portal's appearance reflects the portal's destination. A portal leading to Sigil might be a doorway, but a portal connecting to the Elemental Chaos might look like a shimmering wall of water or a curtain of flame. Likewise, portals connecting to the Shadowfell could be hidden in black shadows, and those leading to the Feywild might be a tangle of roots or a stylized face made of vegetation.

Doors: Many persistent portals look like doors, making clear their purpose and function. Some doorways are two-dimensional rectangles of light. Such a door reveals its destination or masks it with a haze of color. When viewed from the side, it disappears, again coming into view when perceived from the other side. Other doorways are freestanding doors made of wood or iron. Some hang in the air, others rest against a solid wall, and others still stand in the center of a room or in the middle of nowhere.

Gates: A gate is a portal of considerable size that is large enough to accommodate the movement of several travelers at the same time. Gates are freestanding circular or square windows into another world, though some gates feature frames of stone or are set into a wall, ceiling, or floor.

Objects: Not all portals are obvious. Some are contained in objects, hidden behind an innocuous or sinister façade. A portal contained in an object functions when touched or handled, whereupon it transports the traveler to its destination. Portal objects are heavy, immobile structures such as mausoleums, obelisks, and statues. Although the fact that an object is a portal may not be evident, the nature of the object often provides hints about the portal's destination in its appearance. For instance, a portal to the Shadowfell might lurk inside a headstone in a graveyard. Object portals commonly activate upon being touched. However, some require the speaking of a phrase instead or in addition to being touched. Other objects require a specific action to make them work, such as making a sacrifice or performing a ceremony. A few object portals transport travelers only under special conditions, such as at a time of year.

Color Veils: Many portals found in the Astral Sea are veils of color. Color veils are specific kinds of portals that grant access to a particular astral dominion or plane. The most well-known common veils are the ones that surround each astral dominion; however, other color veils are wisps, circles, pools, or other freestanding shapes in the Astral Sea. Color veil colors correspond to a particular destination. These colors normally correspond to where a portal leads, but relying on a system of colors as a means to decipher a portal's destination has risks. Dark powers have been known to transmute the hues of color veils to lure travelers to their dooms, and others mask or re-tint a veil to ward off unwanted guests. The following table presents the normal correlation of color veil colors and planes.

COLOR VEIL COLORS BY PLANE

|---|---|
| Arvandor | Dark green |
| Carceri | Red |
| Celestia | Brilliant gold |
| Chernoggar | Red orange |
| Hestavar | Sapphire |
| Kalandurren | Pale gray |
| The Nine Hells | Swirling ruby red |
| Pandemonium | Magenta |
| Pluton | Iron gray |
| Shom | Pale blue |
| Tytherion | Indigo |
| The natural world | Silver |
| The Feywild | Emerald green |
| The Shadowfell | Black |
| Elemental Chaos | Mottled opal |
| The Abyss | Swirling dark purple |

Most color veils lead to astral dominions. In fact, finding the right color veil is the quickest way to reach a desired dominion. A traveler can reach any dominion by sailing the Astral Sea and fixing the dominion in his or her mind, but sometimes these destinations prove elusive, avoiding discovery. A color veil shortens the search and ensures a speedy arrival at the desired dominion. More rarely, a color veil in the Astral Sea leads to another plane altogether, such as the Feywild or the Abyss.

Pools: Portal pools are found in the natural world, the Feywild, and the Shadowfell. Pools do not connect to the Astral Sea or its dominions, instead providing transport between the natural world and its echoes. Portal pools look and behave like water. Like most portals, a portal pool displays its destination as a reflection off the liquid of the pool. A portal pool leading to the Feywild might be bright green and covered by a skin of algae, whereas another portal pool might be cloudy, polluted, and brackish, suggesting that it connects to the Shadowfell.

Traveling by pool is unsettling because simply touching the water isn't sufficient for travel. Instead, one swims to the bottom of the pool, whereupon the swimmer feels his or her sense of direction turn upside-down. Upon crossing that threshold, the swimmer is no longer swimming down, but rather swimming up toward the surface of the pool into the other plane.

Transparency

A portal's transparency speaks to a traveler's ability to perceive what lies beyond the threshold of the portal.

Clear: The portal provides a clear view of what's on the other side. Viewers can see to the normal extent of their vision. Some doors and gates have clear transparency.

Misty: Mist shrouds the portal, restricting vision to about 5 squares on the other side. Beyond this distance, the interference intensifies, blocking all vision. Curtains, pools, doors, and gates can all have misty transparency. Misty is the default level of transparency for portals.

Opaque: The portal allows light to travel through it but nothing else. It conceals all other details of what lies beyond. Portals leading to bright areas may also reveal shadows of objects positioned between the light source and the portal itself. Curtains and pools can be opaque.

Solid: A solid portal blocks all vision and light, masking what lies beyond. Portals contained in objects are commonly solid, though a mirror, for instance, might reveal the portal's destination in its surface. Some doors and gates are solid as well. A solid portal bears markings or other clues to give a hint about its destination.

Illusory: A rare few portals are enchanted with an illusions to hide their true destinations. Such a portal offers a false image of where it leads. A successful trained DC 25 Arcana check allows a character to recognize the image is an illusion, but does not reveal where the portal leads.

Frequency

Although many portals are persistent and function continuously, a few operate only at certain times or open at random.

Permanent Portals: A permanent portal is always active and always functions. To use the portal, a traveler just needs to walk through it (by default).

Circle Portals: Some portals are active for brief moments at a time. Such portals connect to inscribed teleportation circles, areas equipped with an address formed of specific sigils that enables a traveler to use Linked Portal or a similar ritual to arrive at the portal's location.

Intermittent Portals: Portals may open and close at random or in accordance with a specific schedule. An intermittent portal may open daily at noon, remain open for an hour, and then close as if it never existed. Other portals—malfunctioning ones for the most part—open and close every few minutes, hours, or even years.

Access

A portal's access describes who can use and how it is used. Most persistent portals are open, enabling travelers of any kind to move back and forth through the portal. Others might function for creatures of a particular race or may allow passage in a specific direction, stranding the traveler on the other side.

Open: These portals allow traffic to flow from either direction provided the portal is active.

Closed or Restricted: Closed or restricted portals have been locked or sealed. Passage through such a portal is usually impossible without the right portal key, entry phrase, or other entry criteria. The Arcane Lock ritual is useful for closing or restricting portals. A character can attempt to open a closed portal with the Knock ritual. (See "Arcane Lock, Knock, and Portals," page 149, and the Arcane Lock and Knock rituals in the Player's Handbook.)

Directional: Although most portals allow movement through a portal from either direction, some portals are one-way portals. Moving through such a portal carries the traveler to the destination, but to return, the traveler has to find some other means of travel.

Precision

All portals lead somewhere. However, not all portals are precise as to where they deposit travelers.

Precise: The portal functions as expected, and the traveler appears in the location revealed by the portal's appearance.

Imprecise: The traveler appears 1d10 squares away from the portal. If a result would deposit a traveler into a solid object, the creature appears in the closest unoccupied square to the rolled location.

Wildly Imprecise: A wildly imprecise portal is dangerous. It transports travelers to a random location within the same plane. (The Dungeon Master decides where the travelers go. In other words, the randomness is random from the view of the characters, but not the DM.) All travelers passing through the portal within 10 rounds arrive at the same destination, but those delaying further appear in a different location. Wildly imprecise portals cannot transport travelers into solid objects. The portal instead deposits the traveler in the closest unoccupied square.

Malfunctioning Portals: Persistent portals can stand open for centuries, but the longer a portal goes without use, the greater the likelihood the magic empowering the portal begins to fail. Whenever travelers use a malfunctioning portal, roll on the Portal Malfunction table to see what happens.

PORTAL MALFUNCTION

| d20 | Result |
|---|---|
| 1 | Portal winks out of existence. |
| 2 | Portal sends the group of travelers to a random portal destination on a different plane (see the Random Portal Destination table). |
| 3 | Portal doesn't function at all for 1d10 rounds. |
| 4-5 | Portal functions as a precise portal, but it scrambles a user's body during transit. The traveler takes damage equal to its healing surge value. |
| 6-7 | Portal functions as a wildly imprecise portal. |
| 8-11 | Portal functions as an imprecise portal. |
| 12-20 | Portal functions as a precise portal. |

Variable Portals: A variable portal can transport travelers to two, three, or more destinations. One of these portals presenst a destination for a few moments at a time (1d6 rounds) before moving on to the next. Once a variable portal has cycled through all the destinations to which it can transport travelers, it starts over again with the first destination. Variable portals are clear or misty, showing their destinations within them successively. When a traveler enters the portal, it deposits the traveler at the destination it shows at the time.

Erratic Portals: When the magic of a permanent portal finally fails, it may transform into an erratic portal. At this point, a portal devolves from a conduit from one plane to another or a means of traveling substantial distances within a plane into a type of tactical terrain (see "Planar Terrain and Hazards," page 21).

RANDOM PORTAL DESTINATION

| d20 | Destination |
|---|---|
| 1 | Alternate world |
| 2 | Demiplane or pocket dimension |
| 3-4 | The Astral Sea (see the Astral Sea Portal Destination table) |
| 5 | The Abyss |
| 6 | The Elemental Chaos |
| 7-8 | The Shadowfell |
| 9-10 | The Feywild |
| 11-19 | The natural world |
| 20 | Sigil |

Random Portal Destination

Most portals have fixed destinations, carrying travelers to the same location every time they're used. Malfunctioning portals, as well as reality rips (see "Phenomena," page 20), can fling travelers to unexpected places, stranding them in worlds and realities far from where they began their journey. Whenever a planar traveler moves through a portal or encounters a phenomenon indicating movement to random destination from one plane to another, roll on the Random Portal Destination table.

ASTRAL SEA PORTAL DESTINATION

| d20 | Destination |
|---|---|
| 1-2 | Arvandor |
| 3-4 | Pandemonium |
| 5-6 | The Nine Hells |
| 7-8 | Tytherion |
| 9-10 | Chernoggar |
| 11-12 | Kalandurren |
| 13-14 | Shom |
| 15-16 | Hestavar |
| 17-18 | Celestia |
| 19-20 | Other dominion |

Rituals

Portals offer an excellent means for adventurers to reach fabulous destinations, but in most cases, these destinations are fixed, making them of limited use to those who need to reach a particular location. A number of rituals help adventurers move within a plane or to other planes rather than spending an interminable time hunting down the right portal for the mission at hand. In addition, rituals can be used to divine a portal's secrets, lock a portal to prevent its use, or alter a portal's magic to make it malfunction (see "Rituals," pages 148-151).

Teleportation Circles

A teleportation circle is a ring of sigils and glyphs inscribed or chiseled around the area where a ritually created portal will appear. Although not all rituals require the use of teleportation circles, their inclusion in the ritual is beneficial, even if it is expensive. The reason is simple: The circle binds the portal to your location and to its destination by establishing the magical coordinates of the location into the circle itself (sometimes called the sigil sequence). Since these codes are required to establish the necessary links for a portal to appear, these coordinates are precious commodities for planar travelers, and their acquisition can be the subject of an entire quest.

Teleportation circles come in two forms: permanent and temporary. A permanent teleportation circle is a receptacle for portals. It is built to allow users to travel by means of Linked Portal and Planar Portal rituals. Most powerful organizations, temples, and guilds have permanent teleportation circles established in their holdings to enable swift and accurate transport. Temporary teleportation circles are inscribed at the spot where the ritual is performed, and they last only as long as the ritual remains active.

Interplanar Rituals

Interplanar rituals grant passage from one plane to another. Planar Portal is the most common method, but like Linked Portal, it requires knowledge of the destination's planar address (its sigil sequence), and that information is sometimes hard to obtain. Rituals to create permanent portals that bridge the planes exist, but such rituals are mind-bogglingly expensive and their acquisition difficult.

Rituals such as Fey Crossing and Astral Sojourn allow travelers to shift into a new plane from their current location. Rituals such as these do not allow any degree of control over the arrival point, and they shift the traveler into the corresponding locale in a parallel plane or deposit the traveler in a random spot in a fundamental plane. These rituals are most useful when the traveler doesn't know exactly where he or she is going and has to seek out something in those planes.

A few rituals such as Shadow Walk allow temporary transit into another plane to speed up travel. Although they take advantage of peculiar temporal disparities of the planar boundaries, they do not allow full passage into the other plane.

Beyond the Core Cosmology

The rituals described in this book and in the Player's Handbook allow player characters to reach just about any location in the core cosmology, but these locations aren't the only places worthy of exploration. The Far Realm lurks beyond the outermost reaches of the Astral Sea—beyond the normal cosmology. The Far Realm houses such horrors that to lay eyes on them is enough to drive a mortal mad. A ritual capable of opening a portal to the Far Realm could be a campaign-shattering event, letting loose a torrent of aberrant horrors to spread like spilled ink through your cosmology, transforming, corrupting, and unraveling the world, or at the least remaking it into something new and unpleasant.

In addition, worlds beyond those of the natural world exist—realities separated by the gulf of time and space, where different peoples, civilizations, perhaps even cosmologies reside. If sigil sequences exist for every point of space in the D&D world, sigil sequences must exist that correspond to other worlds, such as Abeir-Toril and Eberron. It's possible then that with the right sigil sequence, a planar traveler could slip free from one world to enter another. It's up to the DM to decide if such travel is available by Planar Portal, reality rip (page 21), or some other means.

Vehicles

When rituals are not possible and portals prove elusive, planar travelers turn to other solutions to reach the planes. Magic items, such as a cubic portal, enable travelers to bridge the planes with minimal effort, and other magic items, such as a manual of the planes, can alter an existing portal to carry travelers to other destinations. Items like these are expensive, far beyond the reach of low-level explorers, but by using planar vessels travelers can traverse the planes at a more reasonable price.

Astral Skiff

Traveling the Astral Sea is a strange and unsettling experience, at least for the first-time traveler, as the plane stretches on to infinity, occupied by drifting deities trapped in the slumber of death and the dominions hanging suspended in the silvery void like islands in the heavens. It's possible to reach a dominion without aid of a vessel, but such travel is slow and arduous. Instead, people who explore the Astral Sea rely on astral skiffs. These vessels navigate the Astral Sea with ease, picking up the magical currents to reach their destination in short order. Ranging in size from small two-person vessels to sprawling barges capable of transporting hundreds of passengers, astral skiffs are a superior method of transport. Unfortunately, astral skiffs are a githyanki innovation and so finding these vessels outside of their hands is tough work.

A typical astral skiff is a vessel of sleek design equipped with mesh sails designed to catch the magic of the Astral Sea and propel the ship forward. In many ways, an astral skiff resembles a seafaring vessel, but the astral skiff's deck is enclosed and fitted with hatches and crystal windows. Gleaming rods extend out from the hull to provide directional control and stability.

Astral skiffs are rare. The smallest of these commonly fetch as much as 13,000 gp in planar marketplaces. See page 159 for typical astral skiff statistics.

Planar Dromond

Planar dromonds resemble seafaring vessels of the natural world. They sport three masts, a stout wooden hull, and all the other accoutrements one would expect from such a vessel. Each planar dromond is fitted with a magical, rune-carved keel.

The runekeel allows the ship to pass from a body of water from one plane to another body of water on another plane. A runekeel allows transportation to seas and oceans in the Shadowfell, the Feywild, various astral dominions, and anywhere else with a liquid surface capable of bearing a sailing vessel. The runekeel does not allow passage to dry land. The hull of a planar dromond can withstand extremes of heat and cold.

Planar dromonds are expensive, costing as much as 1,125,000 gp. Luckily, an adventurer can book passage on these ships for as little as 1,000 gp. Planar dromonds sometimes hide among the docks of large cities in the natural world, but they are most often found in a variety of planar cities including the City of Brass and Gloomwrought. These ships are used to carry cargo from distant planes to exotic marketplaces throughout the cosmos. See page 159 for planar dromond statistics.

Spelljammer

A spelljammer is a fantastic flying vessel. It consists of a ship's hull suspended in the air by a powerful spelljamming helm. Many different designs for spelljamming vessels exist, but most of these ships possess large fan-shaped sails extending from slender masts to catch the wind and to help with steering. A typical spelljammer can carry up to two dozen passengers in addition to its crew complement of 20.

Aerial travel is exciting in its own right, but the spelljamming helms of spelljammers permit plane shifting like the runekeels of planar dromonds. However, since the spelljammer flies, it can reach places its lesser counterpart cannot. Spelljammers have been spotted throughout the planes, drifting through the clouds of Celestia, swerving past fireballs in Avernus, and sweeping through the storms of the Elemental Chaos.

A new spelljammer sells for as much as 3,125,000 gp, but captains of these ships carry passengers to planar cities for a reasonable fee of 5,000 gp per passenger. See page 159 for typical spelljammer statistics.

Phenomena

Sometimes planar travel occurs as an unintended consequence of being in the wrong place at the wrong time. With all the burgeoning power of the planes, unexpected phenomena occur. These phenomena take the form of raging storms, bubbles welling up from one of the natural world's echoes, or the blurring of worlds when one echo brushes against the natural world. No one can predict when planar phenomena will happen, but when they occur, they do so with spectacular results.

Planar Bleed

The Shadowfell and the Feywild are in constant motion, following their orbits around the natural world, rotating in the cosmic soup of reality. With such motion comes the risk of collisions. When such an event occurs, a specific region of the natural world acquires the traits of the colliding plane. Thus, when the Shadowfell encounters the mortal world, a pall of gloom settles over the land, and sorrow seizes the hearts and minds of those dwelling there.

More importantly, during these events, travel to the other plane is easier. Portals and crossings open, disgorging the denizens of the other plane into the natural world, and planar bleed sometimes plucks the unwary from the world and pulls them into the Feywild or the Shadowfell. The duration of the blurring depends on the severity of the collision, but it lasts for no more than a day before normalcy reasserts itself.

Planar Breaches

Planar breaches are terrifying occurrences, born in areas where the bounds of reality are tested to the point of breaking. Planar breaches can be created by powerful rituals that bend reality, the appearance of an elder evil, or the awakening of a primordial. In addition, certain areas spawn planar breaches on their own, causing bubbles to form and burst in reality, spewing the stuff of one plane into another.

A planar breach builds before it completely forms. As it threatens to explode, a bulge forms in reality, causing the area of the breach to distort and assume a stretched or compacted appearance. A few moments after the event begins, the bulge explodes outward, causing a portion of another plane and its inhabitants to fall into the other plane. The breach and the area all around it fuse into a bizarre amalgamation of realities, gaining the traits of both planes, and allowing passage from one plane to the next.

Planar breaches occur between any two planes and even between two different worlds. These phenomena can cause widespread damage and destruction. (For example, one might expect catastrophe when an ocean of boiling water pours into the natural world from the Elemental Chaos.) Some planar breaches spawn elemental motes, free-floating chunks of earth, water, or some other fundamental element, that careen through the skies. Other planar breaches erase vast sections of lands, pulling them into some other world.

Most planar breaches don't extend farther than a few hundred feet in diameter, but greater breaches have haunted the world in its dim past, as attested to by the existence of floating islands of matter and stranger objects, formations, and structures in the world. A planar breach lasts for a few hours before stability is restored.

Reality Rips

A reality rip is a hole in the fabric of the cosmos, a gap of nothingness that is created when magic goes awry, such as in the wake of an artifact's destruction, the death of a deity, or some other monumental event. Once formed, the rip pulls surrounding materials inside, gobbling up reality until it collapses or the entire plane implodes. Some speculate reality rips tear holes to the Outside, and in the gap created, the natural movements of the universe move to plug the hole before the Far Realm enters into the universe, corrupting and destroying everything it touches. Travel into a reality rip is possible, but an adventurer cannot predict where he or she will end up.

Planar Terrain and Hazards

The planes contain vistas ranging from the mundane to the fantastic: looming fortresses that literally crawl across fields of shattered earth and pockets of darkness so bleak that to step inside risks snuffing out more than the trusty sunrod in hand. The following planar terrain and hazards demonstrate but a sampling of the sorts of environments in which planar adventures might take place.

Fantastic Terrain

The following planar terrain features follow the guidelines presented in the Dungeon Master's Guide. The term "per tier" is used to show how an effect should scale. Multiply the per tier value by 1 for heroic tier, 2 for paragon tier, and 3 for epic tier.

Abyssal Wellspring: An abyssal wellspring is a suppurating wound in reality. It is a place where the raw madness and evil of the Abyss bulges into another plane. A wellspring fills 4 contiguous squares. A chaotic evil creature starting its turn in this space takes 5 damage per tier, but it gains a +1 bonus to attack rolls per tier and +2 bonus to damage rolls per tier until the end of its turn.

Angelic Lantern: Angelic lanterns are faint manifestations of divine will. These small, pulsating balls of light float in a square, shedding bright light in a radius of 20 squares. Any character standing in a space containing an angelic lantern and using an attack with the either the divine or the radiant keyword gains a +1 bonus to attack rolls per tier. An angelic lantern winks out of existence at the end of the turn that it first grants a bonus to such attacks.

Astral Flame: Astral flame is the burning essence of the Astral Sea. It is a fountain of fiery liquid that sheds bright light in a radius of 20 squares. The astral flame completely fills a square, and it costs 1 square of movement to enter a square filled with astral flame. Any creature entering an astral flame square or starting his or her turn in a square containing astral flame takes 10 radiant damage per tier. However, a character adjacent to this space can coat his or her weapon or implement with the stuff as a minor action. Until the end of the encounter, all attacks using that weapon or implement gain the radiant keyword.

Divine Blood: Wreckage from the ancient war between the gods and the primordials still litters the planes. In particular, in secluded places where few dare travel, one might stumble upon a pool of divine blood. Any character who ends his or her move in the pool gains 5 temporary hit points per tier, but takes a -1 penalty to attack rolls and checks from the confusing visions and memories assailing his or her mind. This penalty remains until the temporary hit points are lost (see "Temporary Hit Points," Player's Handbook, page 294). Although the visions are random and seemingly nonsensical, occasionally (at the DM's discretion) the visions impart important information that is useful to the character experiencing them.

Elemental Seepage: Elemental seepage is elemental fire, cold, thunder, or lightning, or some combination of the four. The seepage takes the form of a strange, viscous mass that pulsates and quivers with the energy of the Elemental Chaos. These seepages fill up to 4 contiguous squares. An attack power with one or more keywords corresponding to the types of energy comprising the seepage and used within 5 squares of the elemental seepage gains a +1 bonus to attack rolls per tier. (It is empowered by the seepage's elemental power.) The seepage is harmless, though some areas of elemental seepage are known to hide one-way directional and wildly imprecise portals (see page 18) to locations on the Elemental Chaos.

Erratic Portal: When the magic of a portal finally fails, it may transform into an erratic portal. When a creature ends its move on an erratic portal square, it makes an immediate saving throw. On a save, that creature can teleport up to 5 squares per tier as a free action. On a failed saving throw, the creature can teleport up to 2 squares per tier as a free action, and it takes 10 lightning damage per tier. If the creature chooses not to teleport, it still takes the lightning damage.

Hellfire: Hellfire is found predominantly in the Nine Hells. A square of hellfire sheds bright light in a radius of 20 squares. In addition, creatures adjacent to hellfire add the fire keyword to their ranged attacks.

A creature entering or starting its turn in a square of hellfire takes ongoing 5 fire damage per tier. A failed saving throw against hellfire ongoing fire damage also increases the ongoing fire damage by 5 per tier (up to a limit of three times the original ongoing damage).

Phase Rock: An area of phase rock is slightly out of sync with reality. When a creature ends its move in a square of phase rock, that creature is insubstantial and gains phasing until it moves out of the phase rock.

Razorvine: This hardy creeper plant is ubiquitous in Sigil and throughout the planes. It has serrated leaves that unfold from black stems. Razorvine comes in clumps of 10 contiguous squares. It counts as difficult terrain, and a creature entering or starting its turn in a square of razorvine takes 10 damage per tier.

Energy Crystals: These weird crystals collect and store energy of all kinds. An energy crystal takes up 1 square, is considered difficult terrain, and has AC 5 and Fortitude 10. It has 20 hit points per tier. Whenever an energy crystal is attacked by a power with the cold, fire, lightning, necrotic, radiant, or thunder keyword, it takes no damage from the effects of those energy types. Until the end of the next turn of the creature making the attack, any creature entering or starting its turn adjacent to the crystal takes 5 damage per tier of the energy type(s) absorbed by the crystal. If the energy crystal is destroyed after absorbing energy but before the end of its attacker's next turn, it explodes, dealing 10 damage per tier of the energy type(s) it has absorbed to all creatures within 3 squares of the energy crystal.

Planar Hazards

In addition to the perils of terrain, the planes are also filled with hazards at least as dangerous as the creatures inhabiting them. What follows is a selection of some of the more infamous planar hazards.

Burning Vapor Level 11 Obstacle
Hazard XP 600

Clouds of burning vapor are common on the Elemental Chaos. These mixtures of elemental fire and air inexplicably wander far and can be found throughout the planes.

Hazard: A field of burning vapor fills 10 contagious squares. Creatures within the burning vapor gain concealment.

Perception
✦ No check is necessary to notice burning vapor.

Additional Skill: Arcana
✦ DC 16: The character identifies the strange orange and red swirling mist as burning vapor.

Trigger
The burning vapor attacks when a creature enters or starts its turn in a field of burning vapor, burning body and lungs.

Attack
Opportunity Action Melee
Target: Each creature in the burning vapor
Attack: +14 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d8 + 6 fire damage, and ongoing 5 fire damage (save ends), and the burning vapor moves 3 squares in a random direction.

Countermeasures
✦ A character successfully holding his or her breath (see "Endurance," Player's Handbook, pages 184–185) in burning vapor does not take ongoing fire damage on a hit.
✦ A zone created with the cold keyword (such as the 9th-level wizard spell ice storm) destroys squares of burning vapor within it.

Vacuum Rift Level 14 Obstacle
Hazard XP 1,000

These holes in reality pull matter, air, and just about anything else into a strange gap between time and space.

Hazard: These small rifts in reality are focused in 1 space. They affect a 5-square burst around the focus square.

Perception

✦ No check is normally necessary to notice the vacuum rift. Creatures either see material being pulled in by the rift, or they hear the hurricanelike roar of the rift.

Additional Skill: Arcana

✦ DC 23: The character identifies the phenomenon as a vacuum rift.

Initiative +20

Trigger

The vacuum rift rolls initiative whenever a creature ends its move within 10 squares of it.

Attack

Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: Each creature or unattended object in burst
Attack: +17 vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target is pulled 5 squares toward the vacuum rift's focus square and immobilized (until the end of the target's next turn).

Trigger

When a creature or object enters or starts his or her turn in the vacuum rift's focus square.

Attack

Opportunity Action Melee
Target: Triggering creature or unattended object
Attack: +19 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 4d6 + 5 damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Countermeasures

✦ A character trained in Arcana can engage in a skill challenge to banish the vacuum rift: DC 25 Arcana; complexity 2 (6 successes before 3 failures); each check is a standard action. Success banishes the vacuum rift. Failure causes it to explode: Close burst 10; all creatures in the burst take 3d6 + 5 damage and are knocked prone, and the vacuum rift disappears.

Demonic Slime Level 16 Obstacle
Hazard XP 1,400

Wherever demons congregate for long, you are bound to find this sticky red slime that smells strongly of rot and the bitter iron tang of blood.

Hazard: A pool of demonic slime fills up to 5 contiguous squares. This sticky substance is difficult terrain.

Perception

No check is necessary to notice demonic slime.

Additional Skill: Arcana

✦ DC 25: The character identifies this strange pool of viscous red liquid as a pool of demonic slime.

Trigger

The demonic slime attacks when a creature enters or starts its turn within the area of the slime.

Attack

Opportunity Action Melee
Target: Creature in the demonic slime
Attack: +20 vs. Will
Hit: The target is dominated. The target must attack an adjacent creature or charge the nearest creature. If the target can do neither action, the target stands in the square dumbfounded, granting combat advantage to all creatures until the start of the target's next turn (or until it saves).

Countermeasures

✦ Demonic slime is immune to all but radiant damage. Each square of demonic slime has AC 5, Fortitude 10, and 30 hit points.

Avernus Cinderstorm Level 18 Blaster
Hazard XP 2,000

A ball of hellfire streaks down from the sky and explodes on impact, becoming a roiling, angry cloud of hot embers. This phenomenon, sometimes called battle's bane, is rare outside Avernus, the first layer of the Nine Hells, though it occurs in other astral dominions after fevered battles.

Hazard: An Avernus cinderstorm only occurs outdoors and is attracted to the blood and lament of the wounded. It doesn't manifest until one creature in a battle is bloodied. An Avernus cinderstorm is focused in a square adjacent to the bloodied creature and affects a 3-square burst around the focus square.

Perception

✦ DC 20: The character notices ashen clouds coalescing above the battlefield.

Additional Skill: Arcana

✦ DC 25: The character identifies the phenomenon as an Avernus cinderstorm.

Initiative +9

Trigger

When a creature is bloodied, the Avernus cinderstorm enters the area and rolls initiative.

Attack

Standard Action Close burst 3
Target: Each creature in burst
Attack: +22 vs. Reflex (+24 against bloodied creatures)
Hit: 2d6 + 18 damage and ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).
Special: The Avernus cinderstorm continues to attack each round until no creatures are bloodied, at which point it disappears.

Upgrade to Elite (4,000 XP)

✦ Increase the initiative modifier and attack rolls by 2.
✦ Increase the burst to 5.

| Entropic Fissure | Level 22 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Hazard | XP 4,150 |

A shifting, writhing fold in reality churns in a mass of disgusting colors and abominable screams, whispers, and gurgles. It lurches toward you as if drawn by your living presence.

Hazard: Entropic fissures are mobile and unpredictable gates to the Far Realm that devour creatures only to regurgitate them back as unstable and mutating abominations. An entropic fissure fills 1 square.

Perception

✦ No check is necessary to notice an entropic fissure.

Additional Skill: Arcana

✦ DC 24: The character identifies the entropic fissure.

Initiative +17

Trigger

The entropic fissure rolls initiative whenever a creature ends its move within 10 squares of it.

Attack

Move Action Personal

The entropic fissure slides up to 6 squares toward the nearest living creature each round.

Standard Action Melee reach 3

Target: A living creature

Primary Attack: +27 vs. AC

Hit: 2d10 + 8 damage, and the target is grabbed (until escape) and pulled into a square adjacent to the entropic fissure. On subsequent turns, the entropic fissure deals 2d10 + 8 damage to targets that it is grabbing. It can grab up to 8 targets at a time. Make a secondary attack against each grabbed and bloodied target.

Secondary Attack: +25 vs. Fortitude

Hit: The entropic fissure pulls the target into the Far Realm until the end of the entropic fissure's next turn, at which point it regurgitates the target into a vacant square adjacent to the fissure. The target returns from the Far Realms as a shifting and mutating version of its former self. It is helpless until a Remove Affliction ritual can be performed, at which point the target is no longer helpless and reverts to its former form.

Countermeasures

✦ A character who is trained in Arcana can engage in a skill challenge to banish the fissure: DC 29 Arcana; complexity 2 (6 successes before 3 failures); each check is a standard action. Success banishes the fissure. Failure causes it to split into two unstable fissures occupying adjacent squares. Each round, at the end of each unstable fissure's turn, it rolls a saving throw. On a failed saving throw, an unstable fissure winks out of existence.

STEVE ELLIS

| Time Wrinkle | Level 26 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Hazard | XP 9,000 |

A time wrinkle is an area of reality where time and space have been irreparably damaged. The wrinkle is invisible, but if perceived, it looks like an impossibly long hair suspended in the air and writhing as if alive.

Hazard: A time wrinkle fills 1 square.

Perception

- ✦ DC 17: The character notices a faint disturbance in the air.

Additional Skill: Arcana

- ✦ DC 26: The character sees the time wrinkle.
- ✦ DC 31: The character identifies the time wrinkle for what it is.

Initiative +10

Trigger

The time wrinkle rolls initiative whenever a creature comes within 10 squares of it.

Attack

Move Action Personal

The time wrinkle moves 1d6 squares in a random direction each round. If this movement would place it inside an obstacle (a wall, a door, a column, or another solid object), it moves to the closest available unoccupied space.

Target: Each creature in its path

Attack: +25 vs. Reflex

Hit: The target immediately rerolls its initiative check and takes his or her next action on that initiative count, even if the target already acted in the round.

Countermeasures

- ✦ A character who notices the time wrinkle may make a DC 26 Acrobatics check to duck out of its way.
- ✦ A character can delay the time wrinkle with a DC 31 Arcana check so that it goes at the end of the round instead of its normal initiative order.
- ✦ A character can destroy the time wrinkle with a successful DC 33 Arcana check.

Upgrade to Elite (4,000 XP)

- ✦ Increase the initiative modifier and attack rolls by 2.
- ✦ Increase the movement to 1d10 squares.

SIGIL, CITY OF DOORS

Some call Sigil the City of Secrets, because everything that can be known is known somewhere in its twisting streets. Some call it the Cage, because it's hard to get to and hard to leave. Mostly it's called the City of Doors, thanks to the portals that connect it to the rest of the universe, like the hub of an enormous web of relationships and connections. A few wise souls like to think of Sigil as the microcosm—a tiny reflection of everything that is, everything that has been, and everything that yet could be, represented in the form of an enormous planar metropolis.

Sigil is a plane unto itself, existing outside the ordered structure of the rest of the universe and yet intricately connected to it through its unnumbered planar portals. It's a filthy, noisy city with smoke-choked alleyways and crowded streets. The city is built on the inside of a gigantic, hollow ring that has no outside. To its citizens, though, it's the center of the universe—vibrantly alive, full of every imaginable treasure.

SIGIL, CITY OF DOORS

Sigil is the bustling crossroads of the universe, full of portals leading to every known corner of the planes.

Population: Approximately 250,000. Representatives of nearly every race and monstrous kind can be found somewhere in the city.

Government and Defense: The only being in Sigil who wields any real authority is the mysterious Lady of Pain, the uncaring guardian and protector of the city. The touch of her gaze causes wounds to spout blood, and her smallest gesture can banish someone or something into an endless maze spawned in a pocket dimension. Her presence is said to prevent deities, demon princes, primordials, and beings of similar power from entering the City of Doors, and the fear of her is sufficient to keep a modicum of order in the streets. Crime is common, but rebellion is unthinkable.

Inns and Taverns: Sigil's inns and taverns cater to diverse clientele. Efreets from the City of Brass can find flaming halls of sumptuous luxury. Devils can enjoy a night spent in unthinkable debauchery. A traveler might lodge in an inn whose interior is like a twilit fey grove or a sunless cavern, or eat in a place that's virtually indistinguishable from Fallcrest's Blue Moon Alehouse.

Supplies: The Grand Bazaar, located in the city's Market Ward, is a huge square overflowing into side streets, alleyways, and even nearby taverns. It is filled with caravan tents and market stalls. It pales in comparison to the bazaars and markets of the City of Brass, but deals in commerce appropriate to the size of the city. Other marketplaces spring up in many places throughout the city. Most appear during the day, but some appear only at night.

Temples: Temples to all the deities—including evil gods whose shrines are rarely seen in civilized lands—can be found in the streets of Sigil. Most of them are small, and few claim any significant power in the city's affairs.

Entering and Exiting Sigil

Sigil may well hold the honor of being both the best- and worst-protected city in the multiverse. It has no walls or gates, so it has nothing to fear from sieges or any of the other threats that face a typical city. On the other hand, just about anybody or anything can walk right into the city whenever he, she, or it pleases through the portals that connect Sigil to other planes.

These portals aren't specially marked, ornate gates. Any bounded space big enough for somebody to walk or wriggle through—from a sewer entrance to a wardrobe—might double as a portal to another plane. Any average doorway, window, arch, fireplace, or chimney might be a portal in addition to serving its useful mundane function.

However, a visitor to Sigil need not worry about opening a closet door and accidentally tumbling through to the Abyss. Most portals need a portal key to activate them—a specific object that has some affinity for what's on the other side the portal, or sometimes merely a word, a gesture, or the right state of mind. Without the correct key, a portal is just an open space. Many of the city's natives are more than happy to sell keys to specific portals or at least sell the knowledge of a key's nature.

Some portals don't cooperate with the commercially minded, however. Many don't linger long enough to become well known, and some don't even lead to the same place twice in a row. Since nobody knows how to make or control Sigil's unique portals, little can be done to improve the situation.

If you want to leave or enter Sigil, you have to use a portal. Sigil does not have a special back door that would let you circumvent this fact. You can't call or summon creatures into or out of Sigil, nor can you use travel rituals to get in or out. Even deities can't (or don't want to) overcome these restrictions.

Architecture

In most cities, the architecture depends on three factors: the building materials available, the environment, and the dominant style and personality of the locals. Sigil has none of those things, and its architecture demonstrates that fact amply.

Sigil has no natural building materials. The "ground," though hard and sturdy, isn't stone, and it crumbles to dust when excavated. The place has no trees to turn into lumber. You can't even dig up sod or mud to build a crude hut. Every piece of material in every building on every street is imported from another plane. No two buildings are made from the same materials or designed the same way.

Sigil doesn't have much of an environment to shape its architecture, either. It never gets extremely hot or extremely cold, it has no monsoons or tornados, and what does pass for weather just tends to make everything look gray and dingy. Thus, since the inhabitants don't have to worry about their houses surviving the next big storm, they build whatever structures suit their fancy.

Finally, Sigil has no dominant style. The look of the city reflects the fact that its residents come from everywhere. Dwarves build sturdy stone structures next to graceful elven villas. Down the street stands a faithful reproduction of an Abyssal palace, and tucked into a nearby alley is a white marble shrine to Pelor. On top of that, since it's easier to scavenge than to import, half (or more) of the buildings in Sigil are ramshackle affairs thrown together from the parts of a dozen other constructions. The gorgeous darkwood facade of that tavern probably came from an old elven inn, and its stone fireplace was carried rock by rock from the ruins of a foundry twenty-three blocks away.

Illumination

Despite its lack of a sun or moon, Sigil enjoys days and nights much like any terrestrial city. In the early hours of the morning, the sky slowly brightens, reaching a peak of illumination as bright as the noonday sun in a mid-latitude city (tempered by the near-perpetual haze). After peak, the illumination fades over the next several hours until darkness reigns, and then the whole cycle starts over. With no moon or stars, of course, "night" in Sigil isn't like a typical country evening. If it's clear, though, you can make out the flickers of torchlight and lanterns from the other side of the city high above. (Remember, the city's built on the inside of a ring, so the far side of town is directly overhead.)

All told, over the course of 24 hours, Sigil has about 6 hours of bright light and the same amount of darkness. The rest of the day is a murky twilight (dim light). Well-to-do travelers hire lanternbearers to accompany them through the streets during all but the brightest hours of the day, and a knowledgeable lanternbearer can be an effective guide as well as a handy source of illumination.

Laws and Society

Because of Sigil's role as the melting pot of the planes, it's easy to see how the city might seem like little more than a recipe for anarchy. How can a place where devils and demons rub shoulders with archons and efreets hope to maintain order?

The only real answer is the Lady of Pain. This powerful and mysterious being moves calmly and silently through the streets of Sigil. With a mere glance, she can cause creatures to sprout wounds and bleed like a fountain. A person who manages to get on her bad side finds himself or herself banished to an extraplanar maze, where he or she will likely die of starvation (or even old age) searching for the single hidden exit. Somehow, the Lady also prevents deities and beings of similar power from entering the Cage, and even through its portals, so a coup isn't an option.

The people of the city contribute to maintaining order, as far as they can. The closest thing Sigil has to a police force is a citizen group called the Sons of Mercy. Unfortunately, without any official power to make arrests or carry out sentences, the Sons of Mercy don't garner much respect from the locals, and thus they aren't terribly effective in limiting crime. Similarly, the so-called Sigil Advisory Council may have the city's best interests at heart, but the group lacks real political power.

The Wards

Sigil is divided into six regions called wards. The wards aren't official designations—no walls divide them from one another—but everyone knows the difference between one ward and the next, even if locals don't agree on exactly where that difference begins and ends. Still, it's important for visitors to know what's where so that they don't wander where they aren't wanted. In some locales, walking into the wrong street might earn them a warning, but in others, it might get them a knife between the ribs.

Lower Ward: The Lower Ward is perhaps the most symbolic of the Cage as a whole. It gets its name from the large number of portals to the Elemental Chaos (often considered the "lower" part of the universe) found there. Forges and smithies throughout the ward draw fiery energy from the Elemental Chaos and release foul-smelling smoke that chokes the air of the ward. Despite the stench, it's hard to avoid the Lower Ward, since most of the city's artisans live and work there, and the place is full of forges, mills, warehouses, and workshops.

The Lady's Ward: Going counterclockwise around the ring of Sigil, the next stop is The Lady's Ward (and yes, the locals can hear you capitalize all three of those words). The Lady of Pain doesn't live here, but rich citizens and most of Sigil's temples lie within this ward. The Lady's Ward has power, wealth, and majesty, and knows how to show it off.

Market Ward: In the Market Ward, everything is for sale. The wealth of Sigil may be concentrated in The Lady's Ward, but it's spent here, whether on goods, services, information, or reputation. The best place to buy anything is the Grand Bazaar, an immense plaza filled with shops, tents, and stalls offering wares from dozens of planes and strange worlds. Prices can vary wildly, from dirt cheap (for merchants with an unexpected overstock) to many times the normal value (for goods in sudden short supply, due to a faulty portal or a band of planar marauders).

JASON ENGLE

Guildhall Ward: Many visitors can't tell the difference between the Guildhall Ward and the Market Ward. Even some locals claim that only tradition separates them. Since guilds don't play a particularly significant role in Sigil, one can guess that the name itself owes a lot to ancient tradition. Today, the Guildhall Ward serves as the domain of the middle class of Sigil. Many merchants who hawk their wares in the Market Ward during the day sleep in the Guildhall Ward at night, and many who deal in services (rather than selling finished goods) live in the Guildhall Ward and work there as well. The Guildhall Ward also houses many racial neighborhoods, from the transplanted elf grove of Rethevar to the githyanki community of Gitriban.

Clerk's Ward: The domain of bureaucrats, scribes, sages, and scholars, the Clerk's Ward is a quiet place to get things done without a lot of attention. Some criminal organizations looking to improve their lot move from the Lower Ward or the Hive into the Clerk's Ward, and the fact that the locals here respect each other's privacy encourages activities of an illicit nature. Of course, it wouldn't be Sigil if everything made sense, so the Clerk's Ward is also home to one of the flashiest places in the city—the Civic Festhall. Run by a group calling itself the Society of Sensation, the Festhall combines the best aspects of a concert hall, museum, and tavern while simultaneously serving as the centerpiece of an artistic neighborhood that brings travelers from across the multiverse. It's the best place in Sigil to see or be seen.

The Hive: Many locals claim that the Hive isn't a ward so much as it's the lack of a ward. The name for the region between the Lower Ward and Clerk's Ward and for the chaotic, sprawling slum in its center, the Hive teems with all kinds of scum. The lowest of the low dwell in the Hive: those who can't afford (or don't dare) to rub elbows with the more fortunate folks. The Hive is a microcosm of Sigil itself, encompassing everything that is needed in daily life: taverns and inns aplenty, entertainment, and services from pawnbrokers to sellswords. The quality may be questionable, but the prices can't be beat. The Gatehouse Night Market offers nearly everything one could find in the Grand Bazaar (and a few things one couldn't), though it's best not to think too hard about where the goods came from.

Faces of Sigil

The residents of Sigil are as diverse an assortment of characters as one can find anywhere in the universe. Mortals, immortals, and elementals live side by side, and ancient racial enemies—angels and devils, drow and eladrin, githyanki and mind flayers—pass on the street with barely a second glance. If Sigil is truly the universe in microcosm, then its citizens somehow represent all the teeming inhabitants of every world, with all their diverse alliances, hatreds, desires, secrets, and beliefs. The characters described here are a sampling of the local color. They are residents of Sigil who reflect or shape its character, and who might have a part to play in the adventures of heroes who find themselves on the streets of the City of Doors.

Alluvius Ruskin: In the City of Doors, sometimes the most important information is the key required to open a particular portal. Travelers in Sigil who are seeking a way out often find what they need at Tivvum's Antiquities, a tower rising above the bustle of the Market Ward. Alluvius Ruskin is a small, thin, elderly female tiefling with dark skin and wispy gray hair. She sells all kinds of items that are useful as gate keys: white rose petals for a portal to Arvandor, small blocks of unmelting infernal ice for a portal to the frozen wastes of Cania, or tiny blue pearls for a portal to the depths of an elemental sea. She's also an excellent source of information about portals that don't require physical keys—the words, gestures, and states of mind that open the more unusual portals in Sigil's streets. As a sideline to this business, she also cheerfully buys and occasionally sells magic items, though her selection is unpredictable at best.

Despite the taint of her infernal bloodline, "Lu" (as she is known to her frequent clients) seems innocuous, even charming, coming across as a kindly old person with her customers' best interests at heart. The reality, though, is that Alluvius is a powerful mage whose magic can raise the trinkets of her store into animate constructs to defend it. What's more, she's a member of an ancient, nearly vanished sect called the Incanterium, and long rituals have infused her entire being with arcane magic. Magic sustains her to the exclusion of food and even air, and she's hungry for more.

Behind her pleasant exterior, Lu dreams of one day acquiring enough magic to rule Sigil—and from there, with mastery of the city's portals, the entire universe. It might seem the dream of a lunatic, but the more magic she consumes, the closer she comes to making it a reality.

Rule-of-Three: Some say it's a principle of the universe that everything happens in threes. They point to the structure of the universe to prove this: The cosmos is the Elemental Chaos, the Astral Sea, and the world in between. The natural world, the Feywild, and the Shadowfell form another triad embedded within that one. Some philosophers speculate that there must be another triad of which the known universe and the Far Realm are two parts and the third is unknown. "See two things," folks in Sigil say, "and look for the third."

The being who calls himself Rule-of-Three has adopted this principle as a philosophy of living. He makes his money by selling information, but he gives three answers to every question, and he requires payment in a set of three—a gold coin, a silver coin, and a copper coin, perhaps, or three related favors. He's said to be the offspring of a glabrezu demon and a human mother—though some claim that the demon prince Graz'zt (see page 130) is his true father—and his information specialty is the Abyss and its inhabitants. To all appearances, though, he's a wizened, reedy githzerai sage in gray sackcloth who is quick with a gap-toothed grin. He frequents the Styx Oarsman, a tavern in the Lower Ward that caters to an elemental clientele and those with an interest in things Abyssal.

Rule-of-Three has fingers in much of the information-brokering and political maneuvering in Sigil, and he has important contacts in the Abyss, the City of Brass, and the Nine Hells. Some whisper that he aims to see the Blood War restarted, and others say that he wants the demons and devils to put aside their differences and join forces against the deities. Some even dare to suggest that he wants to claim a shard of evil from the heart of the Abyss for himself, seizing through this the power to become something akin to a god in his own right. Interacting with this mischievous, wry fellow in the crowded bustle of the Styx Oarsman, though, such grand schemes seem far beyond his capacity.

Shemeshka the Marauder: At the center of a far-flung web of spies and informants, Shemeshka the Marauder sits like a hungry spider. She's a vain, ambitious, and incredibly powerful raavasta (see page 136), the picture of dignified grace—except when her temper snaps and she erupts in a verbal tirade or deadly violence.

Unlike most raavastas, Shemeshka takes pride in her true form and rarely adopts a disguise. Her coppery fur is soft and clean, with thin white streaks fanning out from the end of her canine snout to the edges of her face. She wears a spidery headdress made of razorvine—some say in imitation of the bladelike appearance of the Lady of Pain. Beads, bracelets, hoops, and rings adown her neck, arms, ears, and fingers, and a cloud of sycophantic tieflings flits around her constantly, clearing her path, combing her fur, brushing her robe, and arranging her headdress. These lackeys are easy to underestimate, and in reality, each is a skilled spy and assassin.

Shemeshka knows something about everyone in Sigil, or so she would have everyone believe. She has an unnerving habit in conversation of casually mentioning an incriminating or embarrassing secret of the person she's speaking to. She smiles and continues the conversation, leaving her conversation partner flustered, terrified, and inclined to give Shemeshka whatever she desires.

Vocar the Disobedient: This weathered old human male claims that he was once an exarch of Vecna, and both his empty eye socket and the stump of his left arm lend credence to his words. If one believes that claim, though, one is forced to consider seriously that his other pronouncements are true—and Vocar says many things that should not be true.

As a priest of the god of secrets, years ago, Vocar was diligent in acquiring secrets of all kinds, whispering them to his god in nightly prayer and locking them in his skull. Some suggest that all the secrets—or perhaps one in particular—drove him mad. Others claim that he grew rebellious against his divine master. In any case, Vocar has fled Vecna's service and now lives somewhere in the Hive, whispering a constant string of the universe's darkest secrets.

Vocar is an elderly human with a long white beard and a bald head spotted with age. He wears tattered and stained robes of brown and gray and carries a silver dagger. He occasionally covers the gaping wound of his left eye socket with a red cloth, but most of the time he doesn't bother.

Many people—and deities—would like to get at Vocar and either compile his knowledge or silence him forever. Vecna, of course, is first among those who would like to see him dead, and agents of the Maimed God appear in the Hive with some regularity to attempt to take Vocar's life. It's said, though, that Vocar knows some secret about Vecna himself that allows him to escape these assaults. Ioun is said to be just as interested in Vocar, though less violently inclined. In a city whose stock in trade is knowledge, though, everyone has at least a passing interest in whatever secrets remain bottled up in Vocar's brain.

THE FAR REALM

The Far Realm, also called Outside, is a plane—or perhaps a space beyond the planes—that is terrifyingly remote from standard planar geometry. The creatures that abide in the Far Realm are too alien for a normal mind to accept without being damaged. Where stray emanations from the Far Realm leak onto the world, matter stirs at the beckoning of inexplicable urges, then burns to ash or takes on monstrous new life.

The history of the Far Realm is one of controversy and question. This troubled discourse about its nature is well suited to the Far Realm, which exists as something fundamentally alien to any easy categorization in any cosmology. It is literally the "far" realm because it lies outside and beyond the cosmology that encompasses the world of mortals, primordials, and deities alike. The Far Realm is beyond the already-difficult-to-comprehend multiverse. It is "outside" creation, existing in the theoretical realm of timeless infinity. Knowledge of the Far Realm is a triumph of mind over the rude boundaries of matter, space, and sanity. In fact, every mortal or immortal who has attempted to comprehend the truth of the Far Realm eventually concludes that endeavor with a shattered mind at best. At worst, such people are subsumed and corrupted, becoming monsters themselves.

Those who only lightly value the cohesion of their own minds sometimes journey to those stained locations where the Far Realm has touched (or currently touches) the world. There, they seek to gaze Outside. Although the descriptions of many of the resulting visions are little more than incoherent babble, some share at least a few particulars. A thread of consistency speaks of a space inhabited by vast entities immersed in contemplations so alien that reality itself warps and changes in their presence. Lethal contradictions and toxic natural laws are born at whim only to dissolve like vapor to make way for newer, more insane dreams.

Another ongoing theme of the visions describes the Far Realm as a solid mass of translucent, onion-like skins. The stacked layers are pierced with free-floating bone-white rivers, and seepages of blue slime that dissolve all they touch. Elsewhere, gelatinous worms wend through the folds using writhing cilia and lichenlike encrustations. No air or atmosphere exists in the Far Realm. It is one immeasurable, semisolid amoebic sea.

Vast shapes drift at the edge of sight through the realm's substance, blurrily reminiscent of creatures from the deepest sea trenches of the mortal world. Many of the blurry forms are as large as cities—and those are the small ones.

Thankfully, this realm of madness only rarely touches the rational world. The Far Realm is not normally a place one can visit, and its terrible, insane influences are infrequent in the world. When these rare intrusions occur, the warping pressure of the Far Realm transmutes previously inert substances. This blending of realities results in horrifying corruptions, disruptions, and sometimes even the birth of squiggling aberrant monstrosities.

Aberrant creatures that owe their existence to Far Realm influence include mind flayers, aboleths, beholders, and carrion crawlers. Some of these, including aboleths, are actual emigrants from the Far Realm. In truth, aboleths appear not unlike the forms their relatives still possess in the amoebic realm. Mind flayers, too, came directly from the Far Realm, though their current shape is an evolution of their original life cycle. Over time, illithids have adopted humanoid form. Many other aberrant creatures are not truly native to the Far Realm, but instead exist as the result of bizarre, deranged emanations that skewed the natural processes of the world and produced truly monstrous things.

MAK THUUM NGATHA, THE NINE-TONGUED WORM

The most powerful Far Realm entities are comparable to deities or primordials in their power. Mak Thuum Ngatha is one such creature, a being venerated by a handful of alien scholars, cultists, and little-known aberrant races. No being outside the Far Realm could say what Mak Thuum Ngatha's desires or goals might be, but they are inimical to every living creature in the mortal world. Other Far Realm entities of similar power exist, each with their own small groups of mad followers, but the Nine-Tongued Worm is the best-known of this dangerous and obscure pantheon.

THE PLANE OF DREAMS

When a creature sleeps, the theory goes, its mind engages in the same sort of work deities performed when the world was new—an act of imaginative creation. Without the raw material of the Elemental Chaos to shape, though, these dreams exist only as thought-stuff, ideas given only the shadow of substance. To those few visitors who find their way to the Plane of Dreams, though, the environment is as real as any other world.

The Plane of Dreams (sometimes just called Dream) is a vast repository where dreams go when they are dreamt, a realm formed by millions of creative minds over the past ages of the world. The outer edges of the plane are where the newest dreams take shape, and the plane's deepest heart holds the dreams of ancient beings. Some claim that visitors to the outer edges of the plane can influence the dreams of creatures who are sleeping at that moment.

The exact nature of the plane is a matter of some debate. Some claim that it's a demiplane, standing outside the fabric of the cosmos and yet somehow connected to it all. Others argue that it's an astral dominion, long abandoned by whatever ancient deity created it—and it seems true that most travelers who stumble into Dream reach it through the Astral Sea.

Because it is formed of dreams, much of the Plane of Dreams seems familiar and normal to visitors. Its natural laws display the whimsy of the sleeping mind, though, and both landscapes and creatures can change suddenly from one thing to another. Disparate terrain features lie in a jumble together, and a house might suddenly become an open desert—or a completely different house—without warning or reason.

Nightmare is a constant undercurrent in the Plane of Dreams. As often as not, a sudden transformation in the plane is a turn for the worse—a gentle rain turns to searing acid, an innocent child becomes a vampire or a tentacled monster. Events and creatures in Dream often induce fear out of proportion to their actual threat, imposing powers or effects with the fear keyword on visitors. Powers might also work in unexpected ways, and affinities for different power keywords might manifest randomly and change frequently in Dream.

Most creatures in the Plane of Dreams are formed from dreams, just like the terrain and environment are. However, many visitors are drawn to the plane because of the knowledge contained in its echoes of dreams. Servants of Vecna comb the plane for secrets, and spies from the information-brokers of Sigil sift through the most recent dreamscapes for information useful to their employers. Minions of Orcus search the ruins of ancient dreams for a hint of the Raven Queen's long-forgotten name, and the githyanki particularly enjoy preying on visitors to the plane. Adventurers might seek a portal to Dream either to aid or to hinder such individuals.

CHAPTER 2

The Feywild

The Feywild (sometimes known as the Plane of Faerie) is a verdant, wild twin of the mortal realm. Towering forests sprawl for a thousand leagues. Perfect amber prairies roll between pristine mountain peaks soaring into the flawless clouds. Emerald, turquoise, and jade green seas crash along endless beaches. The skies are a perfect blue not seen in the mortal world—until storms come, coal-dark thunderheads boiling with fierce winds and torrential rains. In this world, arcane power thrums through every tree and rock. All existence is magical.

The creatures native to the Feywild—the enigmatic eladrin, the vicious hags, the wild dryads, and the tyrannical fomorians—are all charged with the mystic energy of this plane. Some are blessed by it, and some are warped. Like the land around them, the fey who inhabit this plane run to extremes. Good fey are noble and just, protectors of the natural world and those mortals they choose to show favor to. Evil fey are dark instinct unleashed, all blood and claw and rage. The creatures of the Feywild can be kind, cruel, noble, monstrous, and savage—often all at the same time.

This chapter explores the following aspects of the Feywild:

- Visiting the Feywild: A discussion of the primary means to reach this plane, and the planar traits of the Feywild.
- Planar Traits: How the Feywild's magic influences mortals who visit the plane, and the sorts of perils visitors might face.
- Feywild Inhabitants: A discussion of the most intriguing and notorious denizens of the plane.
- Feywild Locations: An exploration of significant locales of the Feywild, along with some creatures one might encounter in these dappled glades and ancient cities.

VISITING THE FEYWILD

The realm of faerie, full of beauty—and deadly danger

FEYWILD TRAITS
Type: Parallel plane.
Size and Shape: The Feywild is a parallel plane with dimensions and topography similar to the mortal world.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Normal.

Some eladrin sages claim that the Feywild is the dream of the natural world itself. The Feywild is in many ways indistinguishable from the natural world. However, like a dream, the Feywild is a dangerous, vibrant reflection of the familiar. The geography of the Feywild parallels that of the mortal realm, if loosely. Various mountains, rivers, and seas on the natural world are found on the Feywild. However, the distances between landmarks in the Feywild—and the landmarks themselves—are often distorted.

Mortals come to this perilous realm to tap into the arcane powers that course like unseen rivers of magic through the wild landscape. Some wish to negotiate secret knowledge from the eladrin; some battle fey who inflict their capricious cruelties on innocents in the mortal world. Others seek to plunder magic artifacts still buried in the wreckage of crystal cities abandoned by the eladrin during the war with the drow. The dizzying forests, storm-kissed seas, and cloud-sheathed granite peaks of the Feywild hold countless mysteries for those with both the courage and cunning to survive.

Reaching the Feywild

The Feywild is unique in that it is the only plane commonly reached by accident. In the wild places of the world fey crossings—points where the barrier between the Feywild and the mortal world is thin—lie sleeping in hidden glades or brood under mist-wreathed hills. More than a few mortals have strayed into fey crossings on the wrong day of the year or at the wrong moment of the day only to find themselves stranded in the world of the fey.

Over the centuries, the eladrin (and others) improved many naturally occurring fey crossings to create a number of reliable portals between the Feywild and the world. Such portals are marked by ancient standing stones, knee-high obelisks covered in ancient runes, groves of trees planted in a deliberate arrangement, or even circles of toadstools. Some fey crossings are as small as a single narrow archway between two menhirs, and others are sylvan glades the size of cities. Many of these sites have been abandoned. Their magic only slumbers deeply, waking when conditions are right or when ancient elven words of passage coax them to life.

Fey crossings can normally be activated one of two ways: a key phrase coded to that particular crossing point or the use of the Fey Passage ritual. As befits their connection to such a wild plane, some portals activate randomly or when certain specific conditions are met, such as when the right lunar phase occurs or the sun hits a certain angle through just the right trees. When a fey crossing activates through random or through rare but normal occurrences, creatures often pass through these open portals without even noticing the transition to the Feywild. A few fey crossings remain permanently open. These occur in the deepest forests of the world, places where the mortal world and the Feywild achieve the greatest harmonic convergence.

Fey crossings in the mortal world are surrounded in local legends. Old stories warn that encounters with fey are fraught with peril. People who wander into the Feywild return changed, and some never return at all. For alert adventurers, such tales are clues to a long-lost passage to the wondrous, savage world of the fey. A forest with a reputation for locals disappearing in it may indeed be home to savage beasts—or perhaps folks who walk between two twin trees atop a hill deep in the woods at moonrise leave one world for the next.

The second method of travel across to the Feywild is through a worldfall. Worldfall occurs when the ebb and flow of planar energy allows a huge tract of land from one plane to shift to the other. Eladrin cities often "ride" worldfalls, suddenly appearing in the mortal world in a flash of sunlight and scattered flowers. To travel to the Feywild, all a traveler need do is enter the gates of such an eladrin city while it rests in the mortal plane and then wait within until the city returns to the Feywild.

Each worldfall is different. An eladrin city may appear regular as clockwork or once a century. The city of Shinaelestra shifts into the world every midnight, replacing a glade deep in the Howling Forest, then shifts back to the Feywild just before dawn. The towers of Astrazalian remain on the hillsides of a fair green island all spring and summer, fading into the Feywild with the coming of autumn and winter.

Travelers in the Feywild must first pit themselves against the riotous wild growth and rugged terrain in the plane. The plane has few marked paths, and no more than a handful of roads.

If lucky adventurers discover a river to guide their travels, they may soon find themselves at the top of a mile-high waterfall. As they pick their way down the slick stone cliffs, the spray from the falls soaks them as thoroughly as a summer shower. By the time choking sulfurous fog rolls in off the hag bogs, any illusions the visitors might have that they've stumbled into an idyllic natural paradise are long, long gone.

The unreliable geography of the Feywild only adds to travelers' woes. As noted, landmarks in the mortal world have echoes in the Feywild. The natural landmarks are often exaggerated versions of their material world counterparts. Mountain peaks are higher, sharper, more treacherous. Rivers that meander through the human world roar through the Feywild. Seas crash with waves driven by eldritch storms far offshore.

Built landmarks in the mortal world, such as cities, are nothing more than a hunting camp or even a small clearing in the Feywild forests. Even more maddening, distances between Feywild locales can even vary depending on which direction one is traveling. The trip from the eladrin outpost of Aedonni to the Council Warren takes three days less than the trip from the Council Warren to Aedonni. Absolutely no one who makes the trip can explain why.

Powerful forces are at work here, struggling for mastery of the Feywild. Eladrin archfey are not above using hapless interlopers as pawns in their convoluted court intrigues. The eladrin nobles themselves are caught up in an endless feud against the lords of the Feydark (the fey Underdark), the evil-eyed giant fomorians. As these races battle across the Feywild, beings from more exotic planes execute complex plans to usurp control of this plane's limitless font of magical energy.

LEY LINES

Arcane power churns through the Feywild along ancient, hidden paths known as ley lines. Some believe ley lines are the threads holding the fabric of the world intact, stitching one plane to the next. Ley lines in the Feywild have counterparts in the mortal realm, places of power that are often the sites of fey crossings. Indeed, following a ley line on either plane is often an excellent way to discover a lost fey crossing.

Places where ley lines intersect or terminate are highly magical. A character performing a ritual with the key skill of Arcana or Nature in such a place gains a +2 bonus to any skill check called for in the ritual. The ritual's component cost is also reduced to 75% of the normal cost. (Magic permeating the area improves the efficacy of the ritual components.)

The Bright Beauty

Setting aside the dangers posed by the creatures of the Feywild, new arrivals must also cope with stunning new sensory experiences. The tangible presence of magic in the Feywild is like nothing ever experienced on the mortal world. The flowers of the Feywild give off perfumes that entrance unwary humans, and the stench of the Murk Sea can overwhelm the hardiest warrior. The powerful magic suffusing the entire plane makes everything, for lack of a better word, intensely real. Natives call this effect the Bright Beauty. Colors are more vivid, smells more pungent. Light doesn't scatter as it should. Every sight, sound, smell, and taste has a sharper edge. As with most things in the Feywild, this effect can be a blessing and a curse. A simple shaft of sunlight in the Feywild can appear to be a divine sculpture of glimmering light, filling the viewer with inspiration. But the depthless shadows of the fomorian dungeons are equally vivid, and so drive a lost adventurer into mind-shattering panic.

The Bright Beauty has a further effect on sentient creatures. Blood responds to the enchantment of the Feywild. Just as the native creatures of the Fey embody extremes of passion and power, visitors begin to behave as pure, truer versions of themselves. Bold heroes become reckless, friends become lovers, and rivalries devolve into knife fights. Although adventurers never lose control, they must constantly fight the Feywild's call to the wild, the free, and unrestrained within.

Fey Demesnes

Within the Feywild are places referred to as fey demesnes, which typically manifest in locations where two or more ley lines meet (see the "Ley Lines" sidebar). A fey demesne attunes itself to the most powerful denizen that dwells within its boundaries (usually but not necessarily a fey creature), altering its environs to reflect the mood or disposition of that creature. For example, a demesne inhabited by a heartless death hag might be rimed with perpetual frost, while a tower inhabited by a mad goblin mage might be overgrown with twitching, grasping vines of some unnatural hue.

Demesnes do not form empathic links with the creatures to which they attune themselves, and such creatures exhibit no direct control over their environs. For example, storm clouds might gather above the palace of an eladrin king whenever he's moved to anger, and only when his spirits are lifted do the clouds disperse.

FEYWILD INHABITANTS

In the early days of the Feywild, wild magic swirled through the primal forest, giving birth to countless beasts that were more an extension of nature than inhabitants of it. Some deities found the bright splendor of the place more fitting for their creations, and so fantastic variants of mortal creatures were turned loose under the eternal green shade. Few truly dumb beasts reside in the Plane of Faerie. Most creatures are gifted with some sliver of intelligence, even if nothing more than a malign cunning.

The intelligent races do their best to bend the Feywild to their will. The main rivals attempting to rule the Feywild are the eladrin in their shining cities and the fomorians in their subterranean fortresses. Other races lurk at the edges of the conflict, and the unpredictable character of the fey keeps the balance of power fluid. When dealing with politics in the Plane of Faerie, only one thing is certain: Half of what seems to be true isn't.

LUCIO PARRILLO

Archfey

The most powerful of fey spirits are godlike avatars of their chosen aspect of nature. Some are noble eladrin so old and powerful that they have transcended the bounds of mortality, such as Tiandra, the Summer Queen, or the Prince of Frost. Some are the awakened spirits of mighty forests, mountains, or rivers, such as the Green Lord Oran or Scamander, the guardian spirit of the river of the same name. Others are the sentient incarnations of different types of animals, such as the Cat Lord or the Monkey King. A few archfey are fey of other races who have achieved great age and power—for example, the hag Baba Yaga or the satyr prince Hyrsam. Few of these beings are as strong as a deity or even a demon lord, but within their own demesnes, few other entities could hope to best them.

Archfey range from kindly to malicious and from compassionate to uncaring. Most are perilous for mortals to deal with, but others find mortal heroes fascinating and sometimes favor them with gifts of power or knowledge. In general, the archfey are absorbed in their own rivalries, intrigues, and old enmities. They work at cross-purposes with each other, although the most powerful archfey govern factions of like-minded fey.

The Court of Stars

Several times a year, at no set schedule, the archfey and their allies gather for a parliament and bacchanalia, merging their royal courts into one great congress. They spend the time negotiating, feasting,

WARLOCK FEY PACTS

Fey pacts are a common source of power for warlocks. Each pact is a relationship, a bargain with a specific archfey. How a pact is made differs. Some warlocks are mentored by older warlocks, and then pledge to the mentor's patron. Mortals who wander into the Feywild and survive its trials are sometimes rewarded with a bargain for the amusement they've brought one of the archfey. Still others are approached on the mortal world by archfey or their representatives to strike the bargain. The archfey have their own mysterious agendas in the world of humans, and warlocks so empowered often prove themselves useful to their fey patrons.

The personal nature of this relationship adds flavor to a warlock's powers. If a warlock gains his or her magic through a pact with the Summer Queen, his spells look and sound different from boons granted by the Maiden of the Moon. At the DM's discretion, a warlock who sees another warlock use his or her powers may attempt a DC 25 Arcana check to guess the identity of the other warlock's archfey patron.

scheming, marrying, and betraying each other. The collected court has no true leader, but it is hosted by the archfey known as the Summer Queen. The eladrin call this assembly the Court of Stars.

Over the centuries the signatories to the Court of Stars have aligned themselves into factions. These vie for influence in the Court, which translates into arcane power and territory out in the Feywild. Most archfey and their followers count themselves as members of more than one faction, often supporting rival forces when it suits their purposes. Despite this chaotic mix of power, allegiances, ambition, and treachery, open conflict is rare in the Court of Stars. Favor is won through clever wordplay, duels using proxies, and ever-shifting schemes. Adventurers make useful cat's-paws for eladrin nobles.

Separate from the eladrin archfey factions, the remainder of the Court of Stars is composed of attendant faeries, ambassadors from other fey races, centaur chieftains, and various interplanar hangers-on. Many creatures attending the Court have worked for decades to gain enough influence to seek an audience with the Summer Queen. Some of these attendants from other lands have gone native. They have forgotten their original missions, and they now live out their days in the wondrous, intoxicating beauty of the Feywild.

The Summer Fey

Tiandra, the Summer Queen, is one of the mightiest of the archfey. With a smile, she can ripen a crop, and with a frown, summon wildfires. Noble eladrin infused with the spirit of summer, count themselves as her barons. Other spirits of growth and good favor follow her banner. Her court and its followers are known as the Summer Fey.

Tiandra appears as an eladrin of great beauty, with honey-colored skin and hair that shimmers through all the colors of autumn leaves. Her eyes shine golden, like the sun. Her gaze alone can drive people mad.

The Summer Queen's Court, in the palace of Senaliesse, is a reflection of her unearthly beauty, and the court can appear frivolous. Fairies flit at her side. Every inch of her throne room is decorated with flowers, fountains, and fine silks. This vivid and rich sensual imagery is all merely a distraction from her fierce intelligence. Tiandra is a master strategist, both in the Court intrigues and on the battlefield. She also possesses an odd, dry sense of humor and a surprising streak of pragmatism.

Tiandra has an amused fondness for mortals. She craves the unpredictability and urgency instilled by their brief life span. She commands performances by mortal playwrights and commissions poems from poets who strike her fancy. She even goes so far as to take the occasional mortal lover. These relationships have tempered in her the disdain most archfey carry for mortals. She is nominally less fickle in her dealings with mortals than most other powerful fey. The Summer Queen has granted favors to those who serve her well.

The Green Fey

Oran, the Green Lord, is the greatest of the archfey of nature. He could be mistaken for an elf, albeit one a head taller and far more muscular than any other elf in existence. Oran's wild eyes are jet black and set in a rugged face the color of oak. His thatched hair is a mess of brambles and long braids. As a hunter and woodland warrior he is unrivaled. It is said even the god Corellon regards him with a cautious respect. Oran is attuned to every branch and bough, every stream in every forest of the Feywild. In addition to elves who dwell in the Feywild, he has the loyalty of many treants, dryads, and satyrs. Those fey who pledge fealty to Lord Oran are known as the Green Fey.

If Oran has one weakness, it is the wild nature of his heart. He can fall sway to mood swings as violent as thunderstorms. His relationship with Tiandra, for example, is legendary. It was Oran who sculpted Tiandra's palace of Senaliesse. Over the centuries, they have been lovers, they have been deadly rivals—and once, for two hundred years or so, they managed to be both at the same time. The fey of the Court often try to win favor by supporting one regent or the other in these times of romantic turbulence. At the present, the relationship of Oran and Tiandra is that of passionate friendship. Lord Oran is aware of his impetuous nature, and he values Tiandra's cool intellect to temper his decisions. They often act in tandem when the Court of Stars is in session, particularly on matters of security and warfare.

Although Lord Oran is the most powerful of the Green Fey, many other perilous archfey also belong to this faction.

The Winter Fey

The fey lords who choose the path of winter—of deadly cold, biting ice, and blinding snow—are known as the Winter Fey. Although they have no true leader, the most powerful and ruthless of the lot is the Prince of Frost. When he bothers to convene his allies of the long night, his faction is known as the Winter Court.

Narrow of build, pale, and light-haired, the Prince of Frost has a smile that does not warm. He is not unnecessarily cruel, but he has not an ounce of mercy in his heart. He allies with other archfey only when facing the direst of threats. The Prince of Frost prefers to deal with his enemies quickly and viciously, with little regard for collateral damage. For some inscrutable reason, the Prince of Frost holds mortals in utter contempt. Although he appears content for now to rule his lands in the Feywild, rumors constantly circulate that he plots to freeze the entire mortal world into one long, eternal glacial age.

The Sea Lords

Merfolk and other aquatic fey collectively assemble in the Court of Coral. The fey of the rivers and oceans bow to the will of the eladrin archfey known as the Sea Lords. Elias and Siobhan Alastai are brother and sister, eladrin who only a few centuries ago achieved a level of power elevating them to the archfey. Because of their recent elevation, they are less emotionally detached than many of the archfey. They are, if not approachable, at least not as terrifying as many of the other great nobles of the Court of Stars. Strangely, few eladrin manifest the aspect of nature related to the waters of the world, and the Sea Lords rule a council made up primarily of powerful noneladrin races native to the deep lakes and oceans.

Elias claims as his domain the shallows—the rivers, the lakes, even the shoreline reefs of the Feywild. His rulership of this domain brings him in constant contact with races who live along the strands. He considers their welfare a testimony to his mastery of the sea elements, and he is quick to aid his subjects if he senses unnatural dangers approaching. Elias is quick to laugh and loves music.

Siobhan is the more melancholy of the two. She rules the deep oceans and rarely leaves her underwater city, preferring to let Elias act as their ambassador to the Court of Stars when necessary. She considers herself the guardian of the ocean and all the deep places beneath it. Like the ocean waters she roams, Siobhan is slow to anger, but when she does, her wrath drowns entire lands. She can summon hurricanes, waterspouts, and tidal waves when her interests are threatened. Although Tiandra, Oran, and the Prince of Frost are considered the most powerful of the archfey, none of them has yet tested Siobhan at her full strength.

The Gloaming Fey

Sparked by the arcane influence within the Feywild, some archfey manifest more abstract qualities than seasons or living nature. Many are associated with dreams, darkness, stars, twilight, dusk, and other such nocturnal phenomena, and so they are collectively known as the Gloaming Fey. Although equal in power to the other courts, these archfey keep their own counsel. They are composed of a loose league, rather than a proper faction, but when the Court of Stars is in session, they band together during court intrigues.

The most well known of the Gloaming Fey is the Maiden of the Moon. She is a formidable hunter who carries a silver sword said to be able to cut through nightmares. The Maiden of the Moon wages a private war against lycanthropes and other savage killers, and she is considered benevolent toward mortals. Although she has many hunting camps in the Feywild, one in particular is a portal to her own private sanctuary on the shining moon above.

The Prince of Hearts is an eladrin archfey dedicated to the principles of beauty, gallantry, and love. One cannot be too careful around the Prince of Hearts. He has been known to grant boons to any who aid him in uniting true lovers separated by circumstance. At other times, the fire of unrequited love best suits his aspect. The Prince of Hearts sometimes meddles in the lives of mortals he believes should be in love, attempting to drive them together. If the unlucky pair dislike each other to begin with, he finds the attempt even more delightful.

Honor Among Fey

All fey can be capricious at times and dangerous when provoked. Most fey societies, however, have elaborate social codes and forms of etiquette, rules that govern every aspect of behavior. One significant ethical distinction among the largely unaligned fey is how they apply their rules to mortals and other nonfey.

Many among the eladrin and their fey allies respect mortals who can navigate their rules, treating them with honor as they would other fey. By carefully negotiating the complex politics of these fey, mortals can find a welcome reception and (sometimes) safe passage back to the world. These fey make and keep bargains with mortals who show proper deference and respect, use correct titles and forms of address, and play by the same rules the fey do.

Other fey, however, don't apply their rules to outsiders. As far as these fey are concerned, nonfey are vulgar dupes or trifling amusements to be toyed with and disposed of. Fomorians respect only their own kind, showing no honor even to other fey. If these fey make bargains with mortals, it is only to trap the mortals in bets they can't win or promises they can't fulfill. These fey show no hesitation in breaking their bargains if the mortals find unexpected loopholes.

Some mortals use the term "seelie fey" to mean those fey who respect their bargains with mortals, and "unseelie fey" to refer to fomorians and other fey that are hostile to mortals, but those terms are meaningless to the residents of the Feywild themselves. Worse, it's dangerous to make any assumptions about a particular fey's disposition toward mortals based on an association with one of the archfey courts or any other generalization. Every archfey court consists of fey that might be considered both seelie and unseelie, though the Summer Fey and the Sea Lords are generally friendlier to mortals than the Winter Fey are. Even among the fomorians, a few do show honor and respect to mortals—particularly to evil mortals who make clear demonstrations of power.

A darker archfey affiliated with this faction is the Witch of Fates, a powerful oracle whose pronouncements spell doom. At the height of Cendriane's might and glory, the Witch of Fates appeared clad in the black of mourning to speak a dreadful prophecy against the city. She seems moved to lay low the proud and powerful, but sometimes elevates virtuous people in wretched circumstances. Any folk who toil for a lost if noble cause may find in her a terrifying patron.

Eladrin

Eladrin are the "people" of the Feywild. Their cities are collections of sweeping, graceful crystal towers married effortlessly to the local landscape. These cities all predate the war with the drow, and many were ravaged during that conflict. Eladrin walk among ancient corridors and avenues layered with millennia of silent history. They are, to a great degree, haunting their own cities. Only now are the eladrin truly attempting to reclaim some of these shattered metropolises. Repair and resettlement is uneven. The spires of Astrazalian soar higher than ever, but Cendriane remains a melancholy ruin.

Each settlement is a city-state unto itself because the settlements are scattered at great distances across the Feywild. The cities sporadically attempt to create formal alliances, but none of the alliances are strong or of a long-lasting nature. Both the distances involved and the eladrin character run counter to such efforts.

As is commonly known, the foundation of eladrin society is the extended family, or House. Although most eladrin spend decades of their youth in one of the isolated stone and crystal cities dotting the endless shadow of the Feywild forest, an eladrin's true allegiance is to his or her House and its nobles. Those nobles in turn often swear allegiance to one of the eladrin archfey. The eladrin archfey are titular monarchs only. Although Tiandra is regarded as queen by many eladrin, she only rules in Senaliesse, and even then she governs only when she has to.

Firbolgs

Firbolgs are nocturnal hunters, and the greatest among them are referred to as Masters of the Wild Hunt. Relentless in their pursuit of enemies and game, they are not above hunting other sentient creatures, particularly trespassers in firbolg lands. Not every firbolg hunt results in the death of the prey, for it is the hunt itself that gives meaning to these creatures.

Firbolg settlements are small and remote, consisting of simple yet defensible lodges integrated with the surrounding wilderness. Many such villages are perched atop precarious cliffs or built atop floating motes of rock. Territorial disputes among firbolg clans are frequent. It takes a powerful common enemy to unite feuding clans, and such alliances rarely last once the common threat is overcome.

Firbolgs rarely involve themselves in the court intrigues of the eladrin and fomorians, although some firbolg clans will accept payment from an eladrin or fomorian monarch who needs help hunting down an elusive threat. Firbolg warriors occasionally show up in eladrin cities and fomorian strongholds to pay modest tribute to a king or queen. Such tribute usually comes in the form of a hunted beast carcass or a captured criminal.

Fomorians

Beneath the lush green hills of the Feywild sprawls the fey echo of the mortal world's Underdark—the Feydark. In this terrifying maze of black tunnels and mystic caverns, the malformed giants known as the fomorians rule with absolute tyranny over their vast underground kingdoms. Fomorians wield monstrous magical power. Few in either the Feywild or the mortal realm are their match. If the fomorians could set aside their quarrels, they would be a mighty force for conquest. Fortunately, this dreadful prospect is unlikely, since most fomorians loathe others of their kind along with most beings who are not fomorians. Ironically, this flaw is a direct side effect of the fomorians' powerful arcane abilities. The fell energy these monsters command inflicts endless pain on them and slowly drives them mad.

Every fomorian ruler tolerates his or her own immediate clan as members in his or her court—but barely that. Mates and offspring are even seen as nothing more than necessary rivals. It is often just a matter of time before a fomorian drives off or murders his or her family. Fomorian clans employ large spy networks against both neighboring powers and their own subjects. The only creatures fomorians trust are the cyclopses. Cyclopses serve the fomorians as advisors, master artisans, and spymasters.

As damaging as this madness and hatred are to any chance of a united fomorian kingdom, they serve each individual king or queen well. The suspicion of the fomorian ruler suffuses his or her entire kingdom. Insurrection is quashed in infancy, as subjects desperate to curry favor with their monarch—or at the least, to escape the next inevitable purge—inform against each other at the slightest provocation. Outsiders rarely find allies among the cowed and treacherous subjects of a fomorian ruler.

The monarchs of the fomorians rule from massive underground strongholds maintained by their cunning cyclops servants. Most of these fortresses lie in huge underground caverns in the Feydark. Rough iron walls rise from floor to ceiling, and slit windows peer out from squat turrets. Guards patrol both the approaching tunnels and ramparts along these walls. Peat farms and mushroom forests, tended by serfs bound to the fomorian lord, surround the fortress. This dismal mockery of pastoral lands can extend far away from the stronghold. Fomorians regularly claim dominion over tracts of land a hundred leagues in diameter, but for all practical purposes, they rule only the area within a few hours' march of their strongholds.

Within the iron ramparts of the typical fomorian fortress lies a filthy, warrenlike town of servants and slaves. Feydark monsters thrive in these cities, consuming the offal of the urban filth. Brisk trade in provisions and slaves fills the stalagmite-rimmed marketplaces.

Most fomorian strongholds feature an inner keep or sanctum guarded by many thick iron doors. The fomorian ruler of the kingdom can be found within ruling over a perverse court of cruelty and guarded by fanatically devoted cyclopses and quickling assassins. Although many fomorians have been destroyed while assaulting eladrin cities or traveling the tunnels of the Feydark, few have ever been defeated within the walls of one of their sanctuaries.

Fomorians without a kingdom scheme to usurp some fellow giant's throne. In this unceasing struggle, fomorian rulers seek any advantage they can find, especially magical power. They often raid eladrin cities to plunder the eladrin vaults of magic items. A fomorian monarch even occasionally grants safe passage to adventurers who have arcane artifacts with which to bargain.

Because of their rivalries, fomorians have no central court organizing or ruling over all their kingdoms. The madness afflicting the evil giants means that even the individual kingdoms do not share a common character or temperament. Each fomorian family rules its Feydark fortress with jealous isolation and wildly varying temperament.

Goblins

Goblins are not fey, but they are hardy, fast breeding, and well established in the rugged corners of the Feywild. Over the course of centuries, goblin armies from the mortal world have established many strongholds in the Feywild. Although few last for long, the goblins who survive the fall of such kingdoms linger on for generations as bloodthirsty tribes of bandits, and some of those bandit tribes eventually seize enough territory to become full-fledged goblin kingdoms again. At this point in time, wicked goblin lords lurk in the dark shadows of the Feywild. They terrorize all who pass within striking distance of their fierce armies.

Goblins readily form alliances with the darker denizens of the Feywild, including fomorians, hags, evil druids, and lycanthropes. They often clash with eladrin and gnomes, since goblins raid the realms of these folk whenever they can. The goblins who dwell in the Feywild often command more magic than their counterparts in the mortal world, and many goblin monarchs are skilled warlocks or wizards.

Gnomes

The gnomes occupy a hazardous middle ground in the Feywild—literally. Between the eladrin in their towers and the fomorians in their underground fortresses, the gnomes build their warrens in the hills and forests. These warrens are hidden among the tree roots by cunning illusions. Adventurers often stroll right through the public square of such a settlement without even breaking step, much to the amusement of the gnomes.

For centuries, each gnome warren made its own way in the wilderness. With the rise of the fomorians, the warren councils realized they needed some sort of cooperation between communities. However, gnomes are tricksters—self-reliant and naturally suspicious folk. Good governance is not a priority. Reaching agreement on exactly how any sort of confederation might work proved elusive.

Finally the Gnome Council was formed. It is a pure meritocracy, composed of the gnomes cleverest in battle, most skilled in magic, or most subtle in politics. (The gnomes arrived upon this system out of necessity rather than idealism. Gnomes so love to argue that all other forms of republic stalled in endless debate.) Any gnome who accomplishes great deeds can be nominated to the Council. Those gnome heroes currently sitting on the Council then decide whether to accept the nominee to their ranks. Many gnome adventurers in the mortal world are attempting to establish themselves as heroes worthy enough to take a seat at the oak table in the Council Warren.

Once a gnome is judged worthy of a seat on the Council, it is his or hers for life. No gnome can ever stand still for too long, though, and Council members in particular are the adventuring type. When the group meets in its warren, any Council members present at the time attend the assembly. The Council is considered complete whether five or fifty gnomes attend.

The Gnome Council is led by Karl Stoneshine, a master of illusion who adventured for years in the mortal realm. The Council under Stoneshine is singularly concerned with the survival of the gnome warrens. Adventurers who aid the gnomes find themselves with grimly amusing allies in the Feywild. Actions that could be interpreted in any way as opposing to the gnomes earn undying enmity.

The entire race of gnomes once labored in servitude to the fomorians, and fomorians still enjoy hunting and even eating gnomes. Most gnomes hold fomorians more in fear than in hatred, striving to avoid the terrible giants and their cyclops vassals. When pressed, gnomes use deadly traps and illusions to attack the fomorians and defend their own communities. Gnomes also dislike goblins, who are fond of raiding gnome villages.

Gnomes are on cordial, if strained, terms with the eladrin. Gnome jocularity puts them at odds with eladrin cool arrogance. In short, gnomes consider the eladrin insufferably stuck up and nowhere near as clever as they believe themselves to be. Gnomes are not above "liberating" magic items or ancient documents from eladrin cities if the Council deems it necessary for the welfare of the warrens. One gnome habit in particular sets eladrin teeth on edge: The gnomes have found a way to trigger fey crossings at will. Even more startling, some gnomes are able to transport themselves from one fey crossing in the Feywild to another—an ad hoc teleportation system. The gnomes refuse to reveal how they trigger the fey crossings in this way.

FEYWILD LOCALES

What follows are some of the better-known landmarks dotting the forests and mountains of the Feywild.

Astrazalian, the City of Starlight

This magnificent eladrin city is the showpiece of the eladrin lands. Appearing on the hillsides of a green island of the mortal realm for fully half of every year, it is the fey realm most well known to mortals.

ASTRAZALIAN

A town of white towers and winding streets on the hills of a fair green isle, Astrazalian exists in the mortal world during spring and summer and passes back to the Feywild in fall and winter.

Population: 8,900, plus an additional 5,000 or so who live in small estates or watchtowers elsewhere on the isle. Most are eladrin, although a small number of elves and half-elves also reside here. Visitors of all the civilized races can be found in Astrazalian when it exists in the mortal world.

Government: Lady Shandria is the First Sword of the city, appointed to her position by the Council of Houses. The Council is made up of the heads of each of the eladrin Houses in Astrazalian.

Defenses: The Sword Guard is the city's primary fighting force, a regiment of 600 eladrin soldiers. Astrazalian's harbor also shelters a small fleet of five warships.

Inns: House of Solace; White Poplar; Swan House. The White Poplar is the largest, and caters to travelers from the mortal world.

Taverns: Laughing Gull; Moon and Stars; Lantern Tree. The latter is a large white oak tree with scores of lanterns above the tables set up under its branches.

Supplies: Star and Dolphin Coster; Aramath Teldorm. Aramath is an eladrin swordsmith and armorer of great renown.

Temples: Tower of Stars (Corellon); Temple of the Lady (Sehanine); Tower of Pearl (Melora).

Most of the eladrin Houses have a representative living in Astrazalian. Trade and treasure pour through the gates as mortal supplicants flood the city every summer. These resources, combined with the semiannual respites from the dangers of the Feywild, allow the eladrin within to rebuild Astrazalian at their leisure. It is one of the few eladrin cities with new towers rising alongside ancient spires. Giant white swans pull delicate boats along the docksides. The goods of many nations are sold among the brightly bannered stalls of the market. A particularly puissant magic university teaches students within the city's walls. Eladrin wizards of Astrazalian have the broadest exposure to mortal spellcraft, trading their own lore for secrets unknown in the Feywild. This vibrant combination has given rise to truly powerful new arcane arts.

Astrazalian is ruled by Lady Shandria, an eladrin warlord. Lady Shandria is a distant niece of Queen Tiandra. As a result, the Summer Queen's Court holds sway here. Some find it odd that a warrior has been placed in charge of Astrazalian when a diplomat would seem better suited to the task. Indeed, Lady Shandria obviously chafes at the role. Though this posting seems odd, Shandria rules here because although Astrazalian's locale in the mortal realm is tranquil, the location it occupies when it returns to the Feywild every fall and winter is hideously dangerous.

In the Feywild, Astrazalian is within striking distance of the fomorian borderlands. All the eladrin cities closer to the fomorian territories have already fallen. Astrazalian is a fat, shining prize waiting to be plucked. The fomorians do not just covet the gold and magic items lining Astrazalian's vaults, however. The prospect of an entire city from which to launch a conquering army against the mortal realm is intoxicating for the power-mad fomorians. The giants barely keep from jealously tearing each other apart between assaults on Astrazalian's walls. Any mortals who return to the Feywild with Astrazalian find themselves in a constant state of siege from the moment the city fades back into existence.

As terrifying as this prospect is, opportunities abound for the fearless and foolhardy. Lady Shandria often assigns hazardous tasks to mortal sellswords rather than risk losing any of her valuable garrison troops. To gain the favor of Shandria is to gain the favor of the Summer Queen. Service to Astrazalian can earn mortals rare magical boons, favors from eladrin scholars, or even shave decades off the time required to petition for an audience with the Court of Stars.

Brokenstone Vale

Lycanthropy does not originate in the Feywild, but lycanthropes have a special bond with nature, and many roam the forests, hills, and dales of this plane. Hated, feared, and hunted in every corner of the mortal realm, some lycanthropes have forsaken that plane to dwell in a forest domain deep in the shadows of a mountain pass: Brokenstone Vale. Centuries ago a werewolf lord forged a kingdom of werebeasts here and fought a fierce war against the neighboring eladrin realms. After decades of strife and bloodshed, the Court of Stars conceded to the lycanthropes the lands they'd conquered. Old stone posts on the far side of a river that winds across the vale's mouth mark the agreed-upon border. Travelers who pass them take their lives into their hands, for Brokenstone is a place where lycanthropes can roam freely.

Living in the Feywild as a lycanthrope is a double-edged sword. On one hand, the moon here is much greater and much brighter in the sky, stoking the werebeasts' bloodlust to giddy new heights of savagery. On the other hand, that same moon is sacred to the archfey called the Maiden of the Moon. She abides by the ancient pact and does not venture within Brokenstone, but she bears a special hatred for lycanthropes, and her silver sword is the doom of any werebeast that crosses her path outside the vale.

Within the maze of forested ravines and steep hills of Brokenstone lie the ruins of old castles and towers where werebeast rulers of years gone by raised keeps or built halls. The mountainsides above that flank the vale are riddled with decrepit mines where wererats make their homes. A few of Brokenstone's lycanthropes gather in sullen clans or live among the ruins of the old rulers, but most lead solitary lives, keeping to themselves.

Although most lycanthropes here rarely bother to disguise their nature, a cluster of small lodging houses stands at the edge of Brokenstone for those who wish to walk as humans when needed. These ragged huts cling to the banks of the rushing river that defines the boundaries of the realm. The werewolf lord Viktor Mazan is the master of this place, and he maintains a brutal peace so that merchants can bring supplies and trade for rare wood harvested from within Brokenstone's hidden vales. Viktor does not allow travelers to remain long, and he sends the merchants off again as quickly as possible.

Many of Brokenstone's lycanthropes chafe at even this much restraint. Some of the werebeasts hunt far beyond the boundaries allotted to their kind long ago, risking open warfare with the eladrin again. Others have sworn fealty to a fomorian king named Bronnor whose fortress of Harrowhame lies nearby, and they plot to ambush and slay the Maiden of the Moon. The archfey are not deities, after all.

Cendriane

Once the most radiant city of the eladrin, Cendriane was the site of the longest and most vicious battle of the wars between eladrin and drow. Now the entire city-state is a dark, twisted forest, haunted by terrible specters. In the center of this wilderness lies Cendriane itself, a cursed ruin whose magnificent crystal towers stand silent and empty.

Cendriane is larger than any other eladrin city, yet is utterly abandoned by its former residents. Although many sections of Cendriane have been completely reclaimed by the forest, large swaths of the city center are devoid of life. Walking down the open streets of Cendriane, with the only sound among the intact bone-white mansions being the traveler's own footsteps, is disconcerting. No birdsong or breeze disturbs the mournful silence. These eerily preserved, museumlike areas are pockmarked by charred craters a hundred yards across. The arcane havoc that vaporized these buildings was powerful enough to scatter ten-ton shards of white stone high into the air, and many of them continue to float there, eerily silent. For explorers brave enough to scale the towers of Cendriane, it is not uncommon to force open a door some fifteen stories high and find one of these fragments jutting through the outer wall. One thing is clear: The destructive power unleashed here was unrivaled in all the Feywild.

Cendriane may be silent, but it is not empty. Giant spiders have taken up residence in many of the upper towers, spinning webs between the spires. Fey panthers lay in wait in the shadowed, shattered street-level doorways. A pack of displacer beasts stalks the Avenue of the Gods. The great Central Glade has returned to the wild, and it is now home to a particularly vicious circle of dryads. In the winding catacombs of the city, undead nest. A tragic eladrin vampire lord named Kannoth rules here, master of a bloodthirsty cult lurking beneath the earth. Some sages also believe that the creature that ravaged Cendriane was never destroyed, but instead remains imprisoned beneath the city vaults.

Despite its isolation and reputation, Cendriane sees its share of visitors. Incredible secrets were buried in Cendriane when it fell. Magic artifacts of unmatched power still lie in collapsed vaults. Maps to legendary lands sit on the shelves of the Great Library. Even the most modest dwelling in Cendriane yields treasures left behind by eladrin who fled during the holocaust. Such opportunities are too tempting for many creatures of the fey. At any given time, Cendriane may play host to small squads of drow arcanists, eladrin rangers on a rescue mission, quickling spies of a local fomorian king, and mortal adventurers, all unaware of each other as they explore the ruined, sprawling metropolis.

The Feydark

The fey parallel to the Underdark is similar to its mortal twin in many respects. Its tunnels worm through the gutrock of the world for thousands of sunless miles. Vast caverns echo with the dull roar of underground rivers. Countless creatures hunt these catacombs, and entire civilizations rise and fall among the stone pillars.

ANNE STOKES

The Feydark is different in that the magically fecund wild nature of the plane is evident even here, miles beneath the surface of the earth. Translucent, glowing purple crystals light the Feydark in an unearthly glow. Where the Underdark is bare stone, the Feydark is lined with bizarre fungi. Forests of mushrooms, as tall as a human, cling to the jagged cliffs descending deep into the earth. Waterfalls run blood red with algae that's evolved to live off the magical emanations. Poisonous blue moss lines the tunnel walls, and shock stones lodged in the onyx walls absorb travelers' torchlight and convert it into sparking electrical energy.

Many of the Feywild monsters of the surface wander among these mutant forests, along with creatures even more bizarre. Giant insects swarm through the ooze of fungus and silt, often exhibiting great intelligence. Gnomes send regular expeditions into the Feydark, searching for magical stones used in their research. Drow on missions from the mortal realm use these tunnels to travel without alerting the eladrin. Strange humanoids that can only be described as "mushroom folk" gibber and puff spores as they scurry in the shadows. However, the undisputed masters of the Feydark are, of course, the fomorians.

Harrowhame

King Bronnor, ruler of the dismal city of Harrowhame, is a typical fomorian ruler. One week, he grants pardons and sends ambassadors of peace to neighboring realms. The next, he executes suspected traitors and orders marauders and assassins to strike against his neighbors. Bronnor prefers to grow his holdings through slave trade rather than combat, and can reasonably be negotiated with during his saner moments. His realm lies near Brokenstone, the lycanthrope domain, and many lycanthropes serve him as spies and assassins in the lands above his subterranean kingdom.

The Isle of Dread

The Isle of Dread is a vast tropical island of volcanic origin set amid stormy seas. Jagged reefs guard the approach to black sand beaches. If a boat does somehow make it to the shore in one piece, its passengers then face a solid, lush green wall of tropical vines and trees. Great knifelike peaks of obsidian rise beyond the treeline. Travelers venture into that jungle at their peril. Of all the savage and secret places of the Feywild, the Isle of Dread is the most mysterious.

The entire Isle of Dread worldfalls constantly and unpredictably from the Feywild to the mortal realm—and it shifts to even stranger planes at times. Some sages argue it is everywhere at once, and some argue it is nowhere at all times. As a result of its constant travel, the Isle is populated by all manner of savage beasts. It also hosts several tiny camps of shipwrecked sentient beings. The Isle is steaming hot. Reptilian beings fare better at exploring its secrets due to the climate.

Those secrets appear to be endless. An ancient yuan-ti temple is at the center of the jungle. North of the temple, several primitive races live in splendid stone ziggurats of unknown origin. Eagle-eyed explorers can just barely make out a thin tower, a needle of phosphorescent crystal, rising from the peak of one of the central mountains. On the southern coast several bands of stranded mortals have found each other—and discovered, to their shock, they all originate from wildly different moments in history. Some have reported sighting giant, terrible lizards racing on two legs through the jungle.

Even a short sojourn to the Isle of Dread makes one thing clear: Getting to the Isle is not as difficult as one might believe. Getting off the Isle is the challenge.

Mag Tureah

The realm of Mag Tureah was an ancient underground kingdom centered around a spectacularly ornate iron fortress in the Feydark. In an odd parallel to eladrin cities' seamless blend of crystal tower and native wood, Mag Tureah's iron walls often abruptly give way to stone arches and natural tunnels. No one knows who (or what) built the fortress. Abandoned for unknown reasons by its unnamed makers, Mag Tureah lay empty for centuries. Fomorian after fomorian attempted to seize this crucial strongpoint. All were destroyed by whatever horrors stalked its maze-like corridors—until the fomorian king Thrumbolg, dubbed the First Lord, reached its dark heart. He defeated its horrible guardians, and now his empire expands inexorably from the iron towers out into the Feydark, a black tumor spreading unseen beneath the living green surface world.

On its own, the military stronghold of Mag Tureah would be the great prize of the land. But Mag Tureah has a special relationship with the mortal realm, making it valuable beyond measure. It is honeycombed with portals to the mortal world. What's more, although the Feydark sides of these portals all occur within the boundaries of the fortress, the passages to the mortal world are connected to dozens of locales scattered over thousands of miles. Mag Tureah is a hub offering access to every corner of the mortal realm.

On the mortal world, the portal sites often appear as unremarkable ruins. Explorers walk among shattered walls, marveling at the black stones, never noticing as the starry night sky above them is slowly replaced by onyx ceilings and glowing gems. By the time the travelers realize they've stumbled through a portal, it's too late. They are transported from a corridor on the surface of the mortal world to a black, unmarked tunnel a mile below the Feywild in the guts of Mag Tureah. Escape is unheard of, and if they are captured by the First Lord, death will be a blessing.

Retracing their steps rarely aids these unlucky interlopers—the magic of Mag Tureah is unstable. Whatever portal abandoned them to this lonely spot quickly dissipates. It may reappear in an hour, or a day, or never. It may change location, now accessed by a tunnel mere yards away or on the other side of the Dark River cutting through the center of the fortress. Although all the portals of Mag Tureah connect to ruins on the mortal world, they do not connect to the same ruins on every trip. This fact is all that's kept the First Lord from launching an invasion force into the mortal realm.

Thrumbolg is working furiously to master the unreliable portals of his fortress. To this end he has kidnapped arcanists from multiple realms and put them to work studying the phenomena. Several of the lesser portals have been mapped, and each can be used—with reasonable certainty—if one possesses a complex guidebook filled with multidimensional equations predicting the times, locations, and endpoints of the portal in question. Only a few copies of these guidebooks exist. They are stored in the vaults and laboratories in the heart of the fortress. It would seem suicidal to try to steal one, but the alternative is to attempt to escape Mag Tureah the hard way.

No one can explain why Mag Tureah has these properties, or why the portals are so unstable. Wizards knowledgeable in the ways of the Far Realm find disturbing similarities between these stuttering conduits and the methods by which aberrations travel the planes. Such theories put a different light on the fortress's initial abandonment. They also raise even more distressing questions about the First Lord's rule over the fortress. What if he did not so much defeat whatever lurked at the heart of Mag Tureah, but instead bargained with it?

The Lord of Mag Tureah

No fomorian bows to any other, but all grudgingly admit the mightiest among them is the tyrant Thrumbolg, commonly referred to as the Lord of Mag Tureah or the First Lord. This elusive monster has built the largest fomorian kingdom in the Feywild around the ancient iron fortress from which he rules. The First Lord has forged unlikely alliances with fey, mortals, and even beings from planes best left unnamed. Although fomorian cooperation is unheard of, Thrumbolg has twice managed to trick other kings into marching with him against unsuspecting eladrin cities. Then while the victors squabbled over the conquest, his assassins moved in. The First Lord does not overreach. He pillages his targets and retreats to the safety of his monstrous cavern kingdom.

Most eladrin refuse to take the fomorians seriously as a unified threat. Yet recently Lord Oran finds himself unable to shake a nagging thought: the terrifying prospect that the Lord of Mag Tureah is somehow, against all odds, sane.

Maze of Fathaghn

Although treants and dryads can be found throughout the forests of the Feywild, they have a mysterious agreement to protect, at all cost, one great oak tree deep in the Feywild. To do this, the dryad queen Fathaghn raised a mighty briar maze to confuse and consume any who venture too close to the sacred grove.

Adventurers traveling through the Feywild who enter the maze of Fathaghn might first notice that the undergrowth around them is too thick to cut through, though—what luck!—a worn path leads them through the briars. As they continue on, the trees surrounding them grow closer and closer together. Before they know it, the forest has aligned into impenetrable walls of wood and briar. The path they follow twists and turns, splits and wanders. Just as the adventurers recognize a malign intelligence at work, the dryads strike.

It is possible to escape from Fathaghn's maze with patience and luck. The dryads use hit-and-run tactics that are anchored around treants taken root within the maze itself. If explorers stay on the move, they can keep from being surrounded. Eventually their flight will lead them away from the sacred oak at the center of the maze. When their path leads them farther away from the oak, the intensity of the dryad attacks lessens. Perceptive adventurers can use this response to gauge direction within the maze and find an exit.

Alternatively, they may decide to press forward and find the oak the dryads are protecting. Legend has it Queen Fathaghn is protecting the Mother Tree—the ancient tree from which all green fey races originally sprang. Anyone who fashions a staff from the wood of this tree could conceivably control any plant fey or even transport himself or herself from tree to tree in a manner similar to dryads. But the abilities of the oak wood—and its provenance as coming from a mythical Mother Tree—are no more than legends, and legends are thin things indeed to stake one's life upon.

Mithrendain, the Autumn City

Once a great fortress of Cendriane, Mithrendain has blossomed into a beautiful eladrin forest-city whose buildings seem to grow naturally around the trees. However, Mithrendain has a dark secret: The central sections of the city are built atop a now-sealed tunnel that leads to the Feydark. Armies of the fomorian kings once invaded the surface world through this passage, which now lies sealed beneath the majestic Citadel Arcanum, a golden edifice riddled with secret passages and underground chambers.

Mithrendain is a timeless city bereft of clocks, sundials, or other methods of tracking the passage of time. A secret police force, called the Watchers of the Night, patrols the idyllic city. The Watchers, who can ignore the city's magic wards that prevent creatures from turning invisible, remain vigilant for signs of infiltration by the fomorians and their agents—subterranean menaces searching for the means to break through Mithrendain's defenses and reopen the great passage into the Feydark.

The Murkendraw

The Murkendraw is a swamp as large as a sea—a swamp of weeping willows and rotted fruit, of gnarled roots thrusting up from bubbling quicksand pits, of impenetrable fogbanks stinking of swamp gas, of week-long rainstorms where lightning scours the sodden ground, and of great dire alligators and swamp wasps the size of dogs. It is the home of the hags. The Murkendraw is of the Feywild, and as such it is filled with life, but that life is fundamentally wrong. Dark cults worshiping deities of madness chant in the starless night. Warped mud creatures lurch out from behind stained yellow vine curtains, or suddenly rise from the black waters and clamber at the flat-bottom boats used to travel the stinking byways. After a few weeks of combating the gag-inducing beasts spawned by the corruption of the Murkendraw, adventurers may find themselves pining for the clean, bracing stench of the ordinary undead.

Although most swamps in the Feywild are infested with hags, the Murkendraw is the home of the most powerful hag of all—the terrible Baba Yaga. She dwells within a dilapidated hut that appears to be set on stilts just above the surface of the swamp waters, and she often takes the form of an old human woman. She can appear to be a friendly old earth mother or a terrifying crone depending on what suits her. If Baba Yaga is threatened and feels overmatched—a rare occurrence—a single ear-splitting whistle awakens her hut.

The hut then stands, unfolding the long bird legs first taken to be stilts. At full height the hut stands thirty feet tall. Its long legs give the hut amazing speed, and the ability to ignore difficult terrain. The hut can also fight, kicking like a flightless bird with those treelike legs. A single kick can stave in a humanoid's chest.

Baba Yaga is pure evil, but she can be bargained with. Like the fomorians, hags crave power, although their agendas are far more subtle. Baba Yaga is willing to trade secret for secret. Adventurers must beware: Of all the fey, Baba Yaga's bargains are the most treacherously worded. Few are wise enough to outwit her, and the truly wise don't even try.

Nachtur, the Goblin Kingdom

One of the largest and most powerful of the Feywild's goblin kingdoms is Nachtur. A hobgoblin wizard who calls himself the Great Gark, Lord of All the Goblins, rules over a crowded city-warren in the caves and tunnels beneath the rugged hills in the heart of a thickly wooded forest. Goblin archers and wolfriders patrol the surrounding region vigorously, harassing travelers and pillaging anything of value they stumble across. The Great Gark intends to unite all the goblinkind of the Feywild under his banner, and so far he has succeeded in subjugating several smaller tribes.

Under Gark's rule, Nachtur plays at acting like a civilized kingdom. Gark often dispatches ambassadors to nearby eladrin cities and fomorian kingdoms, and trades with several of the nearby fomorian realms. Nachtur's resilient mercenary companies serve many fomorian lords, hags, and occasionally Winter Fey lords. Nachtur's warmages and battle priests may lack the skill of eladrin spellcasters, but they have numbers and determination on their side, and some are strong in the magical arts of war. Gark himself recently survived an attack by quickling assassins. He single-handedly reduced them to ash.

Although Nachtur is not yet a real threat to the eladrin realms that make up the Court of Stars, goblin marauders often waylay eladrin travelers or seek to capture nobles for ransom. The Great Gark has some strategic sense as well as great tactical cunning. Efforts by the eladrin, centaurs, gnomes, and other fey of good heart to check the expansion of Nachtur's powers have proven largely unsuccessful so far. If anything, these attempts have armed the goblins with captured weapons and magic items they never could have forged themselves.

Senaliesse

In the center of the Feywild's primeval forest grows a massive stand of ancient silver trees. The forest at the base of these trees seems completely undisturbed. A glance upward reveals nothing but the shining columns of the trunks rising into mist. No sound can be heard but the rustle of leaves and the chitter of wildlife. This silver grove is Senaliesse, the home of Queen Tiandra.

Guests of the Summer Queen wait patiently here until eladrin rangers appear from the green shadows. Once the all-clear is given, a rope elevator descends from the mists above. Visitors then endure a breathtaking—and terrifying—ride on the open elevator platform up to high into the treetops. Long after they've completely lost sight of the ground, guests breach the canopy and arrive in the rambling palace of Tiandra, the Summer Queen. The palace sprawls out through the tops of countless gigantic oaks and yews. Tree limbs wide enough for several humans to walk comfortably abreast span the space between the silver trees. Visitors use these main avenues, although a web of thin rope walkways also connects branches high and low. The thought of a fatal fall from such treacherous footholds is too daunting for most.

Senaliesse lacks the signature crystal stone of all other eladrin cities. It is composed completely of living wood coaxed by Lord Oran to form walls, archways, and roadways high in the fey tree branches. The centerpiece of the palace is Tiandra's Chamber, a soaring proscenium of twisting green leaves overhanging a throne made of green summer branches and bounteous cascades of flowering scented vines. If Queen Tiandra is inclined to receive audience, hundreds of creatures can mingle comfortably in the room within. The sheer size of this proscenium is why Senaliesse has become the prime location for the irregular meetings of the Court of Stars. The Court meets here so often now that even on days when no archfey lords are present, scores of courtiers and ambassadors can be found here negotiating, gossiping, and scheming under the arch.

Guest houses in the high branches of the nearby trees are home to an eclectic mix of archfey, eladrin nobles, and ambassadors of other fey races. Queen Tiandra is the sole controlling authority, and she does not dabble with civic detail. Representatives from various eladrin houses rule the immediate area of their embassy residences.

One should not think that Tiandra's home is a town or city as mortals understand it, however. Creatures of immortal power gather to confer in this place. Although a few basic guest services have been set up for those summoned to Senaliesse at Tiandra's will, it is not meant to be a place where ordinary eladrin may dwell for any length of time.

Shinaelestra, the Fading City

Shinaelestra's inhabitants have allowed the city to retreat before the wilderness. Shinaelestra is a city of rangers, and they long ago decided to let the forest reclaim the ancient walls. Many of Shinaelestra's towers are broken, barely rising above the thick overgrowth of the forest. Stands of trees rise from within roofless mansions, and many streets are impassable beneath thick overgrowth. However, the wilderness encroachment is a harmonious fall into ruin.

Every midnight, Shinaelestra shimmers into existence deep in the mortal realm's Howling Forest. Its rangers take advantage of this savage hunting ground, patrolling the depths of the black forest and pitting themselves against the mortal monsters who hunt its twisted paths. When dawn comes, Shinaelestra worldfalls back to the Feywild.

The ranger Lord Calenon Thray governs Shinaelestra lightly. Some say he is the greatest eladrin ranger of them all. In the lands surrounding the city, Calenon personally trains a select few to become the most devout of the Feywild's protectors. Those mortals who seek to master the ways of the ranger often make a pilgrimage to Shinaelestra to train with the ranger lord. Calenon welcomes all who manage to find the eladrin city, since the perils of the Howling Forest discourage—sometimes lethally—all but the worthy candidates.

Vor Thomil

Vor Thomil, a dark underground conclave of sin and filth, is a powerful fomorian domain that lies close to Shinaelestra and often wars against that eladrin realm. A terrible fomorian monarch, Queen Connomae, rules Vor Thomil, and the entire realm trembles in anticipation of her next mad whim. Connomae clings to pretenses of grandeur and greedily clutches at the trappings of elegance and civility—which means that she brutally tortures and kills those courtiers who fail to keep up with what she thinks the "proper" behavior for such luminaries entails. She is also obsessed with her own amusements and searches constantly for new sources of diversion.

Queen Connomae often orders captured travelers to dress in mockeries of formal court attire. Such "ambassadors" are forced to amuse her with song, story, combat, or even inspired lunacy. Those who please her perverse whims are showered with gold and favors. Those who disappoint are slain during ornate ceremonies involving machines of fiendish design.

The queen obsessively collects artwork, although she has no ability to discern the transcendent from trash. Depending on the vagaries of her madness, she either lovingly displays the treasures or destroys them.

CHAPTER 3

The Shadowfell

STEVE BELLEDIN

The Shadowfell is the dark echo of the mortal world, a twilight realm that exists "on the other side" of the world and its earthly denizens. Legend has it that an otherworldly dimness arose around the remnants and tatters of the raw stuff of creation. Over time, these shadows coalesced and assumed a form similar to the natural world, but darker, more ominous, and thrumming with a strange and unexpected power. This murky land spawned beings of its own and drew others from different parts of the cosmos. It came to be filled with a diverse population of creatures, fair and foul.

The Shadowfell is more than just a mirror, even as darkly cast and twisted as it is. This plane is the destination of souls loosed from their bodies. It is the domain of the dead, the final stage of the soul's journey before moving onto the unknown. For this reason, the Shadowfell draws the attention of any with an interest in death. The power and allure of this place even drew the Raven Queen from the Astral Sea to take residence among the spirits, to govern them, and to monitor their movements as they await the inexorable pull of dissolution.

This chapter explores aspects of the Shadowfell:

- Visiting the Shadowfell: A discussion of the primary methods for reaching the Shadowfell and its planar traits.
- Shadowfell Inhabitants: A catalog of some of the plane's notorious denizens.
- Shadowfell Locales: An overview of significant Shadowfell sites.

VISITING THE SHADOWFELL

Where dark dreams gather, and the ghosts of mortals linger for a time

SHADOWFELL TRAITS
Type: Parallel plane.
Size and Shape: The Shadowfell is a parallel plane with dimensions and topography similar to the mortal world.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Normal.
Gloom: The Shadowfell mutes light sources, reducing the radius illuminated by 50 percent. For example, a torch illuminates 2 squares instead of 5; a lantern illuminates 5 squares instead of 10. Magical light sources are unaffected.

A place of deep shadows, of familiar yet alien landscapes, of vistas that snatch the breath, and of mind-rending visions, the Shadowfell is the gloomy reflection of the natural world. It is a plane dimmed and dulled by a pervasive and insidious pall. The home of the dead, the realm of the forsaken, a haven of the lost and the twisted, the birthplace of wretched creatures famous for their grief and sorrow—the Plane of Shadow is all this and more.

The Feywild reminds the traveler of the mortal world, but exaggerates its verdant splendor. The Shadowfell is similarly reminiscent, but the reflection is far different. Familiar landmarks, peoples, and places are changed, as if born from half-remembered nightmares or perverted by fear and doubt. Perils abound in the Shadowfell. Still, the allure of lost treasures, strange mysteries (including those of death), and alien vistas draw the bold and foolish alike to test their mettle against the forces of darkness that rule this chilling plane.

For all the Shadowfell's dismal reputation, it does have bright spots where those who fight against the malaise and the chill live almost ordinary lives. In fact, for many visitors to the Shadowfell, the plane has more in common with the natural world than it has differences. This is both comforting and disturbing.

Reaching the Shadowfell

The superstitious claim that the Shadowfell caresses the natural world wherever the sun cannot reach. Its entrances huddle in old closets, among darkened doorways, and under the cloying darkness of the deepest dungeons. Common folk make signs against evil or whisper a quick prayer before continuing down dim streets, so strong is the fear that the Shadowfell evokes. These qualms stem from misapprehensions about the plane, born from mortal fears of death and what might lie beyond. Most know that when the flesh fails, into the darkness goes the spirit. No one can say with certainty what comes next.

The Shadowfell is one of the more accessible planes. In fact, on rare occasions, travelers have stumbled into it by accident. Places where the boundary between the world and the Shadowfell are thin are known as shadow crossings. Some intersections are naturally occurring, the result of ancient planar conjunctions or catastrophes. These crossings often occur in low-lying, deeply shadowed spots—forested hollows, mist-blanketed bogs, or the bottoms of caverns and ravines. Other junctions form in places where the forces of death are prevalent—graveyards, battlefields, and other places that bore witness to mass death. When active, shadow crossings permit travelers to shift from the mortal world to the corresponding location in the Shadowfell (but not always back again).

Few shadow crossings are continuously active. Most activate only under the right conditions, such as certain times of day, certain days of the year, or when various celestial phenomena take place—eclipses or new moons, for example. Travelers can also activate dormant crossing points using the Shadow Passage ritual, which is easier than creating a new portal or using the Planar Portal ritual.

A more reliable access to the Shadowfell is one of the many portals connecting this plane to the natural world. Most such connections bear the indelible mark of the Shadowfell. Gloomy, cold, and dripping with shadow, these places are tucked away, hidden by shadows, and behind layers of myth and superstition. Sites where portals to the Shadowfell exist usually have strong ties to death. Crude shrines erected to Orcus and hidden temples to Vecna, for example, might offer entry into Shadowfell.

Finally, the easiest—though costliest—means to reach the Shadowfell is via the Planar Portal ritual. Acquiring the address for a teleportation circle in the Shadowfell can be a challenge, for that information is almost always a closely guarded secret. Still, numerous junctions to the Shadowfell exist, and not all of them carry the risk of a lethal passage. The city of Gloomwrought is an excellent example. A sinking city along the coast of a vast and stormy sea, it is a popular port for seafaring ships and planar travelers alike.

The Shadowfell is unsettling in its familiar strangeness, for although many of the mortal world's landmarks remain, something is decidedly off. It is as if the plane steals a feature from the natural world and reproduces it, but imperfectly. A range of old, rugged mountains in the mortal world might appear jagged, like a row of teeth, or melted, like wet sand spilled from a child's hand. Roads and pathways wind through the lands in the same general direction as those from the natural world, but carry travelers into unexpected dangers, through stretches of haunted countryside, or to the brink of an unexpected chasm.

Communities correspond to those in the natural world, but they too are tainted duplicates. What might be a metropolis in the mortal world is an undead-infested ruin in the Shadowfell. An isolated hamlet could be reflected in the shadowy plane as a city under the tyrannical rule of a cruel vampire. A stronghold nestled in a mountain pass might manifest as a fortified gateway, plugging a hole to the Shadowdark. So, for all the similarities, travelers soon learn to forget what they know about the world, and to see the Shadowfell through fresh eyes.

Pervasive Melancholy

One of the common misunderstandings about the Shadowfell is the belief it is ever dark. The shadowy plane, contrary to myths, features both day and night. However, the Shadowfell's sun is usually hidden behind clouds, low on the horizon, or pale and weak, seemingly unable to warm the realm. The moon too shines here, though it does so with the dull orange glow of a harvest orb.

Aside from the unusual movements of celestial bodies, the Shadowfell's influence is most felt in the plane's atmosphere. The place is no warmer or colder than the world, but a constant sense of coolness, an uneasy chill in the joints and the dampness of the hair, persists even in the face of a bonfire. It gets worse at night, when each breath sends out a plume of mist, and a rime of frost settles across the ground.

Perhaps the most insidious effect the Shadowfell has is a mental one. Those who travel the plane pay a heavy emotional price. It begins with a banked enthusiasm, a quenching of the fires of optimism beneath the heavy weight of sadness. Failure seems assured, hopelessness dogs every step. Depression wraps its cancerous claws about the heart. Although this melancholy in no way interferes with the ability (or lack thereof) to attain one's objectives, each day is a trial of resolve. Travelers must ever steel their hearts against the powerful presence of sorrow.

Domains of Dread

Scattered throughout the Plane of Shadow are places hidden behind thick walls of mist, places ruled by dark and deeply troubled beings bound to the plane by dreadful curses. These isolated pockets within the Shadowfell are called domains of dread. A creature that passes through the curtain of mist into a domain of dread becomes trapped there—a prisoner of the dark lord who rules the domain.

Each domain of dread has a dark lord—a powerful creature with absolute hold over the domain and limited mastery over its shape and disposition. Similar to a fey demesne (see page 35), a domain of dread bends to the will of its master, reflecting his or her dark mood in various eerie or disturbing ways. Some domains of dread are quite small, such as a lonely castle on a hill. Others extend for miles.

Escape from a domain of dread is tricky and usually requires one to slay the dark lord, break the dark lord's curse, unlock the secret of the dark lord's power over the domain, perform a dark ritual, or accomplish some other difficult goal.

Shadowfell Terrain and Hazards

The Shadowfell might lack the fearsome violence of the Abyss and the unpredictable dangers of the Elemental Chaos, but it is still a formidable and perilous place with dangers aplenty.

Darklands: Although supernatural energies extend throughout the Shadowfell, some places are stronger in shadow than others. Called darklands, these regions are not reflections of the natural world; they are unique manifestations of gloom. Desolate places, they leech life and vigor from the living. Color pales further in their vicinity—everything appears in shades of gray. Light found in the darklands is only that which travelers carry, and even then, it's dulled and wane.

Darklands are most often unstable and short-lived. Certain bleak areas, however, do solidify into permanent realms. These regions are among the most dangerous in the Shadowfell, because permanent darklands attract powerful undead, nightwalkers, and worse. Most travelers avoid them at all costs.

DARKLAND TRAITS

Darklands have the following traits.

Necrotic Affinity: Any attack that has the necrotic keyword gains a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks that have the radiant keyword deal half damage. Ongoing radiant damage is not affected.

Reanimation: Living humanoids killed in darklands reanimate as zombies 3d6 minutes after death

(Monster Manual, page 274). Large humanoids rise as zombie hulks (Monster Manual, page 275). These horrors are uncontrolled and attack any living creature they meet. The Gentle Repose ritual or complete destruction of the corpse prevents a dead creature from reanimating.

Necromantic Seepage: Pools of necromantic seepage form one of the most disturbing features in the Shadowfell. They bubble up from fissures in the ground or out of rifts in the air. The seepage is a thick black fluid, the congealed essence of shadow warped into a corrupting and rotting presence. Samples of the seepage removed from the pool dry after 1 minute, becoming black harmless flakes dispersed by the faintest breeze. In liquid form, however, necromantic seepage is lethal.

Any living creature entering a space containing necromantic seepage contracts a terrible disease known as soul rot.

Umbral Taint: The Shadowfell's lands as a whole are gloomy by dint of its psychic signature, but certain areas emit a presence far more awful. When a powerful undead creature is destroyed, it leaves behind a stain to mark its fall. These areas are colder than the normal coolness pervasive in the plane. Also, they are infused with the memories of the creature destroyed. This corruption can lend power to other undead creatures.

An area of umbral taint typically takes up the space occupied by the powerful undead whose demise created it. Undead in a space filled with umbral taint gain regeneration 5 per tier. In addition, powers that have the necrotic keyword used in a space of umbral taint gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls.

Soul Rot Level 11 Disease Endurance improve DC 21, maintain DC 16, worsen DC 15 or lower

The target is cured.

Initial Effect: The target takes 5 necrotic damage and loses one healing surge that the target cannot regain until cured of the disease..

The target is weakened until cured.

Final State: The target dies and rises as a wraith (Monster Manual, page 266).

ROB ALEXANDER

SHADOWFELL INHABITANTS

Like the natural world, the Shadowfell is home to innumerable creatures, many of which resemble natural ones, and behave as they do. Flocks of ravens drenched in shadows catch zephyrs and wheel through the sky. Swarms of black beetles capable of stripping flesh from the bone boil up from depths of the plane, while spectral panthers, shadow hounds, and predatory shadow bats hunt the wilderness in search of prey.

Despite the legions of dead and the overwhelming gloom, pockets of civilization arise here and there. These bastions hold fast against the bands of undead and the more malevolent forces of the land. Whether shadar-kai castle, dark one enclave, or planar metropolis home to countless peoples from innumerable places, these communities function as they do in the natural world. What follows is a selection of the best-known inhabitants that call the Shadowfell home.

The Dead

Foremost of the Shadowfell's inhabitants are the dead. Each day brings droves of displaced souls from the natural world. They congregate here, searching for answers, meaning, or just a safe place to bide their time. The vast majority soon pass beyond the veil of the infinite, lingering only a few hours in the Shadow.

Some souls can and do escape the finality of death. Those who fear what lies beyond, and a few too blinded by anger or hate to willingly move on, cling to their bodiless existence in the Shadowfell. These fearful, miserable, or hateful creatures often become undead of various sorts. A few souls bound closely to the world by love, care, duty, unbreakable oaths, or deeds unfinished in life also linger in the Shadowfell. They are somber spirits, ghostly figures who long for the day of their release to the infinite. The stronger the spirit was in life, the longer it can resist the pull of the final veil. Mortal adventurers sometimes seek out these grim spirits for the knowledge they possess. A lingering spirit might be willing to help, but many demand a steep price before revealing the mysteries they hold.

EXALTATION AND DAMNATION

When most mortals die, their spirits linger in the Shadowfell for a time, and then pass on to the infinite. However, some mortal spirits are claimed (or damned) by the deities they served in life. From the Raven Queen's gloomy domain they ascend or plummet to an afterlife in one of the astral dominions, whether it is unending torment in the Nine Hells or eternal bliss in Celestia. The exact nature of the afterlife depends on the dominion, and the will of the deities residing there. For more information, see "The Exalted and the Damned" sidebar in Chapter 5: The Astral Sea (page 88).

The Living

Among the legions of souls found on this plane, the Shadowfell also houses a small number of settlements, kingdoms, city-states, and more. Some of these places are reasonably civilized and safe, but most are domains trapped in powerful curses by nameless dark powers.

Natural mortals who live in the Shadowfell are referred to as shadowborn. Their realms might stand near active shadow crossings, atop the ruins of old death giant keeps, or amid wilderness tamed long ago by enterprising explorers and adventurers. Shadowborn settlements can provide a haven of sorts from the dangers of this dark plane. From no doubt strange origins, second and third generations of humans, elves, halflings, and other folk live almost normal lives in the shadow. They raise families, run businesses, mount expeditions into the unknown, and trade with sister settlements.

For all their normalcy, shadowborn settlements usually have a dark underbelly or a problem unique to that place. One city might have trouble keeping the dead from rising. Another features people that can't die from old age—the ancients linger on, growing ever older until their bodies collapse under the weight of accumulated years. Communities must deal with subversive cultists and unruly spirits, to say nothing of new horrors birthed from the Shadowdark.

Cultists and Lunatics

Orcus and his legions stand at the fore of those who would wrest control of the Shadowfell from the Raven Queen. From the moment the Demon Prince of the Undead mastered the dark arts of necromancy, his interest in shadow and the plane of its origin began to eclipse almost all other goals. Orcus would have seized control of the Shadowfell long ago if not for the Raven Queen. As long as she rules, he cannot establish full dominion over the plane.

Orcus believes that the key to the Raven Queen's defeat lies in her true name. If he could uncover it, he is certain he could unravel her divinity, thus weakening her enough to displace her. To this end, Orcus set his exarch Doresain to the task of finding the Raven Queen's name. The Ghoul King has yet to complete this mission, in spite of having at his disposition outrageous numbers of ghouls and armies of Orcus's powerful cultists. Although their failures enrage him, Orcus has managed to keep his infamous temper in check, exercising odd patience as his servants go about their work.

Vecna and his servants are also associated with this shadowy plane. The Lich Lord walks the Plane of Shadow from time to time, searching for lost relics or brokering deals with the dreaded nightwalkers. His clergy operates in secret and forms hidden cults in the hearts of communities. Away from sight, they hone their mastery over death, performing terrible rituals to unlock the secrets of shadow. In particular, the Votaries of Vecna perform unspeakable experiments, devising new varieties of undead creatures within the confines of their crooked tower. Secured by the vast sea of bubbling effluvia surrounding their redoubt, the Votaries are confident that the creatures in the befouled waters can turn away any enemies who dare approach.

Zehir also maintains a presence on this plane. Many shadowborn turn to the god of darkness and murder, seeking the power that he offers. Lurking in the shadows of nearly every community, Zehir's priests maintain their temples by selling their services as assassins, spies, and saboteurs. Some shadowborn claim Zehir's priests work toward another, far more sinister design, and point to the appearance of shadow snakes as evidence of their unholy experiments.

Undead

Many evil mortals consider the Shadowfell an ideal place to create undead servants. Over centuries, clerics of dark gods, cultists of Orcus, amoral wizards, and necromancers of the worst sort have created countless thousands of undead monsters using heinous rituals. All too often, the spellcasters who create such dark servants abandon their creations to the surrounding shadowscape when their purpose is accomplished, once control is lost over the undead, or even as a matter of pure malice.

As if the active creation of undead by reckless mortals was not bad enough, the Shadowfell itself sometimes spawns the unliving. Areas such as the darklands, places tainted by necromantic seepage, and other, less understood regions spawn all manner of animated beings. The taint of shadow also corrupts the soul vestiges wandering on this plane, twisting these sad spirits into ghosts and other spectral creatures.

Just as horrific, undead sometimes create themselves. Devourers, for example, are the undead remnants of horrific murderers lured into the darkness of the Shadowfell and transformed into manifestations of great evil. Others find the weight of their mortal deeds so heavy they cannot bear to move farther than the Shadowfell. In time, they are corrupted by the plane's malaise, becoming specters, wraiths, and other insubstantial beings. They roam the plane in search of victims to torment or kill.

Other types of undead retain their sentience and rise above blind instinct. Vampires and liches carve out baronies and duchies in the Shadowfell's depths. Tortured ghosts stalk the ruins of lost cities, while death knights, honed by their unquenchable hate, plot destruction against the living and their kingdoms.

Death Giants

Long ago a race of giants came to the Shadowfell intent on conquest. Like their counterparts in the natural world and the Feywild, they believed they should be masters of all they surveyed. In short order, they conquered the creatures that claimed the Shadowfell and enslaved them. Bending their subjects to their will, the giants constructed mighty cities and fortresses, expanding their holds far and wide. In the end, what defeated the giants was not a rebellion, but rather the plane itself.

Something about the Shadowfell's nature eroded the giants' ability to sustain themselves. Not long after their first cities were completed, the giants found themselves fading. Unable to halt the progression of this affliction, the giants turned to shadow to bind them to the plane. Through reckless use of dark rituals, they discovered mortal souls could slow the decay and allow them to remain in place.

Driven by fear, they gorged themselves on the souls of their slaves. The process transformed, twisted, and corrupted them until they left behind any meaningful rationale for their rule, other than the dictates of the seed of evil that had awakened within them. Their orgy of destruction wiped out most of their servants; the few survivors fled. The giants lost sight of the glory they hoped to achieve and wallowed in the shadows that took hold of their hearts. Their cities fell into ruin, their fortresses crumbled, and the giants themselves became wretched creatures, beings whose cruelty has become legendary.

Death giants still lair in the ruins of their once-great cities, or in lonely keeps deep in the shadow. They subjugate lesser creatures such shadar-kai, dark ones, or shadowborn ogres and trolls, consuming the souls of their servants unless provided with suitable alternatives.

Nightwalkers

Beings formed from the stuff of shadow and possessed of an incomparable maliciousness, undead stalkers roam the fringes of the Shadowfell, slaughtering mortals and shadow creatures alike. Nightwalkers often use evil rituals to restore their victims to a mockery of life, cursing them to rise as bodaks.

The nightwalkers trace their origins to a group of powerful, disembodied souls who refused to pass on. They used the supernatural energies of the plane to forge new bodies out of the raw stuff of shadow. Their selfishness and the influence of their new forms forever stained their souls, perverting them into the monstrous entities they are to this day.

By circumventing the natural order, the nightwalkers gained the attention of the sorrowsworn, and terrible battles wracked the Shadowfell. The conflict left great stretches of land forever warped and damaged. Although the sorrowsworn proved implacable foes, many of the nightwalkers escaped and fled to the darkest reaches of the plane where they linger still.

For the most part, nightwalkers have little use for other creatures, preferring to brood in the gloom of their realms. If legend can be believed, Vecna or one of his disciples taught nightwalkers the ritual to create bodaks in exchange for a pledge of loyalty to the Maimed God. Other nightwalkers have joined forces with cultists of Orcus and lend their considerable strength to his armies of ghouls and demons. Whether they choose to ally with the forces of Vecna or Orcus, nightwalkers universally oppose the Raven Queen and her faithful.

Nightwalkers prove temporary allies at best, however. They do not hesitate to abandon old arrangements if it is in their best interests to do so. Still, the nightwalkers possess considerable power; many gladly make bargains necessary to secure even the smallest measure of these horrors' great strength.

Shadar-Kai

Long ago, the shadar-kai were a tribe of humans who dwelt in the mortal world, and like other humans, the shadar-kai feared death. It represented the failure of their bodies and the helplessness of their will to halt the decay of the flesh. Shadar-kai mages dabbled in necromancy in an effort to end—or at least diminish—their decline, but the dark arts proved a poor solution to their troubles.

The shadar-kai turned to the Raven Queen and beseeched her to put an end to their fears, which she did. In a rare act of compassion, or a cold calculation of self-interest, the Raven Queen taught the shadar-kai that the inevitability of death was something to embrace, not dread. She promised to protect their spirits after death, spare them the damnation of undeath, and reshape the best of them into powerful new forms, such as the sorrowsworn. Over time, the shadar-kai cast aside their fear of mortality, abandoned their place on the natural world, and relocated to the Shadowfell, building settlements along the edges of the Raven Queen's wintry kingdom. Gradually, they spread and founded new cities throughout the plane.

Prolonged existence in the Shadowfell changed the shadar-kai. They begun succumbing to the malaise of the plane. Gripped by misery, some shadar-kai simply faded from existence, first turning insubstantial and then vanishing altogether. As their people began to fade into the shadows, many shadar-kai sought to stimulate their bodies and minds, committing themselves to passion and excess to stave off the overbearing malaise.

Over time, the shadar-kai became a people of extreme emotions and incredible appetites. Some reveled in pleasure and pain. Others found stimulation in complex fighting styles and difficult weaponry, such as the spiked chain. A few turned to the dark mysteries of shadow and became masters of its power. All these acts allowed the shadar-kai to survive, but at a great cost to their society and humanity.

Over generations of service to the Raven Queen, the shadar-kai have built somber cities and grim fortresses. The shadar-kai test their skills in bloodsoaked arenas, or engage in terrible carnality in vast pleasure halls. They torture themselves, pierce skin and bone with cruel objects, abrade their flesh with jagged barbs, and cover themselves in scars and tattoos for little more than the rush of feeling these acts arouse.

Shadar-kai strive to prove themselves worthy to their goddess, in the hopes of being remade into sorrowsworn or other powerful entities. An individual is great through personal achievement alone. Birth status or the deeds of an ancestor have no bearing on how an individual shadar-kai is seen by his peers, and so each tries to outdo the others and claim his or her place in society. This means the shadar-kai often prey on each other, killing to remove any obstacle to their own paths to greatness. At the very least, the shadar-kai all hope to find their end in battle, so that they might savor the pleasure and pain of violent death and feel a sense of closeness to the Raven Queen.

Dark Ones

Born into the feeble light at the dawn of creation, the dark ones might be the oldest race in the Shadowfell. They awoke soon after the plane came into being. Alone in the gloom, the dark ones were confused, isolated, furtive, and yet filled with wonder about the world around them. When the death giants entered the Shadowfell, the dark ones sought them out and saw in them their creators. They believed through service, they could find a purpose. They prostrated themselves before the mighty ones and became their loyal followers. In short order, they became little better than slaves.

The death giants were poor gods. Vain and arrogant, filled with evil and susceptible to the influence of the plane, they were fickle masters. This became far worse when the supernatural influence of the plane wormed into their hearts. Dark ones died by the hundreds as the death giants sacrificed their loyal supporters to prolong their own existence. Many dark ones broke from the death giants and abandoned their works. A few remained loyal. They clung to the delusions of their ancestors, but their hopes were dashed as their souls were added to the ones that swirled about their masters' darkened bodies.

The escapees set out to find their own place in the Shadowfell. Because the surface was the domain of the death giants, the dark ones fled to the bowels of the earth. There, they cut tunnels in the Shadowdark and established new homelands for themselves and their descendants. They embraced the perfect darkness of their subterranean world.

Although the dark ones have little affection for outsiders, they are adept at masking their scorn behind a servile façade and the dark hoods of their cloaks. Dark ones can be found in most settlements in the Shadowfell—they reside alongside the living and the dead. In particular, they are comfortable among the shadar-kai. They also survive in areas claimed by nightwalkers and ghoul lords. With the lessons of the death giants in their minds, however, dark ones remain loyal to themselves and themselves alone.

Most dark ones keep to subterranean enclaves deep in the Shadowdark. They travel the corridors to different settlements to spy, steal, and kill as needed. When they do join a surface community, they are cautious and select subterranean homes connected to their trap-laden passageways. This allows them to bring forth more of their kind without their neighbors' notice. They replenish their supplies and pilfer valuable treasures before slipping back into the darkness once more.

At times, dark ones set aside their ancient grudges long enough to find common ground with other peoples. It's not unheard of for dark ones to adopt the customs and beliefs of other cultures. They can integrate themselves into just about any culture, even if their willingness is just a ruse to secure new resources for their kindred. The shadar-kai have had the most success in establishing a rapport with the dark ones, and the Raven Queen counts many dark creepers and dark stalkers as fervent supporters. Still, outsiders can never be sure of a dark one's intentions, for they are a withdrawn people, short of words and suspicious in nature.

Sorrowsworn

No creature better reflects the sinister aspects of the Shadowfell than do the sorrowsworn.Imbued with the power of death, the sorrowsworn are the custodians of decay, the heralds of endings, and the harbingers of doom. Except in rare circumstances, they do not take part in the conflicts on the plane and are disinterested guardians at best, as the death giants can testify. Although many find service in the ranks of the Raven Queen—indeed, the goddess creates the sorrowsworn from shadar-kai and elevates a handful of them to serve as her Raven Knights elite—most are independent, and work to ensure the cycle of life continues as it always has.

The sorrowsworn do not seek out their enemies, but they are vicious when they encounter opposition. They have no capacity for mercy and fling themselves at death giants, nightwalkers, and any other terrible denizens whose presence contaminates the plane. The sorrowsworn do not build fortresses or cities. Instead, they haunt the ruins of lost settlements and ruined death giant enclaves, long brought low by the efforts of these dire fiends. Sorrowsworn can also move between worlds, frequently traveling from the Shadowfell to the natural world, and back again. While in the natural world, sorrowsworn claim places of old grief, such as battlefields and graveyards, until that moment when they are roused to harvest a new batch of souls.

The Dread Emperor

The Shadowfell has its cultures and its dim bastions of civilization, where the masses join together to survive in the perilous reaches. The plane's macabre nature lures other individuals who find themselves unable to forge connections with others. These loners lead isolated lives, sheltered by the gloom of their environs. Cruel and depraved mortals from the natural world, many of them freaks exiled for their corruptions, find new existences here. Madness is common among these outcasts, and their delusions and suspicions drive them into the darkness to hide what they have become. A rare few come to embody all these traits, but none of them is as reviled as the self-styled Dread Emperor.

This human might indeed be dreadful, but he is emperor in his mind alone. He rules no sprawling domain. His influence is limited to the vicinity of his drab fortress atop a windswept peak on the fringes of a malignant darkland. He commands no subjects outside those demons he binds and the festering undead thralls he stores in the black recesses of his accursed citadel. He is a mortal deep in the grip of delusion.

The Dread Emperor came to the Shadowfell from the natural world decades ago. Although the enemies of his youth are likely gone, he has made no attempt to return to the world of birth, content to rule his "empire" in shadow. Other than a significant magical skill, the Emperor holds onto little from his time in the mortal world, and desires nothing further from it.

As his power advanced to fearsome levels in the Shadowfell, the Dread Emperor became debased and disturbing, both in habits and in mannerisms. He has an awful lisp and a leering eye. His voice is a cacophony of wheezes, mutters, and high pitched tones. Worse of all, he keeps a knot of desperate children shackled to his belt by chains. None can say what unspeakable torments they are forced to endure, but their gray faces and spare frames suggest their master is a merciless fiend.

The Emperor rarely emerges from his stronghold, but when he does, it is strictly a matter of business. He trades with planar merchants and black marketers alike, and isn't particularly loyal to one vendor or another. The appearance of the Dread Emperor is enough to bring an entire trading city to a standstill. The people pay the insane man respect for his assumed station, ply him with gifts, and feast him on the finest fare—all to keep his terrible temper in check. The plight of the poor souls bound to his belt is enough to tug on the heartstrings of those who behold them, but his hosts tuck away their outrage lest they anger the vile being. They have learned what happens when someone interferes. When roused, the Dread Emperor responds with excessive violence. He knows no restraint, and wields his terrible power without mercy. When confronted with a hostile group, he slaughters hundreds. When faced with a company of armed men, he annihilates thousands. His ire is destruction and mayhem incarnate. Those who know of the Dread Emperor do everything in their power to keep this madman placated, and as far distant as possible.

Outside his stronghold, the Dread Emperor never goes without his highly burnished, golden plate armor. His shining helmet is fitted with oblong pieces of jet, forming a dark crown. It's open and frames the pale features of an unpleasant face. A regal crimson cloak hangs from his shoulders. Iron chains from his breastplate and wide belt end in collars wrapped around the necks of his child-hostages. For all the armor he wears, he goes about unarmed. He carries only his wands, which he uses with astonishing speed and skill.

Shadowfell Locales

Most of the Shadowfell traveled by visitors corresponds to lands found in the mortal world. These areas are dotted with settlements, denizens, and uncharted places to explore. What follows are a few of the more notable locales found on this plane. Some are active havens and less dismal places that provide shelter and supplies to adventurers; others stand as grim monuments to the darkness from which this plane takes its name.

Gloomwrought, the City of Midnight

Rising from an otherwise barren shore is Gloomwrought, a city overflowing its steep and menacing walls. A vast peat bog, named the Skins, spreads out to all sides, extending inland for miles. Tiny islands crowded with trees and underbrush struggle out of the mire, home to flocks of black birds whose warbles send chills through all who hear them. In spite of the dismal character of the place, Gloomwrought is one of the brightest lights in the Shadowfell, and is a common destination for merchants and travelers of the planes.

GLOOMWROUGHT

A dismal, crowded seaport, Gloomwrought is visited by many vessels that sail the seas of the Shadowfell—and other planes as well.

Population: Approximately 12,600. Most are shadowborn humans, halflings, tieflings, and dwarves. Many shadar-kai and dark ones also live here.

Government: Prince Rolan the Deathless, a somber human nobleman, is lord of the city. Power resides in the hands of decadent and disinterested merchant nobles, secret societies, and the mysterious beings known as the Keepers.

Defense: The Prince's Guard is a force of 60 corrupt and ineffective soldiers who protect Rolan's palace and garrison the city gates. Most merchants and guilds maintain their own mercenary guards. The folk of the city rely on the high walls and surrounding marsh for protection.

Inns and Taverns: Black Griffon Inn; Dark Moon Inn; Double Dagger Tavern; King and Fool Tavern; the Knight's Shield Inn; Six Crowns Tavern. The Knight's Shield is the best of the inns. It is located near Rolan's palace. Shadar-kai frequent the King and Fool, and do not like to be troubled by clueless visitors from the mortal world.

Supplies: Harskel Emporium; city market. The Harskel Emporium and the city market in the Plaza of Gargoyles are the busiest locales. House Harskel is the largest of the city's merchant companies, but the shadowy stalls and back alleys of the city market are the best places to find rare items not sold elsewhere.

Temples: The Aposkos (Erathis); Fane of Night (Zehir); House of the Eye (Vecna, hidden); Raven Eyre (the Raven Queen).

Approaching the City

Most visitors to the city come by sea, for the inland bogs of the Skins are perilous. The mists and foul waters hide many dangers. Tentacled monsters skulk in the misty fens, competing with ghoul packs for fresh meat. Hags, wraiths, vine horrors, and other vicious things emerge from the noxious soup to snatch the unwary.

A few dark ones ply the Skins as ferrymen. For the price of 5 gold coins, they carry travelers from the bog's landward borders to the steep black walls of the city. Whether through sorcery or a pact with the beasts of the moor, the dark ones bring their cargo to the city with little trouble.

To hedge out unwanted dangers from land and sea, a massive black wall encircles the city. The wall's foundation sinks deep into the moor on land, and descends to the bottom of the shallow waters of the city's harbor. Lanterns hanging from posts extend out from the walls and cast a sickly green light across the surrounding lands. This keeps the bog monsters at bay and wards ships away from the slimy rocks hidden just below the water's surface. Stone limbs, hands, feet, and even faces provide macabre wall décor. These protrusions twitch and writhe, and the sounds of their laughter echoes in the cold wind that blows off the sea. No one's sure who carved these "gargoyles" or if they were carved at all. Even the oldest codger can't remember a time when they did not festoon the walls.

More disturbing are the city gates. Carved to resemble skulls with jaws agape, these entrances mar the walls at various points. Peering eyes set in the rock watch those who pass beneath them. Worse of all, the gates don't stay put for long, drifting along the walls as suits their fancy.

Slime clings to the lower portions of the seaward walls, while seabirds roost in the pocks and holes pitting the surface of the ancient fortifications. The harbor wall is broken by several large passes, wide enough to accommodate the galleons that call at Gloomwrought. Great iron chains lie along the harbor bottom, ready to be raised at a moment's notice, cutting off all means of entrance and escape. Unlike the gates of the inland walls, the gaps in the seaward walls don't move.

The City Proper

Inside the walls, Gloomwrought is dank and crowded. The cityscape is a jumble of buildings piled one on top of another, with the occasional tower thrusting out from the heap to waver in the air. The structures are fashioned from the same dark stone of the walls, and feature the same curious design, complete with staring stone faces and headless torsos. Buildings seem to crane inward, as though they were eavesdropping on whispered conversations in the streets. The streets themselves are a twisting maze of passages, corridors, canals, and bridges.

Disturbingly, Gloomwrought's features share the bog gates' mobility. The city constantly shifts and changes, as if alive. New buildings sprout from uncertain depths, twisting up and out of the mass of low-lying rooms and corridors to form a new tower. Months later, the spire collapses into a heap of rubble. No one who lives in Gloomwrought is sure who's behind these changes. If the prince knows, he never speaks of it. As with many occurrences in the city, most blame the queer nature of the city on the Keepers.

Denizens

The Keepers are a race of creatures that seem human at first glance, but are less mortal than they appear. Keepers have pale, hairless skin and cover their bodies in heavy black leather smocks, sometimes studded with silver skulls. Black goggles fit snugly over their eyes, hiding their intentions behind panes of black glass. These strange beings are constantly busy, apparently keeping the city in working order. They walk through the streets, examining structures, inspecting passageways, murmuring to each other in strange clicking voices, then moving off to whatever destination awaits their attention. It's not clear if the Keepers answer to the city's prince or someone (or something) else. They don't like conflict; when confronted, they collapse into a puddle of gooey tar and slither toward the nearest canal.

Gloomwrought's lord is the somber, reclusive Prince Rolan. He governs with a light hand, ignoring all but the most egregious troubles in the city. An ancient shadowborn human, he's ruled Gloomwrought for three hundred years, and he seems no closer to death. His chamberlains and functionaries consist of distant descendants—his original children, grandchildren, and great grandchildren all died off many long years ago. Locals whisper that Prince Rolan lives under the weight of a terrible curse that forever denies him the peace of death. Others say he's made a pact with an unnatural entity, offering his service in exchange for eternal life. Whatever the truth, Rolan has never explained the source of his longevity, and seems content to rule for as long as Gloomwrought stands.

The city's denizens range from humans, dragonborn, elves, and others of the common races, to the truly fantastic and the frighteningly sinister. Liches disembark from rotting vessels to trade in the city's festive marketplaces, while clerics of strange origin and stranger deities proselytize to any who will listen. Shadar-kai nobles recline in pleasure dens where they sample forbidden fare behind closed and warded doors. The common folk of the city are a somber lot who make a point of not noticing the dark and depraved habits practiced by the visitors to their city. They have quietly adapted to the city's unnerving malleability, as well as the dark and dangerous creatures that pass through their walls.

Gloomwrought is home to a number of organizations, including a variety of merchant houses and secretive guilds. The church of the Raven Queen has a powerful following in the city. Its great temple rests on the backs of 70-foot tall statues of men bent in half from the weight. The Tenebrous Cabal, an institution founded to instruct novices in the arts of shadow magic, runs an academy nestled in the northern corner of the city. The Veiled League, a group of hedonistic shadowborn elves and shadar-kai, control the city's vices. They operate the majority of the dreaming dens, bordellos, and other enterprises of sensation. Each of these factions, and many others besides, vie for dominance in the shifting patchwork of Gloomwrought's society. Violence between guilds and factions is common. Just as their soldiers tear down a hated rival, supposed allies turn against them.

The result of Gloomwrought's byzantine alliances, powerful visitors, and ever-changing arrangement is a city brooding with menace and dark opportunities. Its unusual location as a planar crossroads, its decadent nobility, and the discretion of its population draws wealthy travelers from all over the planes to congregate in the City of Midnight.

Letherna, Realm of the Raven Queen

All souls come to the Shadowfell, and sooner or later every one of them passes through Letherna. The influence of this frozen realm transcends the bounds of the plane and bleeds into the frosty reaches of the natural world's distant north. Those who seek to commune with the Raven Queen must brave much to travel these harrowing lands. Letherna is dangerous, as much for its frigid elements as for the death-dealing monsters who stand guard over the Raven Queen's demesne.

Few roads lead to Letherna, for few mortals willingly tempt fate by seeking the realm of the dead. Instead, gray pines, heavy with snow, mark the edges of this quiet land, warning travelers of what lies past their borders. The forest stretches north, its floor a blanket of soft needles cloaked in shadow. Through these silent woods, travelers are certain to spot vaporous entities, motes of flickering colors, and the full-bodied apparitions of entities trapped between life and death. Many of these denizens are fearsome and insane. Others are solemn, burdened by the weight of their mortal deeds and unable to move on to the oblivion they crave.

Deep in the forest, the trees begin to thin, allowing witnesses to spy a strange spectacle in the sky. Streaking toward a distant range of ice-capped mountains are silvery ghosts that race across the darkened sky like falling stars. The closer one comes to the dominion of the Raven Queen, the more defined these spirits become, until they coalesce into a swirling maelstrom of souls above the Raven Queen's citadel.

When the trees give way to the snowy mountains, the goddess's fastness comes into full view. Nestled as it is among the highest peaks of this jagged range, hers is a mighty stronghold, cut from black ice that sparkles with new snow. Towers thrust up from the maze of walls and graceful bridges, drawing the eye to the storm of souls spinning above her citadel. From this maelstrom of spirits, a grim procession descends through her gates, summoned to learn their final fates.

Letherna harbors all manner of creatures, most of whom are the remnants of those souls the goddess rejects, or those unable or unwilling to move on. Rent souls, disembodied undead, and other corrupted spirits prowl the haunted lands, lamenting their existence and pining for the escape the Raven Queen denies them. These beings might be peaceful, frightened by outsiders, but just as often they exude pure malice, hungering for warm blood and flesh.

On the edge of Letherna lies a temple called Zvomarana. Only the most dedicated and powerful of the Raven Queen's servants are allowed to enter it. The temple is perched on a treacherous, bramble-choked incline, and its location serves as a test for those who would approach Zvomarana over land.

The House of Black Lanterns

The House of Black Lanterns stands at a lonely crossroads in the wilds of the Shadowfell. The inn offers shelter for travelers, as well as a place to share news and swap dark tales. Raised centuries ago, the inn's ownership has changed hands so many times no one recalls who built the place or why. The current proprietor is a tiefling named Yarol, who claims to have won the place in a wager with the previous owner.

Standing some three stories tall and fronted by an old bell tower, the windows of this building all face inward toward its courtyard; a single door leads outside. A second building serves as a stable and barn, accessed through a set of doors. Spread throughout the yard and swinging on black iron lampposts are the lanterns from which the inn takes its name. Igniting on their own whenever the sun sets, the lanterns cast an eerie blue light throughout the yard.

Moil, the City That Waits

The city of Moil embodies the perils of dealing with the demon princes. The Moilians made this disastrous error long ago, and have paid the price in the thousands of years since. In ages past, the Moilians dabbled in the black arts. They toyed with forbidden magic and demon summoning, seeking power to make their city ever stronger and wealthier. A cult devoted to Orcus came to rule the city, purchasing the favor of the Demon Prince of the Undead through mortal sacrifices and hideous ceremonies with the dead.

Eventually, the Moilians grew sickened by their excesses. They found the courage to tear down the temples of the demon prince and shatter the grand statues raised in his honor. They turned to Pelor in the hopes of purifying their souls with the god's wholesome light. The citizens of Moil learned what so many have come to know before—once beholden, none can escape from Orcus.

Enraged at their faithlessness, Orcus returned to the great city and found temples and icons dedicated to the hateful sun god. The Demon Prince seized the entire city and flung it into the deepest depths of the Shadowfell, cursing the Moilians to never again feel the warmth of the sun upon their faces. It wasn't long before hopelessness poisoned their souls and the mortals, as one, retreated into their sanctums to embrace blissful annihilation. When they faded away, they left behind the empty city as an elaborate monument to their folly. So Moil, the City That Waits, has stood for eons.

Little remains of Moil's original splendor. The city slowly sinks into a vast bog of darkness, a vile sea of pure necromantic energy from which come undead horrors conjured from the polluted mind of the Lord of Skulls. As the city sinks, towers, walkways, and more descends into the blackness, chunks break free and tumble into the void of nothingness.

Horrid as these ruins are for the living, the place bears an unholy attraction for the undead. Such is this allure that the mighty lich Acererak, master of the Tomb of Horrors, once laid claim to the City That Waits and used it as a conduit to transcend his mortal form and ascend to greatness. Others sometimes seize sections of the city to serve as hidden refuges while they hatch sinister plans. Undead creatures join these baleful figures, prowling the city's graceful bridges and staking out territory in its frozen towers. Many wonders lay undiscovered here, but finding them means confronting the legion of horrors that have claimed these ruins, and surviving the ominous darkness below.

Nightwyrm Fortress

Constructed at the dawn of history, this monstrous edifice of fossil-bearing stone has weathered the storm of countless attacks and held many names. For years now, it has served as the lair of a mighty shadow dragon named Urishtar, and thus it has come to be known as Nightwyrm Fortress.

The fortress has a towering outer wall called Matrathar's Teeth. The wall takes its name from the larva mage castellan that commands the fortress garrison, and its battlements are topped with jagged spikes. Stone bridges span a gaping chasm as they connect the outer wall to the inner keep.

The soaring towers of the inner keep pierce the darkened sky, their peaks shrouded by a swirling vortex of inky black clouds. Within this dark vortex lurks the lord of Nightwyrm Fortress, the mighty Urishtar, and the secrets and treasures it has sworn to protect until the end of time.

The Plain of Sighing Stones

Stretching for hundreds of miles, the Plain of Sighing Stones is the largest of the Shadowfell's few deserts. Although the sun is not intense, the dead land punishes travelers with its desolation, its lack of water, and its fierce dust storms. Vast expanses of shifting dunes alternate with stony wastelands. The ever-present wind alters the sandy terrain at its whim, making navigation treacherous. The rushing air more slowly sculpts the mesas and boulders, but has created incredible shapes. Its passage sounds an eerie, desolate moaning that carries for miles and gives the desert its name. Dry oases stand like bleached skeletons, heartbreaking in their lost promise. Elsewhere, sentient mirages lure travelers into the waiting teeth of the Plain's most dangerous denizens.

For all the perils of the Sighing Stones, people do live in these lands. A nomadic tribe of shadowborn humans called the Zamar-Sha are the undisputed masters of the region. Violent and unpredictable, they are as likely to torment and kill those who enter their lands as they are to ignore them. They wield strange curses like weapons, and their knowledge of desert fauna equip them with astonishing medicines and poisons. When stirred to war, the Zamar-Sha are terrifying enemies. They paint their bodies in white chalk, madden themselves with strange potions, and descend on their foes in an orgy of violence. The fields of bones sprinkled across the Plain of Sighing Stones testify to the wrath of the Zamar-Sha.

The Shadowdark

Below the Shadowfell's twilight landscape lies a nightmarish reflection of the natural world's Underdark. Called the Shadowdark, this pitch-black expanse features labyrinthine tunnels, vaulted chambers, and subterranean seas. Past the lightless corridors, bottomless abysses are cloaked in blackness and bearded with ice. Oceans of necrotic seepage and darkland tunnels are so malevolent that to walk them risks annihilation.

One constant in this endless expanse of darkness is the cold. Descending into its depths plunges travelers into icy stillness, cold enough for breath to form and hang in the air. The deeper one travels, the colder it becomes, until even those protected by potent wards find the depths unbearable.

Like the Underdark, the Shadowdark is a refuge for aberrant horrors such as creatures spawned or touched by the Far Realm. Mind flayers, grells, and other vile creatures hold vast sections of the Shadowfell's bowels, but its depths shelter even stranger creatures. Ineffable horrors, grotesqueries born from nightmare, roam the bowels of the underworld. Forgotten kingdoms of undead are prevalent. Endless tales are told about great catacombs infested with zombies, dark cities overrun by wights, and fleshy slicks of discarded body parts awakened into near-sentience by powerful magic.

The stories of what lies inside the Shadowdark dissuade many adventurers from challenging its depths. Those who do are lucky to return, and even the ones who make it back are changed forever by their harrowing descent.

CHAPTER 4

The Elemental Chaos

The Elemental Chaos is the raw material of creation, that from which the universe arose. Untouched by the stabilizing divine influence that formed the world into a more or less permanent state, the Elemental Chaos is a roiling tempest of matter and energy. At times, areas coalesce into coherent shapes and terrain, but much of it resembles a stormy sea of churning destruction. The Chaos is at once the foundation of the world and the greatest threat to its existence. By its nature, the Elemental Chaos seeks to pull the created world into its embrace, and return it to its component parts.

Most of the inhabitants of the Elemental Chaos share a primal drive toward entropy. Many are creative in their own ways, building structures and civilizations, tearing them down, then beginning anew. Demons, however, driven by an insatiable thirst for destruction, seek to draw the entire universe into the vortex of annihilation that is the Abyss, their home.

This chapter presents a number of aspects about the Elemental Chaos, from the fabled City of Brass to the deepest pits of the Abyss.

- Visiting the Elemental Chaos: A discussion of the primary methods for reaching the Elemental Chaos and its planar traits. Getting to the plane is fairly simple. Getting around once you're there presents a host of challenges.
- Elemental Inhabitants: Birthplace of the primordials, the Elemental Chaos is now home to a countless variety of elemental creatures, from unthinking beings of living firmament to the titans, efreets, and demon princes who rule vast regions of the plane.
- Elemental Locales: The bulk of this chapter surveys important areas within the Elemental Chaos, focusing on exciting adventure destinations. The Abyss is the most prominent feature of the Elemental Chaos, and many locations within its endless depths are covered.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

VISITING THE ELEMENTAL CHAOS

The foundations of the world, an infinite expanse of matter and creation

ELEMENTAL CHAOS TRAITS
Type: Fundamental plane.
Size and Shape: The plane is infinite in extent. Elemental realms within it are bounded, finite areas with their own traits and laws. The Abyss is the largest and most significant elemental realm—a plane in its own right.
Gravity: Elemental buoyancy.
Mutability: Unstable.

No traveler to the Elemental Chaos could mistake it for any other plane or world in the infinity of existence. The "ground" might be bare elemental rock, hardening magma, a smooth sheet of ice or glass, or a field of jagged crystals or crumbling ash. Above, mountains of stone drift through the air or float on currents of lightning, while storm clouds collide with sheets of flame. Not far away, the ground comes to an end—a sheer cliff drops into an infinite abyss, or a river of magma cuts across the landscape. Another island might drift nearby, perhaps far below or just above—but sometimes on a collision course. The resulting cataclysm annihilates both landforms and creates something entirely new.

The substance of the Elemental Chaos is raw matter, unworked and unrefined. Air fills most expanses between masses of elemental material, making the majority of the plane at least theoretically hospitable to travelers from the world. In places, though, air is a hazard—swirling in ceaseless whirlwinds that grasp and never let go, or flowing as a liquid, cold enough to freeze fire.

Rock, iron, ice, crystal, and sand provide surfaces to stand on. Magma, molten metals, and even running flame stream through rivers or pool in great blazing lakes. Sometimes stone moves like water even without the heat of magma—an earthflow can carry away anything built on apparently solid ground. Blinding storms of sand or ash can arise at any moment, scouring flesh from bone.

Water flows in valleys cut through rock, but it also streams through empty air. It churns in vast tumultuous seas, floats in clouds of scalding steam, blows in storms of snow or hail, or drifts along as majestic icebergs.

Raw energy defies the constraints of material form. Sheets of fire dance across the sky, and liquid flame flows in canals through the City of Brass. Lightning flashes so constantly that those suitably protected find it to be solid footing. Thunder rolls like tidal waves across the expanse of the plane, flowing about or shattering whatever stands in its path.

All these substances and forces are in constant motion, subject to collisions, tides, and storms of raw chaos energy. The only constant within the Elemental Chaos is change—an eternal cycle of creation and annihilation. Within this instability are islands (some as large as continents) that enjoy a temporary reprieve—places where communities thrive and monsters dwell. Here, in these drifting realms, adventures in the Elemental Chaos typically unfold.

Reaching the Elemental Chaos

The world was formed out of the Elemental Chaos, and in places it remains close to its origin. In the crater of an active volcano, at the eye of a mighty storm, among the churning of an ocean maelstrom, or from the heart of an ancient glacier, the Elemental Chaos spills into the world in destructive glory. Adventurous characters might seek such locations as portals, or be drawn to them to combat creatures native to the Elemental Chaos that spill into the world. In their efforts to put a stop to the danger of an angry storm titan or a marching army of fire archons, the characters might pass unwittingly from the natural world to the Elemental Chaos beyond.

The Elemental Chaos is home to a metropolis that rivals the Astral Sea's Hestavar in grandeur, and exceeds it in decadence: the City of Brass, capital of the efreets. Like any bustling metropolis, the City of Brass is a hub for trade across the Elemental Chaos and to worlds beyond. Several permanent teleportation circles within and just outside the city are well-known destinations for the Planar Portal ritual, making it easily accessible to travelers seeking an entry point to the Elemental Chaos.

Permanent circles are also located in many of the githzerai monasteries found in the Elemental Chaos, and their sigils are cataloged in certain worldly monasteries. The Chaos's Ninth Bastion fortress also has a well-guarded circle. Many tomes of foul lore concerning demons and the Abyss contain sigil sequences that can be used in a Planar Portal ritual, but these sequences, more often than not, lead to traps, prisons, or regions of the uppermost Plain of a Thousand Pits that are more than likely fatal.

Finally, travelers who can't find a naturally occurring portal or the sigil address of an existing teleportation circle can use the Elemental Transference ritual (see page 150). This is risky, since the travelers arrive in a random place and can find it difficult to return.

EXPLORING THE ELEMENTAL CHAOS

The Elemental Chaos can be hard for adventurers to navigate, accustomed as they are to a world with a relatively level surface, consistent landmarks, and a defined north. Parts of the Elemental Chaos can be traversed on foot—vast rock slabs, ash fields, mineral plains, and ice sheets form extensive landscapes that hold plentiful opportunities for adventure. Others demand more exotic modes of transportation.

Flying mounts are popular and reliable means of getting from place to place among the jumbled elements of the Elemental Chaos. Mundane hippogriffs brought from the natural world can reach a monastery built on a floating earthmote, or find a dungeon tunneled into a mountain of ice. Hardier steeds native to the Elemental Chaos—such as rime-fire griffons, gorgons, or thunderhawks—are better able to navigate the hazards of the plane.

Both planar dromonds and spelljammers (see page 159) are useful vehicles for navigating the Elemental Chaos. With magical protection, planar dromonds can sail across oceans of magma, sand, and acid as easily as they can manage water. Even without such protections, planar dromonds remain useful for navigating the Elemental Chaos's vast seas and rivers. Spelljammers are more versatile, able to soar through open air anywhere in the plane.

Some denizens and explorers of the Elemental Chaos have created vehicles specialized for navigating certain kinds of terrain. Galleys and barges of magically enchanted metal traverse the fiery lakes and canals of the City of Brass, carrying goods to and from the great markets of the efreets. These ships are functionally identical to the oceangoing vessels of the world, but resistant to enormous heat.

Lightning skiffs are sleek vessels designed to ride the breakneck currents of electricity that shoot across the sky. These conveyances are the fastest mode of transport known in the Elemental Chaos. Similar in design to astral skiffs, the first lightning skiffs might have been modified githyanki vessels transported

DEMONGATES

A demongate is a permanent, two-way portal between the Abyss and the world. The rituals involved in creating such links give the ritual caster no control over any demons that might come through the portal, nor can demons be compelled to come through. Demons, however, are happy for the opportunity to enter the world and wreak havoc. The portal remains open, allowing creatures to pass through it in either direction, until it is sealed or destroyed. Most demongates open on the Plain of a Thousand Portals, the uppermost layer of the Abyss, but various ritual casters devoted to particular demon princes can open demongates to layers under their patron's control.

Of course, player characters aren't likely to seek out the ritual that creates a demongate (and therefore it is not offered in this book), but they might find themselves in a position to interrupt the ritual as it's being performed, or having to deal with its consequences!

A climactic encounter in an adventure that pits the characters against demonic cultists might bring the heroes onto the scene just as the leader of the cultists nears the final step of the ritual. This might be a straightforward combat encounter, possibly with the addition of a countdown timer—the characters have to kill the cult leader, or otherwise force him to stop the ritual, before the timer reaches zero. Otherwise, the portal opens and demons start rushing through. You might, for example, put a six-sided die on 1 at the cult leader's first turn in the initiative order, and turn it up 1 each time his turn comes around. When you turn the die to 6, the ritual is complete and the encounter becomes more complicated. Stunning the cult leader for a round isn't necessarily enough to interrupt the ritual, but it does keep the timer from increasing on his turn. You can use a four- or eight-sided die to vary the time pressure in the encounter.

You could also build the scene as a skill challenge within a combat encounter. To prevent the ritual's completion, the characters must use Arcana, Religion, and perhaps even Nature to identify the key focus items in the ritual and destroy them. The cultists, naturally, are keen to avoid that by keeping the group under constant attack. If the characters fail the skill challenge, the cultists complete the ritual and demons begin to arrive. You might bring a few demons through the gradually opening portal with each failed skill check, to dial up the tension as the encounter progresses.

Sealing a demongate can be accomplished using rituals (see the "Arcane Lock, Knock, and Portals" sidebar, page 149). At the DM's discretion, sealing or destroying a demongate might be a skill challenge that stands as an encounter on its own. Demons are attracted to the magical energies of a demongate and can detect variations in those energies. Any attempt to close or destroy such a portal typically draws the attention of demons near the Abyssal end. The DC for checks made to seal a demongate is equal to the Arcana check result of the character who performed the ritual to create the demongate; the DC for checks made to destroy the demongate is usually 10 higher. In practice, use DCs appropriate to the characters' level, referring to the Difficulty Class and Damage by Level Table (Dungeon Master's Guide, page 42).

STEVE ELLIS

from the Astral Sea into the Elemental Chaos. A lightning skiff can travel "downstream" on a lightning current at roughly 50 miles per hour, carrying half a dozen passengers in addition to its crew of three to five. A lightning skiff costs 20,000 gp.

A chaos glider is a small zeppelin with broad sails magically enchanted to catch the waves of raw chaos that ripple through the plane, and use that force for propulsion. Its crew of five leaves room for only one or two passengers and as much cargo as could fit on horseback. Riding chaos waves is a treacherous mode of travel. Sometimes a chaos glider drifts aimlessly in doldrums for days, and sometimes it is transported instantly across thousands of miles. Chaos gliders are not generally available for sale—they are best suited as one-time adventure elements to make characters' lives interesting.

Survival in the Elemental Chaos

Amid the crashing of earthmotes into rivers of magma and the blasting of superheated steam clouds through the sky, a less spectacular but more insidious hazard of the Elemental Chaos is the lack of sustenance for natives of the natural world. The City of Brass imports foodstuffs for its mortal residents and visitors, and where natural humanoids make their homes, agriculture or livestock has been cultivated. In the vast wilds, however, precious little to eat exists. Plants are rare, arising only where seeds from the natural world manage to take root in a hospitable environment. Most creatures native to the Elemental Chaos are inedible elemental beings, and the majority of the rest (such as slaads and demons) are unappetizing at best. Mortal visitors to the Elemental Chaos are well advised to bring their own rations.

Elemental Terrain and Hazards

Travel and battles in the Elemental Chaos can be dramatically influenced by terrain features—aspects that change without notice in the churning tempest of the plane. The fantastic terrain includes choke frost, fonts of power, and whirlwinds; hazards can be treacherous ice sheets, caustic geysers, and fields of everflame. Any or all of these features, as detailed in the Dungeon Master's Guide, might spice up an encounter in the Elemental Chaos.

The nature of the Elemental Chaos gives rise to many variations of these features. A whirlwind, for example, might incorporate fire or lightning, dealing damage to targets who enter or start their turn in the affected area (5 damage per tier is a useful starting point). A shifting earthflow might exert a slide effect similar to a whirlwind or current (Dungeon Master's Guide, page 45).

Bursts of Elemental Force: The simplest and most pervasive hazards in the Elemental Chaos are bursts of uncontrolled elemental force. Similar to the caustic geyser hazard (Dungeon Master's Guide, page 91), fiery blasts, lightning strikes, gusts of wind, frigid air, storms of hail, eruptions of magma, pounding thunder, or clouds of steam can appear anywhere at any time. These hazards commonly appear in bursts that attack each round, or as zones affecting creatures that enter or start their turn within them. You can modify the caustic geyser to use other elements and deal different types of damage. A cloud of elemental steam is an example of a hazard that creates a persistent zone in constant motion.

Cloud of Elemental Steam Level 14 Blaster
Hazard 1,000 XP

A cloud of scalding steam drifts across the battlefield, seemingly attracted to living creatures.

Hazard: This 3-square-by-3-square zone of shifting, almost sentient steam seeks out and scalds creatures that venture too close to its deadly wisps.

Perception
✦ DC 23: The character notices the cloud of steam before moving within 6 squares of it, and recognizes that it is moving.

Initiative +6
Trigger
The cloud of steam rolls initiative when a creature moves within 6 squares of it.

Attack ✦ Fire, Zone
No Action Close burst 2
Effect: The cloud of steam is a zone. Each round on its turn, the middle square of the zone slides 5 squares toward the nearest creature as a move action. Creatures that start their turn within the zone take 2d8+6 fire damage. Squares within the zone are heavily obscured.

Chaos Storm: In addition to the ubiquitous but relatively isolated bursts of force, storms of raw chaos sweep across the plane as well, posing a significant threat to travelers from other planes and natives alike. Of all denizens of the Elemental Chaos, only slaads are immune to the effects of a chaos storm.

Chaos Storm Level 16 Blaster
Hazard XP 1,400

A churning mass of raw chaos rolls across the battlefield, leaving nothing unchanged by its presence.

Hazard: A swirling mass of multicolored energy fills a single square but has tendrils that reach into every square within 3 squares of its central mass.

Perception
✦ The effects of a chaos storm are obvious as it moves through an area.

Initiative +10
Attack ✦ Zone
No Action Close burst 3
Effect: A chaos storm is a zone. Each round on its turn, the origin square of the zone slides 2d6 squares in a random direction as a move action. The storm has the following effects on creatures and objects in its burst:
✦ A creature teleports 1d6 squares in a random direction(roll 1d8 to determine direction) and takes 2d12 psychic damage. Slaads are immune to this effect.
✦ An unattended object that is not native to the Elemental Chaos is teleported as if it were a creature.
✦ A significant terrain feature, made of a singular elementalsubstance or energy and entirely contained within the burst, is transformed into a different kind of elemental substance or energy (DM's discretion). For example, a floating chunk of ice engulfed by the storm might become a ball of fire or an orb of acid. A geyser of acid could become a gout of cold or a spray of magma. The general effects of the terrain feature might remain similar or change dramatically, at the DM's option.

Countermeasure
✦ A character can attempt a DC 20 Intelligence check as a standard action to ward off the effects of the storm. On a success, the character becomes stabilized and is immune to the storm's teleportation and damage until the start of the character's next turn.

ELEMENTAL CHAOS INHABITANTS

The Elemental Chaos is home to many different creatures, from the demons that lurk in the swirling evil of the Abyss to the primordials that first shaped the world from the raw material of the elements.

Archons

Archons are the soldiers of the primordial host, birthed at the dawn of time to engage the legions of angels and mortal creatures that served the deities in the great war over the created world. Formed in apparently limitless numbers from raw elemental energy, archons might have turned the tide of war in the primordials' favor. Realizing the threat, however, the deities discovered the secrets of archon creation and focused a relentless assault on the forges where they were bound into physical form. To this day, many angels hold such a burning hatred for archons that they're willing to risk considerable danger to strike at an important archon stronghold or foundry.

Archons organize themselves into loose bands, possess a mindset based on conflict and conquest, and hone already keen minds for strategy and tactics. They have no particular loyalty to the defeated primordials. They serve mighty leaders of their own kind, titans who manage to command them, efreets and similarly powerful elemental creatures—anyone who can lead them into battle. When left to their own devices, they associate with other archons of the same kind—fire with fire, ice with ice, and so on. However, archons of a particular element hold no special enmity for other kinds of archons. Titans tend to lead archons with a common elemental background—storm titans command air archons, frost titans lead ice archons, and so on—though exceptions exist. Efreets make an effort to amass armies of diverse archon breeds, recognizing the military strength that comes of such diversity. Ice, air, and other archons don't have any difficulty serving the fiery efreets, as long as their leaders provide them with ample opportunities to fight.

Although the primordials originally created archons, the efreets stole or learned the secrets of their creation, and the knowledge spread from them. In essence, the ritual transforms the body and spirit of another elemental creature into an archon, bound within specially crafted armor. Archons often create more of their own kind—not by any kind of reproduction, but following the same techniques the primordials used at the dawn of time. The process requires a special forge built in a significant concentration of elemental energy. One such forge, which the efreets use to create fire archons, stands in the Char district of the City of Brass. Ice archons make more of their kind at a forge in the Crater of Blue Ice, a relatively stable formation located precariously close to the Abyss.

Demons

Though they congregate in the Abyss, demons are the most fearsome and dangerous creatures of the Elemental Chaos. If the Elemental Chaos embodies the constant tumult of destruction and creation, demons give savage form to the destructive part of that cycle. At the heart of the Abyss, destruction becomes annihilation, life and substance are snuffed from existence, and the cycle comes to an end. Demons are the tools the Abyss uses to extend the reach of its obliteration.

Most demons have simple desires: destroy as much as possible, preferably causing enormous pain in the process. The mightiest demons—princes such as Orcus, Demogorgon, and Graz'zt—have goals and aspirations beyond such basic drives. Specifically, they seek the extinction of the beings they hold responsible for the existence of the world they hate so much—the deities. Orcus's burning hatred for the Raven Queen is well known.

For the most part, demons are confined to the Abyss. No clear border divides the Abyss from the Elemental Chaos, however. It could be said that anywhere in the Elemental Chaos that demons appear is part of the Abyss, even when they strike out beyond their traditional haunts to attack slaads, githzerai communities, or efreet outposts. Demons rarely venture far above the Plain of a Thousand Portals, which is the uppermost region of the Abyss, but when they do, they often drag parts of the Elemental Chaos back with them, adding more material to the maelstrom of annihilation that is the Abyss.

Much like orcs or gnolls in the mortal world, demons are marauding raiders more interested in carnage than pillaging. Characters exploring the Elemental Chaos might encounter a rampaging demon band, or even be hired to help defend a small elemental realm from demonic attackers. Less often, demons are bound to serve mortal or elemental masters, including drow priestesses, powerful efreets, titans, or demon cultists. As DM, you don't need a good reason to use a demon in an adventure or encounter. They are the ultimate monsters, forces of raw devastation that present a clear and unambiguous threat for the characters to vanquish.

Efreets

If the primordials embody the churning elemental forces of the Elemental Chaos, the efreets are their opposite—the single greatest force contributing to stability amid the entropy. Prime examples of how a strong will can impose its own order on the Elemental Chaos, efreets have built lasting wonders. Their greatest achievement, the City of Brass, is a permanent still-point in the tempest, miraculously immune to chaos storms and even the entropic energies that surround primordials. The city's gleaming domes and minarets are unchanging and eternal.

Efreets are fond of stories, and often repeat anecdotes they know to be false because a useful grain of insight might be conveyed. This love of yarn might explain why no single account explains the origin of the efreets. Some legends claim that efreets were the first creation of a primordial of fire, or even that they existed before the primordials. Other chronicles tie them to the devils, portraying them as rebels against Asmodeus or his agents in the Elemental Chaos. Others claim that the ruler of the efreets is a deity who betrayed the other gods and joined forces with the primordials. Rumor has it that apparent changes in the leadership of the efreets are a matter of this deity changing appearance—or dying and being reincarnated in a new form. Still other narratives say the efreets are the children of a forbidden union between a primordial and a deity, and thus possess both elemental and divine nature. Each story suggests a key element of the efreets' nature, even if its details have no basis in reality.

Efreets are easily the most subtle, conniving, and cunning creatures in the Elemental Chaos, comparable to the devils of the Nine Hells. The evil merchant princes of the Elemental Chaos, they can fill a similar role in the world, even before your characters reach epic levels. They trade in slaves, so characters might try to liberate someone, or attempt to escape from slavery themselves. Accustomed to getting what they want, efreets sometimes employ adventurers or thieves to acquire items they desire but can't buy. An adventure might find the player characters at an efreet's service, in competition with another efreet's hireling to retrieve a certain item first. Alternatively, the characters might be the victims when an efreet's fancy turns to an item in their possession.

The important role of servitude in efreet society also suggests ways to use these monsters in adventures. Most simply, an efreet could be the unwilling servant of another villain, bound by honor to serve against its will. The player characters can fight and kill it just as they would any other monster, but they might also bargain with it. They could promise its freedom in exchange for whatever help it might be able to give without violating the terms of its servitude. If, in classic legendary fashion, an efreet is bound to an item—such as a magic lamp—characters might be able to turn the tide of a difficult battle by finding and seizing that item (it is probably not just sitting out in the open). Either negotiating with an efreet or finding its "magic lamp" could be a skill challenge set in the middle of an ongoing combat encounter that pits the characters against the efreet and its current master.

The City of Brass is a major population center in the Elemental Chaos and a hotbed of adventure possibilities. That said, efreets are a major force to be reckoned with throughout the Elemental Chaos—their influence extends far and wide through ties of debt, obligation, extortion, and coercion. Insofar as politics exist in the Elemental Chaos, efreets are entangled in them, spinning their webs among titans, githzerai, archons, and others in the plane. Throw an efreet's involvement into an adventure to add a hidden complication. What seemed at first like the simple matter of an expansionist fire titan warlord attacking a githzerai monastery can become a more intricate plot when the characters discover that both the fire titan and the githzerai abbot owe significant sums of money to the same efreet.

The worst enemy of any efreet is another efreet belonging to a different noble house. The scheming, political wrangling, and sometimes outright warfare among the houses provide endless possibilities for adventure. What might characters do if they're caught in the streets of the City of Brass when one efreet house launches an attack against another? What if the characters have an obligation of service to either the attacking or defending house? Characters might find it easy to secure the assistance of an efreet, if they're willing to act in some way against the efreet's enemies—even if they don't necessarily know that's what they're doing.

Elementals

Elementals are as ubiquitous and pervasive in the Elemental Chaos as normal animals are in the mortal world. The elementals from the Monster Manual are but a few examples of the staggering variety found throughout the plane.

Elementals are limitless in shape, size, composition, and temperament, and they defy easy classification. They take shape from the base matter of the plane; what sentience they possess might be fragments of the minds of the primordials, but no one is certain. Some are dumb beasts; others are as smart as ogres or perhaps kobolds. In general, they lack any degree of society or civilization except what's imposed on them in servitude to efreets, titans, or other masters.

Elementals subsist by consuming elemental matter—some just incorporate it into their substance, but others ingest and digest it in some manner. Magma beasts commonly eat organic matter as well as rocks and metals, but it's not clear whether this food provides them with any nourishment or just a pleasant sensation akin to taste.

Elementals are dangerous to adventurers when they are hungry or territorial—which is most of the time. They're also found in the service of more powerful creatures—pressed into efreet armies, conjured by ritual casters or primordial cultists, or driven before titans in their warring rampages.

Genasi

Genasi are elemental humanoids with numerous legends surrounding their origin. Perhaps they were first created as a slave race by the efreets, or perhaps they descend from humanoids who came to the Elemental Chaos from the natural world ages ago. The first genasi may have arisen from elementals "gifted" with the sentience of a powerful primordial, or they might be the creations of a long-forgotten god who sought to break the primordials' hold over the Elemental Chaos.

Genasi are highly adaptable denizens of the Elemental Chaos, gifted with an adventurous spirit and an unquenchable sense of wanderlust that have over the eons scattered the race across the entire plane and beyond. Genasi are most commonly found in the streets of the City of Brass, many of them bound as slaves and servants to powerful efreets. Others eke out modest livings as traders, artisans, laborers, and guides.

Githzerai

Githzerai are not particularly numerous in the Elemental Chaos, but they are similar to the efreets in that their settlements are among the rare places where the Elemental Chaos is tamed. Unlike the efreets, the githzerai are not native to the Elemental Chaos; they are natural humanoids who migrated from the world in ages long past. Their communities exert a stabilizing influence over the surrounding pandemonium. Individual githzerai spend time at the settlement boundaries where that influence ends, studying the Elemental Chaos and learning to counter it.

Githzerai settlements are not generally welcoming to outsiders, but travelers in need of aid are more likely to find it from these humanoids than from other inhabitants of the Elemental Chaos. The enigmatic githzerai make excellent villains or allies for player characters venturing into the Elemental Chaos, since they have the same wide range of desires and motivations that humans do. A learned race, they are also an excellent source of information about the Elemental Chaos and its denizens.

Primordials

The primordials (hundreds or perhaps thousands in number) are ancient forces of creation that were first to emerge from the Elemental Chaos. In a frenzy of creation, they built the world from the Elemental Chaos's churning matter and energy. They are primal aspects of nature, driven to create and re-create in an endless cycle of building and destruction. If the primordials had been left to their desires, the world would have remained a place of elemental fury and spectacular destruction.

But the primordials were not allowed to have the final say. The deities of the Astral Sea were fascinated with this protocreation, and set about making improvements to it—spreading life across the world, separating the roiling elements into oceans and landmasses. The gods created angels to serve them, and mortals to populate the world and worship them. Their influence imbued the world with a hint of the permanence of the eternal Astral Sea, establishing a stable place for their mortal creations to reside.

The deity-inspired permanence was anathema to the primordials. They sought to drive the gods from the world they had made, removing all traces of their interference so they could tear the creation asunder and build it anew. The deities refused to bend and fought to preserve the world and the mortals they had made.

In the end, the deities prevailed. They killed several of the great primordials, imprisoned others, and forbade the rest from ever again walking the world. Chained and raging in divinely crafted prisons, the ancient beings lie hidden within the cosmos. They wait for the hour when they can unleash elemental retaliation upon all of creation. Every once in a great while, a single primordial erupts into the world, sending chaos roiling in its wake. At these times, the mightiest of heroes emerge and face their greatest trials.

The primordials are raw, untamed chaos in elemental form, almost indistinguishable from the plane that birthed them. They possess power and intellect to rival or exceed the deities, but they are far from subtle. They don't represent ideals or concepts—they embody the natural forces of creation and annihilation. They exist solely to act out that cycle, using the churning tempest of the Elemental Chaos as paint and canvas. Most are unaligned, a few are Evil or Chaotic Evil—all stand as sworn enemies of the deities and seize any possible opportunity to avenge the defeat they suffered at the beginning of time.

Most primordials are imprisoned in some way. Mual-Tar, the Thunder Serpent, is bound by chains made in Moradin's forge, attached to stakes whose magic stabilizes the surrounding Chaos into a desolate plain of rock. Vezzuvu, the Burning Mountain, is trapped in a field of radiance, shifted partly out of reality, unable to affect her surroundings, or be affected by them. The deities cut off the head of Balcoth, the Groaning King, but it survives as a monstrous face of ash and cinders buried in a cave somewhere in the endless Chaos, unable to muster his mighty elemental power until he can re-form or reclaim his body.

Though the primordials cling to only a tiny fraction of the power they held before their war with the deities, they still have servants and worshipers—elementals and mortals who view them as patrons, guides, or potential allies against the gods and their servants. Some goblin tribes in the natural world devote themselves to the Fire Lord Imix, seeking to unleash the eternal flame of their primordial master on their enemies. Deranged titans gather around the unchanging glacier where Solkara, the Crushing Wave, is imprisoned, channeling the hottest flames of the Elemental Chaos in a vain attempt to melt the prison.

Primordials fill a role similar to that of deities and demon princes—they're immensely powerful creatures that are appropriate threats only for epic characters at the pinnacle of their powers. Still, they can influence a campaign at the lowest levels through their minions and servitors. Characters might strive against Imix's goblin cult in the heroic tier, battle fire archons dedicated to the Fire Lord in their paragon levels, and fight their way through fire titans at the Temple of the Consuming Flame before confronting Imix at the end of their careers.

Slaads

Entropy personified, the slaads thrive in the ever-changing Chaos but do not serve its elemental forces. Their movements and aims seem random. Their sole purpose appears to be bringing more chaos into existence, which they accomplish both through the random destructiveness of their actions and through the creation of more slaads.

The origin of the slaads and their place in the universe relative to primordials, demons, and other elemental creatures is uncertain. They believe themselves to be the first inhabitants of the universe, predating even the deities and primordials. Unlike other denizens of the Elemental Chaos, their physical form does not embody elemental forces such as fire or ice. Instead, they embody the chaos of elements churning together in the planar tempest.

Slaads are more akin to demons than other elemental creatures. This leads some sages to claim either that demons are in truth corrupted slaads, that slaads are a race of demons that is somehow not tethered to the Abyss, or that slaads were once demons that broke free of the influence of the Abyss and the Evil at its core. Slaads and demons have no particular affinity for each other. A few travelers have report encountering slaads and demons together, apparently cooperating in the destruction of some edifice or settlement in the Elemental Chaos. Because no pattern appears in these alliances, they are considered chance encounters rather than coordinated assaults. The slaads simply happen across demons engaged in acts of devastation and join in for the sake of unfettered chaos, or the other way around. As often as not, the two groups end up fighting each other when nothing else is left to destroy.

Slaads make ideal "wandering monsters" in the Elemental Chaos—they can appear anywhere and for any reason, or for no reason at all. They might arrive suddenly just to keep a level of tension and excitement at the game table. They might follow the meandering path of a chaos storm (see page 67), attacking any creatures they encounter and reveling in entropy as the storm washes over the battlefield.

Titans

According to some legends, the titans are servants of the primordials in much the same way that angels serve the deities. Tales tell that the titans were the first creatures, the first living things to draw breath after the deities and primordials themselves took shape. Their place in the universe suggests comparisons with angels, but few other similarities are evident. Crudely shaped from raw elemental substance, the titans are about as different from the refined, elegantly sculpted angels as any creature could be.

FRANZ VOHWINKEL

Believing themselves to be the firstborn of creation, the titans seek to emulate their primordial masters. They shape kingdoms for themselves from the raw forces of chaos, calling them "worlds" in imitation of the larger world they once helped shape. Unlike the efreets, though, the titans revel in the entropic jumble of elemental forces and do not try to impose order on the regions they control. For a fire titan, for example, it is enough that his domain be a fiery region, choked with ash and smoke and flowing with magma. If the chaos changes this region so it no longer fits that description, he either seeks to alter it back or moves to a new region better suited to his taste. Within those broad parameters, the chaos in a titan's domain still churns, wild and untamed—nothing at all like the relative stability of the City of Brass. Among the greatest of the titan kingdoms are Sakath-Mazim, the Kingdom of the Ashen Storm, ruled by the warmongering fire titan king Surtur; Kaltenheim, the Kingdom of the Howling Ice, ruled by Surtur's blustery nemesis, the frost titan king Thrym; and Torrakor, the Kingdom of the Black Waves, ruled by the mad storm titan queen Ysaga.

Titans war with each other for control of their world-creations. An earth titan might seek to conquer the rocky land of a rival titan, or attempt to wrest the shadowy domain of a death titan from its ruler's control, then transform it into a region more to his liking. Giants, archons, salamanders, and multitudes of other elemental creatures are their foot soldiers in these wars of conquest, but no titan rules from afar or leads from the rear. The raw physicality of combat is in harmony with their essential nature, and they live to participate in the clash of battle.

At least in theory, titans remain loyal to their restrained or imprisoned primordial masters. Some fire titans are loyal to the Fire Lord Imix. Others are sworn to serve Shangar the Uncrowned or Vezzuvu, the Burning Mountain. A storm titan might pledge her loyalty to Mual-Tar, the Thunder Serpent, or heed the unspoken call of Castanamir, the Shattered Khan, or Olhydra the Rain Queen. In practice, most titans serve their own agendas first, with the goals of their imprisoned creators merely a distant thought in the back of their minds.

Many titans have more than a passing interest in the world their ancestors helped create. They would dearly love a chance to reclaim it from the deities who usurped it. Many titan realms contain places where the Elemental Chaos erupts into the world, spilling out into the hearts of active volcanoes, ocean storms, or freezing wastes. Possibly titans seek these places as sites for their territories, but it also might be that titans can open these portals with time and effort. In the world, these areas are usually well populated with giants.

Titans are good threats—alone, in numbers, or with minions—for characters from high paragon level to the pinnacles of their epic careers. They are not beings consumed by deep thought—they are creatures of powerful physicality, not subtlety, scheming, or diplomacy. They are best used as straightforward monsters, lording over domains that can be dungeons or wilderness environments in the Elemental Chaos. They rule through force of arms, bending giants and lesser elemental creatures to their service. Their weak wills leave them susceptible to the cunning entanglements of efreets, devils, or similarly cerebral creatures—even mortal visitors from the natural world.

ELEMENTAL CHAOS LOCALES

The turbulent nature of the Elemental Chaos means that few locations within the plane have any real permanence. Strong-willed individuals and communities can shape the Elemental Chaos to their desires, but these realms last only as long as their inhabitants continue to exert their will to maintain them. The City of Brass is the longest-lived exception to that rule, but even it might someday dissolve back into the Elemental Chaos, swallowed up by the inexorable forces of entropy that are the true rulers of the plane.

The City of Brass

Amid the swirling chaos stands an indomitable oasis—the sweltering yet grand abode of the efreets

CITY OF BRASS TRAITS

Type: Elemental realm.
Size and Shape: Walled metropolis surrounded by a sea of fire; bounded.
Gravity: Elemental buoyancy.
Mutability: Normal.
Fire Affinity: Attacks with the fire keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks with the cold keyword deal half damage (ongoing cold damage is not affected).

The oldest city in all creation, the City of Brass is a nexus for planar travelers. Those willing to look long and hard enough can find anything they have ever imagined somewhere in its labyrinthine avenues. With numerous grand bazaars and ornate shops, the City of Brass is the mercantile center of the universe.

Built on a vast basalt plate in an immense volcanic field on the edge of a fiery sea, the City of Brass is a still point in the churning tempest of the plane, and a relatively hospitable destination for mortal travelers. It is the home of the fiery efreets, and the temperature is invariably hot—comparable to a sweltering summer day in most places; more like the inside of a smelting forge or the slopes of an active volcano in others.

THE CITY OF BRASS

The capital city of the efreets, the City of Brass is the marketplace of the universe, where virtually anything can be bought or sold.

Population: Approximately 500,000. Efreets form the upper class of the city, with only a handful of disgraced members standing outside the noble caste. Other residents include salamanders, archons, azers, genasi, fire giants and titans, demons, and other intelligent elemental creatures, as well as a smaller number of visitors and immigrants from the natural world. Roughly two-thirds of the city's residents are slaves.

Government: Bashamgurda is the Lord of the Efreets, ruling the city from his Charcoal Palace.

Defense: An entire caste of slaves are born and raised as soldiers to defend the City of Brass against incursion from the wider Elemental Chaos and the Abyss. These include archons, azers, and salamanders. A corps of fanatical efreet warriors called the Unquenchable patrol the Charcoal Palace. The city guard, housed in the Ashlarks district, consists primarily of archon and salamander soldiers.

Inns and Taverns: The best place for visitors to find food or lodging is the district of Iskalat, near the city's harbor. The inns and taverns ringing the harbor cater to travelers from across the Elemental Chaos and other planes beyond. Guests are advised to keep a close eye on their valuables and be wary of con artists, but little risk of death or enslavement exists.

Supplies: Commoner's Market; Street of Steel in the Keffinspires; Marlgate warehouses; Pyraculum bazaar. Anything can be bought in the City of Brass. The Commoner's Market in the district of Avencina is an ideal place to secure both ordinary and exotic goods of a nonmagical nature. The Keffinspires district is home to most of the city's smiths, who make and sell magical and mundane item, including weapons and armor. The warehouses of the Marlgate district hold goods brought from across the planes for trade in the city, and the bazaars of Pyraculum offer the greatest diversity of high-quality goods.

Temples: The City of Brass is hostile to worshipers of the deities, and holds no public temples to any gods. The primordial known as the Fire Lord, Imix, has an opulent temple in the Furnace called the Eternal Flame Pavilion. Residents of the city are strongly encouraged to offer praise and gratitude to the lord of the Charcoal Palace in large shrines located in each district.

Approaching the City of Brass

Though not as well connected as Sigil (see page 25), the City of Brass contains many permanent planar portals linking it to other locations, as well as a large number of teleportation circles that allow ritual casters access to the city. The vast majority of both portals and circles are controlled by efreet nobles who maintain tight security to prevent enemies from using them. One teleportation circle is carved in a huge brass plate just outside the Diamond Gate, right alongside the major thoroughfare leading into the Keffinspires district of the city. The sigil sequence for this portal is widely known, making it the most common means of reaching the City of Brass. A large contingent of archon guards stand to repel any incursion from this access point.

Travelers within the Elemental Chaos commonly make use of planar dromonds to reach the City of Brass, and less often find their way to the city on spelljammers, lightning skiffs, or chaos gliders. Experienced dromond captains claim that all magma flows and seas of liquid fire lead eventually to the Sea of Fire and the harbor of the City of Brass, particularly if one is traveling from another efreet settlement. The powerful will of the efreets creates stable, navigable channels of fiery liquid connecting their settlements to the capital city.

Travelers who don't come by way of the Sea of Fire cross the basalt plain and enter the city though one of seven gates: the Gate of the Eternal Sun into the Rookery, the Diamond Gate or the Shimmering Gate into Keffinspires, the Gate of Ashes into Avencina, the Golden Gate into the Plume, or the Prism Gate or the Gate of the Desert Wind into Cindersweeps. Each of these gates (along with the harbor's Magma Gate) is a fortress with a permanent garrison, numerous obstacles and towers, and a dedicated military commander.

Architecture

Even the poorest neighborhoods of the City of Brass feature monumental buildings made of granite, basalt, obsidian, or other igneous rock. Buildings made of any more combustible materials do not last long in the city's fiery environment. The wealthier neighborhoods also include buildings plated with or made from solid brass, copper, or iron, and trimmed with precious metal filigree. The city's skyline features slender towers, glittering domes, terraced ziggurats, and tall spires reaching high into the smoke-clouded sky. Colorful murals and ornate sculptures adorn buildings and public areas.

In much of the city, stone buildings show signs of wear, some even crumbling and in various states of disrepair. This leads some to suggest (privately) that the efreets' control over the surrounding maelstrom is not as complete as they claim.

Illumination

The surrounding Sea of Fire and the fiery canals crisscrossing the city provide a dim red glow throughout the City of Brass. Pots of unquenchable elemental fire hang at intervals along the streets to supplement this illumination.

Laws and Society

The City of Brass has a highly developed dual set of laws—one code for efreets, and another for everyone else. Few restrictions are placed on the efreets' behavior or trade. Members of other races labor under numerous regulations pertaining to how they conduct themselves, how they do business, and the taxes they must pay on their transactions. These laws are well publicized (posted at the gates and in each inn and public house) and are relatively simple to follow for those who wish to obey them. Some of the more obvious laws prohibit theft, murder, kidnapping, and misrepresentation of goods.

Lawbreakers are sentenced to a period of slavery under the control of the offended party—often the city itself, though such slaves are usually sold in the markets in the Arches. The original length of servitude can be extended for additional infractions, ranging from speaking impolitely to one's master (seven days for a first infraction, or if a year has passed since the last infraction) to attempting to escape (one year plus one year for each day the slave was missing). Aside from breaking laws, the most common way that visitors to the City of Brass become slaves is by borrowing money and not being able to repay it (and the accrued interest) in time.

Slaves must wear and display bracelets indicating their servitude and their master. They are commonly bought and sold during the period of their slavery. Once the sentence is served, a slave again becomes a free person.

The Districts

Like many other metropolises, the City of Brass is organized into districts—fourteen different sectors, each with its own local character.

Arches: This area lies between the naval yards and the well-to-do neighborhood of the Foundry. Its most notable location is a bustling slave market.

Ashlarks: This residential area is home to many of the free nonefreets of the city, as well as a few of the least prominent efreet houses. The landmark feature here is Long Castle, home to the city guard.

Avencina: Avencina is a rowdy, lower-class district where many races mingle. It contains the Commoner's Market, one of the city's largest open-air bazaars. Though buying or selling stolen merchandise is strictly illegal, one would be hard pressed to explain the many used, "secondhand" items in any other way. All merchandise is sold as-is. Frequently, a vendor selling in the market one day isn't there the next (or, at least, not in the same disguise).

Castings: In the shadow of the Furnace, this district is home to the barracks of the city's slave army. A great monument in the form of a giant archway, called the Gate of the Fallen, celebrates the many victories of the efreets in battle. It depicts them triumphing over most of the creatures native to the Elemental Chaos and the natural world.

The Char: The smell of molten metal suffuses this business district, where metalworking businesses congregate. The area houses the Red Wyrm Smelter, which has several different slave-operated workshops and refines great quantities of ore brought into the city. The Forge of Manacles makes shackles for the city's slaves, and Locksmith's Row provides the fasteners. The massive Firespring creates fire archon soldiers for the city's defense.

Cindersweeps: This neighborhood houses lower-class, free residents for the most part. The notable features are the Military Dock, Drydocks, and the Keep of Fire Striking Steel. The fortress serves as an armory for the harbor garrisons. The Naval Yards allow restricted admittance to the city's canal system via the Naranj Canal.

The Foundry: Visitors to the city sometimes make the mistake of going to the Foundry district in search of the metalsmiths who actually do business in the Char or Keffinspires. The Foundry is the third most exclusive neighborhood of the city, boasting large, ornate mansions and beautiful memorials to past notable personages. Efreets not well enough connected to live near the palaces of the Furnace and not wealthy enough to live in the Plume reside here. In addition, the wealthiest members of other races live here, since only efreets are allowed to live in the Furnace or the Plume. The prominent locations in the district are the Plaza of the Hunters, the Plaza of the Silver Chariot, the Gate of Glory, and the Fountain of Clearest Azure.

The Furnace: The most exquisite district in the City of Brass is the Furnace, a perfect hemisphere with the Charcoal Palace rising from its center. Government offices in the Red Pillar Halls surround the palace and accompanying areas, which include the Barracks of the Ring of Fire (the Lord of the Efreets' personal guard), and the Eternal Flame Pavilion (a shrine sheathed in beaten gold, dedicated to the primordial Fire Lord, Imix).

Iskalat: This district contains public docks for planar dromonds and other vessels that sail on the Sea of Fire. The Magma Gate allows entrance to the harbor, and from there to the city's canal system. Anyone who makes a living from vessels (repair, provisioning, or housing/recreation for travelers) lives and does business here. The district's a lively one, with many different races of planar travelers occupying the numerous inns and taverns. A notable landmark is the obsidian-walled Octagon, a great prison containing magic cells designed to keep even powerful creatures carefully sealed away.

Keffinspires: The main feature of this merchant district is the Street of Steel, where numerous smiths manufacture and sell weapons, armor, tools, and other items. The smiths of this district include a sizeable population of azers.

Marlgate: Located just south of the Ashlarks and north of Iskalat, this district holds the warehouses that store all that is worth having. The goods from the holds of planar dromonds are bought here and sold in bulk.

The Plume: Second in splendor to the Furnace alone, the Plume houses the wealthiest and most noble of the efreet houses. Only efreets can own or occupy property in this district. Magnificent buildings overlook splendid open courtyards. The district also houses the Castle of the Sun and Moon, where the city's finest legions live and train.

Pyraculum: This area houses the City Market, which is larger and slightly more upscale than the bazaar found in Avencina. Artisans of different races live and work here.

Rookery: An infamous quarter of the City of Brass, this area is renowned throughout the plane as the most dangerous and lawless area of the city. Even the city guards sometimes fear this place. Its gambling dens, pleasure gardens, and fighting pits never close.

The Keening Delve

Not far from the City of Brass, a shrieking wind howls along a network of tunnels cut through a great mass of blood-red rock. The maddening sound is audible for miles around. It can even be heard on quiet evenings in the City of Brass, faint but clear, like a mourning wail.

This is the Keening Delve, an apparently permanent feature of the Elemental Chaos. According to legend, the elemental rock is the ancient stronghold of a slain primordial, Haemnathuun. Bahamut, Bane, and Ioun killed the primordial lord during the ancient war, and thousands of years of raging wind—the echoes of his dying screams, it is said—have worn his old citadel into a shapeless mass. Now croaking slaads, howling demons, and rampaging elementals infest the twisting tunnels, all driven to madness by the constant blaring of the wind.

The Keening Delve is an example of a classic D&D dungeon in the Elemental Chaos, with the City of Brass as a fine launching point for adventures that bring characters into the howling tunnels. Since the lair of a dead primordial might easily conceal a tremendous source of magical power, the characters could venture into the Delve in an attempt to claim a fragment of that power—or even the crystalline heart supposed to lie in the center of the Delve. Haemnathuun's heart might have the power to bring the primordial back to life if united with the dead body floating in the Astral Sea. The characters could venture into the Delve seeking to destroy that artifact, or otherwise prevent a cult from resurrecting the dead primordial.

The Ninth Bastion

Though eight times the bastion shall fail,
Yet once more shall the walls rise up against the tempest.
—From the Tablet of Resh Maraz

Thousands of years ago, the empire of Mira spread its influence across much of the world. The Miran rulers were powerful priests of Erathis and Bane, commanding mighty rituals that helped their armies to victory. They even created Miran colonies in the Shadowfell and the Feywild. The empire's attempt to extend its influence into the Elemental Chaos may have spelled its doom but also allowed its influence to survive to the present day, in the form of the Ninth Bastion.

When the Miran rulers opened portals to the Elemental Chaos, they met with initial success. A paladin-general now remembered only as the Lawbringer established a fortress in the Elemental Chaos, called the Bastion of Law, and began taming the turbulent storm around it. The forces of Chaos responded, though, and soon the Bastion had fallen and legions of archons marched through the portals leading back to the Miran capital. Within a decade, the empire was destroyed and its colonies across the planes lay in ruins.

The Heirs of the Lawbringer fled the destruction of their capital and hid in forgotten passageways of the Bastion of Law. When the archons departed that ruined keep, the knightly order rebuilt. To this day, they maintain the Ninth Bastion in the Elemental Chaos. Clinging to a fragment of prophecy recorded on stone tablets rescued from the ruins of the Miran capital, the Heirs of the Lawbringer believes that holding the Bastion against the Elemental Chaos is its sacred responsibility. Indeed, such a presence is the key to the ultimate triumph of order and civilization in the universe. The Bastion has dissolved into the Elemental Chaos several times over the centuries—tradition says eight times, but the true number is much higher—but so far it has always been rebuilt.

As its name suggests, the Ninth Bastion is more a fortress than a city. Much like a dwarven citadel carved into the face of a mountain, the Ninth Bastion is shaped from an enormous mass of solid iron, sculpted into impregnable walls and towers, with tunnels leading to vaulted halls protected by a mile of iron on every side. Elemental lightning is shaped into a dome protecting the exposed parts of the fortress from aerial attack. A layer of soil brought from the world has been used to create a small farm where the Bastion ekes out a modest crop, but the fortress is far more dependent on imported food than the Heirs of the Lawbringer would prefer.

The society of the Ninth Bastion is rigidly militaristic and regulated. Visitors are admitted to the city, but kept under close supervision in case they turn out to be spies of a titan or efreet plotting the destruction of the fortress.

THE NINTH BASTION

An outpost of law in the Elemental Chaos, the Ninth Bastion is a military fortress standing proudly against the entropic forces that have overwhelmed it in the past and likely will again.

Population: Approximately 15,000. Most citizens are humans or dwarves. Some azers, liberated from the giants, reside in the city, and a few efreet merchants are allowed inside its walls, but these elementals are watched closely and their movements severely restricted.

Government: The Heirs of the Lawbringer, an order of knights, form the military government of the Bastion. Knight-Commander Dejann Selekai, a paladin of Erathis, is the current commander.

Defense: The Heirs of the Lawbringer number only 81 knights at any time. The other citizens of the Bastion are required to perform military service as soon as they reach adulthood and again on command throughout their lives.

Inns and Taverns: Outer Barracks; Shield and Platter Tavern; Charhouse. Those few travelers welcomed into the Ninth Bastion are assigned to the Outer Barracks, where they can stay in comfort but remain under the watchful eye of Barracks Captain Fask Arrior, who hopes to be a knight before long. The Shield and Platter tavern, located just down the Street of Silver from the Outer Barracks, is popular with both visitors and citizens of the Bastion. The Charhouse, run by an azer called Hurden, offers imported meat thoroughly cooked.

Supplies: Supplies are sparse in the Ninth Bastion. A few efreet merchants offer staples and a scant offering of luxuries brought from the City of Brass. Dwarf and azer smiths sell metalwork, but iron mined from the Bastion is tightly rationed.

Temples: Temple of Law (Erathis and Bane). The grand Temple of Law stands just inside the Lawbringer's Gate, which leads from the main outer courtyard to the inner part of the fortress. Dedicated to Erathis and Bane, the temple is the most extravagant edifice in the city, ornamented with treasures brought from the ruins of the Miran Empire and its far-flung colonies.

Zerthadlun

Order and entropy, creation and destruction—an uneasy balance sustains the universe. This is the philosophy of the githzerai. In Zerthadlun, the largest githzerai community in the Elemental Chaos, that balance is the subject of lifelong contemplation and study. Living in a gently regulated monastic order, the githzerai seek the proper blend of activity and meditation, work and leisure, self and community. More welcoming than the Ninth Bastion and less dangerous than the City of Brass, Zerthadlun is a peaceful oasis in the tumult of the Elemental Chaos.

Zerthadlun is a walled city built on a wide expanse of rock, transformed by labor and ritual into fields where the githzerai grow thin but hardy crops. The architecture and décor of the city are best described as austere, allowing plenty of comfort but little luxury.

Cenobites are the adult githzerai who have taken a vow to obey the community's rules and defend it from attack, and they make up about three-quarters of the city's population. The remaining population consists of young githzerai, a few adult githzerai who have not taken the vow, and a handful of nongithzerai attached to the community. Cenobites live in communal housing and work in fields or group workplaces where they produce goods for trade within the community and sale beyond its walls.

A select few among the cenobites, called the Sustainers, are released from the responsibilities of daily work to spend their waking hours in meditation that keeps the Elemental Chaos at bay. Their retreat at the exact center of the city is all but sealed off, and these nineteen monks live lives of complete seclusion.

More than once, assassins employed by the efreets of the nearby Ashblack Outpost, a colony of the City of Brass, have tried and failed to eliminate the Sustainers and thereby destroy the city.

ZERTHADLUN

The greatest githzerai city in the Elemental Chaos is an oasis of calm.

Population: Approximately 20,000. It is almost entirely githzerai.

Government: The head of the community carries the title Adlishar, loosely translated as "first among many." Adlishar Rallamen settles disputes and administers justice at the highest levels of the community. Otherwise, the cenobites live according to strict rules of discipline that every member of the community helps police.

Defense: Part of the cenobite creed is full participation in the defense of the community, so nearly every adult citizen of Zerthadlun can be called upon in a crisis. Though it is essentially a citizen militia, this army is well trained and organized.

Inns and Taverns: Zerth's Welcome; Still Point Tavern. Zerthadlun maintains a guest house, Zerth's Welcome, where the occasional visitors to the community can stay free of charge. The Still Point tavern, ironically, is the most boisterous and rowdy place in all Zerthadlun. A dwarf named Meleth owns and operates it, privately espousing the idea that the githzerai need to "loosen up a bit" while publicly avowing nothing but respect for the disciplined, orderly ways of the cenobites. So far, the Adlishar tolerates the tavern's presence because few cenobites frequent it.

Supplies: Open-air markets; Askar's Outfitters. Zerthadlun strives to be a self-sufficient oasis in the Elemental Chaos, and cenobites work in a variety of trades to supply the members of the community with the staples of life. Cenobites barter their goods in open-air markets. Excess products are sold to efreet traders or to Askar's Outfitters, a shop catering to visitors and other noncenobites. Askar is a human, but he's secretly on the payroll of an Ashblack efreet.

Temples: Temple of the Mind (Ioun, Corellon, Raven Queen, Vecna); Temple of Making (Erathis, Moradin). The Temple of Mind, near the center of the city, is devoted to Ioun, Corellon, and the Raven Queen. Vecna is also acknowledged in the temple, though not openly worshiped. In the heart of the city's workplaces is the Temple of Making, dedicated to Erathis and Moradin.

The Abyss

In the deepest reaches of the Elemental Chaos, the roiling tempest of elemental forces begins to change. A pattern of movement becomes apparent—a slow, downward spiral toward a black mote of utter annihilation at its root. Like a maelstrom that draws ocean vessels into the watery depths, the Abyss is a swirling vortex of destruction, dragging everything down toward its heart.

Travelers that fly above the Abyss can feel the strength of its pull, partly as a physical weight and partly as a psychological drag. The vortex is like a constant presence, a watching eye or siren song. Setting foot on any of the Abyss's layers solidifies that feeling. Some describe it as stronger gravity, others as having one's soul slowly drained out one's feet. This sensation nags at the back of a visitor's mind—but it pales quickly in the face of more immediate dangers.

The Abyss consists of uncounted layers, each one a floating piece of terrain caught in an inescapable downward spiral. Each layer is a unique microcosm of terror, presenting a different face. One truth remains constant, however: The Abyss works to destroy its inhabitants with a passion and tenacity that might best be described as sentient.

Unlike the rest of the Elemental Chaos, the Abyssal layers include organic material—floating masses of tumor-filled flesh, thick forests of razor-branched vines, or wasting deserts of powdered bone. Even the raw elemental matter of the Abyss is corrupted and malign, from clouds of scalding steam that chase prey to lakes of bubbling, acidic slime.

By a trick of magical force, personality, and intractable will, a particularly powerful demon can entice or enslave a layer of the Abyss to its will, shaping it into a form that mirrors the demon's dark nature. Such a creature becomes nearly as powerful as a deity, achieving a status akin to nobility among its peers. The fortified realms of these demon lords form the principal battlegrounds of their less powerful minions, for the lords of the Abyss constantly scheme and war against each other. Some of the more arrogant lords fancy themselves demon princes, but these self-proclaimed honors mean little in the Abyss. A demon maintains power only as long as it can keep it.

Traveling the Abyss

Travelers commonly reach the Abyss by passing through a demongate (page 65) or using a portal to a specific destination. It is possible, though, to descend through the Elemental Chaos until entropy becomes annihilation. This method of travel usually deposits travelers on the Plain of a Thousand Portals, which holds portals to many (perhaps all) of the other Abyssal layers. From there, it's possible, but inadvisable, to fly between layers in search of a desired destination. The demons, after all, live in the layers of the Abyss—the space between layers is haunted by creatures even the demons fear.

The Plain of a Thousand Portals

The only distinct boundary between the Abyss and the Elemental Chaos is the Plain of a Thousand Portals, also called Pazunia or the Plain of Yawning Pits. It is a vast expanse of windswept barrens and jagged tors flickering with swarms of bloodthirsty demons. Its sky is filled with dark red fire, bathing the plain in sweltering heat and harsh light. Everywhere are massive pits that plunge into deeper levels of terror, portals to other layers of the Abyss. Most of these chasms are two-way portals, but some are one-way, leaving no means of return. Many pits lead to inhospitable layers filled with deadly environmental dangers. Some of the remote layers of the Abyss do not attach to Pazunia at all, and are accessible only from stable gates on lower layers.

On the edges of the great pits crouch massive iron fortresses, inhabited by mighty demons who have not yet mustered the power to bend an entire layer to their wills. These warlike, scheming demons use special chambers within the fortresses to project themselves into the mortal world, where they attempt to sway events and attract followers and cultists. When so engaged, their physical forms are helpless, protected only by their iron fortresses and hordes of servitor creatures and pact-bound allies.

Because it is a gateway to most of the plane, Pazunia draws merchants, explorers, and occultists from throughout the universe. The layer is self-contained, but it's so large that huge sections of it remain essentially unexplored. Maps of Pazunia seldom attempt to encompass the whole layer, but instead focus upon a smaller section bounded by the iron fortresses of locally influential demons.

Abysm

The primal, tropical realm of the two-headed demon prince Demogorgon reflects the bestial elements of chaos and evil, attracting feral demons and crude humanoids from all parts of the Abyss and beyond. These wrathful creatures gather under the banner of the mighty and resilient Prince of Demons, whose boastful title has triggered an endless onslaught from covetous enemies, particularly Graz'zt and Orcus, who would claim the title for themselves.

Abysm's two aspects embody Demogorgon's dual nature. A massive primeval continent covered in dense jungle houses those demons and mortals who serve Demogorgon as a force of strength and brutality. The seemingly endless oceans and brine flats that surround the land conceal far more subtle adherents to the Sibilant Beast.

Two imposing serpentine towers emerge from the turbid seas about a hundred miles from shore. Each structure ends in a turret resembling an enormous fanged skull. Bearing the same name as the demon lord's realm, the spires together comprise the fearsome sanctuary of the Prince of Demons.

Near the shore, the Screaming Jungle meets an immense inland bog populated by troglodytes, lizardfolk, hezrou demons, and the few yuan-ti cultists who manage to survive the natural hazards of the layer. Farther to the interior, the ground hardens and the canopy grows lush, casting the land in deep shadows. Here enormous dinosaurs battle for territory with dire apes and barlgura demons. The jungle is named for the constantly keening fiendish monkeys, lemurs, and apes that dwell below its leafy canopy.

Azzagrat

The markets and pleasure palaces of Azzagrat draw visitors from across the universe. They come seeking obscure magical lore or perverse delights unavailable elsewhere, trusting in a place where demons seem to restrain themselves from tearing visitors limb from limb—for a time. For all its safe reputation, however, Azzagrat holds just as many dangers as anywhere else in the infinite Abyss—and perhaps a good deal more.

The Triple Realm of Azzagrat consists of three distinct layers (Rauwend, Shadowsky, and Voorzzt), woven together by the demon lord Graz'zt. The Dark Prince controls one of the largest empires in the Abyss through a combination of fear, political manipulation, and cunning intelligence. The inhabitants of Azzagrat obey the will of Prince Graz'zt because their fortunes rise with his, and because he has shown a willingness to eliminate any disloyal inhabitants, usually sooner rather than later.

Everything on the gloomy layer of Rauwend is somehow doused or subdued, taking on an equally gray pallor. All Stealth checks made on this layer gain a +2 circumstance bonus. Those who spend time on the layer find that details of the place and its inhabitants fade quickly from memory.

In the Shadowsky layer, sunlight rises up from the ground, casting shadows like dark columns far into the sky. The atmosphere is dark by day and gray at night.

A wan cerulean sun feebly illuminates the dark sky of the layer of Voorzzt, where cold is hot and hot is cold. Flames glow blue and deal cold damage, whereas blisteringly cold gales cause fire damage. The layer can be reached only by way of Azzagrat's other layers and has no connection to Pazunia.

Azzagrat's markets boast a staggering variety of products, services, and exotic slaves surpassing anything available elsewhere in the Abyss. Graz'zt profits greatly from this business. By the Dark Prince's personal decree, any merchant bearing his six-fingered sign is free from harassment by any inhabitant of the city. Regardless of a merchant's sign or affiliation, thievery is bad for business and is not tolerated under any circumstances (although a good deal of it goes on without the knowledge of the authorities, such as they are).

Azzagrat presents a cosmopolitan surface, but danger lurks beneath it all. The city is mazelike; the surrounding countryside and forests are full of shadows and lurking killers. If Azzagrat at first appears safe, it does so only to draw in unsuspecting victims.

Zelatar: Graz'zt's magnificent capital crosses the borders into all three layers of Azzagrat. Great avenue-sized portals that remain open continuously link these three geographically disparate layers of the Abyss. Through powerful dimensional magic Zelatar exists on all three layers simultaneously. The city surrounding it is different on each layer, meaning that three separate neighborhoods have arisen, each with its own nature. To make matters worse, Zelatar's streets wind and weave in a thoroughly perplexing manner that sometimes defies the laws of reality. Until someone has lived in the city for a year or more, he must rely upon a guide to find his way from one part of town to another (on purpose, that is). Otherwise, he must succeed on a DC 25 Streetwise check to reach his destination.

Graz'zt has issued a decree giving merchants protection in his realm, and though his will is not uniformly enforced, it is law in Zelatar. Merchants from the world often receive a small retinue of demons as their official guards while they remain in the city. These guards watch the merchants as much as they protect the travelers from thieves, and Graz'zt is not above inviting someone to his abode simply to rob the stranger of an item he covets.

RALPH HORSLEY

ZELATAR

Graz'zt's capital city spreads across all three layers of his domain: the neighborhood of Fogtown rests on the layer of Rauwend, cosmopolitan Gallenghast on Shadowsky, and Darkflame on Voorzzt. Because Graz'zt welcomes merchants to his domain, Zelatar is one of the few places in the Abyss that travelers can visit—as long as they show proper obedience to those carrying Graz'zt's banner or sign, emblazoned with his six-fingered hand.

Population: Approximately 15,000. Primarily demons and half-demons, but also including drow and other natives of the world, efreets and other elementals, and a handful of rogue githzerai.

Government: Graz'zt is the undisputed, autocratic ruler of Zelatar (and all of Azzagrat). His Argent Palace is visible from all three neighborhoods of the city, but exists in none of them—or all of them at once.

Defense: Hordes of demons protect Zelatar from attack, but few other demon princes are foolish enough to challenge Graz'zt's citadel.

Inns and Taverns: Unremarkable taverns in Gallenghast ward. Most of Zelatar's inns and taverns are in the Gallenghast ward, crowded around the edges of market squares. None are savory places, but merchants under Graz'zt's protection can stay in them safely and find food they can at least stomach, if not enjoy.

Supplies: Market squares in Gallenghast ward. Shady traders from across the universe come to the market squares of Gallenghast to do business, enjoying some measure of Graz'zt's protection.

Temples: Chosen's Tabernacle (cult of Graz'zt). The Chosen's Tabernacle, cathedral of Graz'zt's cult, dominates the large central square of Gallenghast. The temple's marilith high priestess, Lavendeth, is a manipulative administrator with a head for dirty dealing. She is a favorite consort of the Dark Prince.

Fogtown: The poorest laborers of Azzagrat toil just outside the scythe-topped walls of this moody Rauwend neighborhood, harvesting colorless edible fungi from the featureless plains surrounding the city. Fogtown is a place of slave gulags and rickety insane asylums, where hope is far scarcer than coin, and violence lurks at the dark heart of every shadow.

Because the nature of the Triple Realm's Rauwend layer can make details difficult to remember, the city's inhabitants use Fogtown as a rendezvous point or contraband drop, reasoning that participation is safer when none can remember the others' faces.

Gallenghast: The largest of Zelatar's three neighborhoods is packed with the villas of demonic nobles and the markets of traders from every corner of the universe. Numerous inns and lodging houses of dubious character crowd the peripheries of vast market squares. Here and there, absent paving stones allow the natural light of Shadowsky to blast upward in vibrant towers of eerie luminescence, casting the neighborhood in moody lighting.

Darkflame: The most remote of Zelatar's three neighborhoods, Darkflame is a haven for those who do not wish to be found. Graz'zt houses many of his deadliest assassins and agents within the district. All maintain deep cover identities that mask their true natures from even their closest neighbors. Shadow demons abound in the twisting mazelike alleys, seeking out those who would use the obscurity of Darkflame to hatch seditious plots against their ebon-skinned prince.

The Demonweb

This layer of the Abyss is an immense void filled with webs, many of them worked by the plane's spidery denizens into tubelike passages and cysts. These tunnels connect various structures that have been pulled in from other planes and suspended in the webbing. The webs are only slightly adhesive—enough to feel oddly disturbing, but not enough to hinder movement. Attempts to map the Demonweb are futile, given that the web corridors are forever being pulled apart and rebuilt. A tunnel connecting two structures one day might disappear the next. Far beneath this web, in wells of utter darkness, lie the dreaded Demonweb Pits—the lair of the goddess Lolth.

Some claim that the Demonweb houses a network of portals to rival the City of Doors. The layer is a fitting abode for a deity who rules by lies and intrigue and who urges her followers to do the same. Although it might be true that Lolth's portals lead to many places, reaching them is a far more dangerous than venturing through Sigil. As a result, the Demonweb portals are used primarily for Lolth's own schemes of conquest and subversion. The portals lead to a variety of worlds and demiplanes where Lolth intrigues to gain power. Some of these worlds have been utterly defeated by Lolth's minions and swarm with dark elves, demons, and other servants of the Queen of the Demonweb Pits.

Most permanent residents of the Demonweb are drow worshipers of Lolth, powerful and arrogant priests and champions who live to fulfill the dark whims of their goddess. These agents defend the layer from intruders and act as facilitators of Lolth's ambitions upon the worlds linked to her web. Lolth favors personal breeds of demons such as the yochlols to the general kinds found on other layers. These "handmaidens" of Lolth outrank even more powerful demons, such as balors and mariliths, much to their chagrin.

Adventurers in the Demonweb must avoid the drow patrols as well as the demons and arachnid horrors that do Lolth's bidding. In extremely rare cases, a persuasive PC might convince one of Lolth's servants to betray another, but none betray their beloved demon queen.

The Endless Maze

Baphomet, the bellowing Horned King (see page 118), dwells at the center of an infinite maze, filled with twisting corridors and trapped switchbacks. Its never-ending passages connect to several other labyrinths elsewhere in the Abyss, including the Valley of Crypts on Thanatos (Orcus's realm). Such connections bring legions of (often unwitting) visitors to the Endless Maze, where they soon become hopelessly lost. In time, they come to welcome death at the jaws of the slobbering beasts dispatched by Baphomet to prowl the maze in search of intruders.

Numerous minotaur tribes inhabit the maze, led by huge savage hybrids with demon blood. These creatures revere Baphomet as a patron deity, and such is their devotion that some eventually escape the maze to spread the worship of the Prince of Beasts to the minotaurs of the world. Numerous wild goristros hungrily wander the forlorn hallways of the Endless Maze, keeping the larger corridors and galleries free from intruders. The demon lord tolerates raiding parties of glabrezus who occasionally abduct these creatures to lash them into the service of a distant demon lord, for Baphomet knows that the goristros' stature and battle prowess carry his legend to all corners of the Abyss.

For all the demons and mindrending horrors of the maze, the layer supports a large number of mortals capable of providing either succor or danger to visiting adventurers. These furtive, untrusting creatures are the Lost, usually gnolls or humans released from the dungeons below Baphomet's palace at the Lyktion. Baphomet and his servitors casually hunt down these pitiful creatures as a way to slake boredom or to hone their skills for more important battles. When an allied demon lord or powerful mortal spellcaster wishes a service from the Prince of Beasts, Baphomet instructs him to find a specific member of the Lost, and refuses to discuss anything else until that individual has been brought to him. In remote corners of the layer, members of the Lost gather in motley gangs to eke out an existence while desperately searching for escape.

Baphomet's angry rivalries with other demon lords, particularly Yeenoghu and Graz'zt, fuel most of the armed conflict in the Endless Maze. Vast hordes of demons and mortal warriors flood the tunnels in an attempt to destroy the Prince of Beasts in his lair. Few invaders manage to negotiate the labyrinth well enough to pose a serious threat to the demon lord. Even those who know where they are going must first defeat Baphomet's creations before they can get a chance to battle the master.

The corridors in the Endless Maze appear as worked passages, 10 to 20 feet wide, with smooth walls and a ceiling as high as the passages are wide. Here and there, the hallways open into grand, vaulted promenades, or constrict to narrow crawlways barely 1 foot in diameter. Near the Lyktion and Baphomet's other redoubts, the maze architecture is intricate, clean, and well maintained. The walls are constructed of ivory, white marble, granite, and porphyry. The immaculate condition of these portions of the maze is often marred by great swaths of blood, mangled bodies, and other gruesome leavings. Farther from the regions patrolled by Baphomet, the maze falls into crumbling disrepair and ultimately becomes unworked natural passages. Near portals to other layers, the maze sometimes takes on architectural or artistic trappings reminiscent of the layer on the other side of the gate. No natural illumination graces the Endless Maze, although magic torches keep important passageways illuminated so that Baphomet's victims can see the twisted faces of their pursuers.

The Lyktion: Baphomet's palace is a maze in itself, a confusing jumble of crooked hallways and myriad chambers. A mile-wide moat surrounds the squat palace, concealing a maddening series of submerged stairs, tunnels, and chambers. These features lead to the deeper halls of the fortress, which have no other means of entrance. The most ferocious of Baphomet's bestial guardians dwell in the moat's depths, rushing to defend the Lyktion in the relatively common event of an attack from the likes of Yeenoghu or Graz'zt.

Thanatos

Ash-gray clouds fill the cold black skies of Thanatos, the Belly of Death, where daylight never intrudes. A handful of villages crouch upon the layer's vast tundras, havens for the cultists who seek to emulate the life of their demonic patron, Orcus, who rules here. Outside the towns, hordes of undead roam across the land in search of flesh. The strongest and most ambitious of the Demon Prince of the Undead's thralls attempt to dominate and command these armies, leading them on invasions of layers ruled by rival demon princes such as Graz'zt and Demogorgon.

Thanatos is inhospitable even by the standards of the Abyss. The energy of undeath suffuses the place, leaving visitors plagued with a constant sense of chill and fatigue. Mortal creatures must rely on the few indigenous mosses, molds, and fungi for sustenance. Those that die on Thanatos rise in moments as undead.

The Plains of Hunger: The largest expanse of Thanatos, these frost-rimed flatlands teem with countless hordes of undead wandering aimlessly in search of lives to destroy and flesh to consume. Each horde contains hundreds of skeletons, zombies, and ghouls and smaller numbers of more powerful corporeal undead. Periodically, mortal deathpriests venture from the world to wrest control of a horde and lead it on a conquest in Orcus's name. Only after a great test of wills can the cultist dominate the horde's intelligent undead, who thereafter command the lesser creatures to serve the deathpriest.

The town of Orcusgate, named for the central gate of fire that connects Thanatos to the Plain of a Thousand Pits, is filled with the demons from the upper echelons of Orcus's cult.

The Final Hills: These dry, desolate hills separate the Plains of Hunger from Orcus's personal realm of Oblivion's End. The haunting creatures that dwell within ensure that those who pass through the hills do so only at the invitation of the Prince of the Undead. Tombs built into the tors hold undead of every description.

The town of Lachrymosa, nestled into the foothills, enjoys a climate warmed by rust-red geysers, though the water is caustic and poison. A balor called Glyphimhor governs the town in Orcus's name.

A remote crag northwest of Lachrymosa conceals the entrance to the Valley of Crypts, a bewildering maze of natural defiles and canyons that eventually dips below the surface of Thanatos and connects to the Endless Maze of Baphomet.

The Frozen Sea: Flanking the Plains of Hunger on the opposite side of the Final Hills, the seemingly endless Frozen Sea extends far into the horizon. This frigid desert of icy wasteland caps unknown depths filled with hideous aquatic creatures seldom seen by the inhabitants of the plane. The ice extends for miles below the surface, and only a few ancient citadels built into the frozen shelf connect to the ocean's watery depths. Here and there enormous ancient shipwrecks rise up from the biting plain, entombed in ice far from the shore.

Oblivion's End: On the edge of Thanatos, beyond the Final Hills, rests this sprawling desert of powdered bone. Howling windstorms scream with the cries of lost incorporeal undead, forever bound to the desolate wasteland. At the center of this expanse stands the massive fortress of Everlost, a towering structure built from countless bones. Everlost is and has ever been the seat of Orcus's power on Thanatos, although the Blood Lord can manifest from place to place throughout the layer at will.

WARREN MAHY

From this remote locale, Orcus issues decrees to his cult and enemies, pronouncing death sentences that soon reach the ears of his debased followers all over the universe. The Prince of Undeath is unconcerned with details, preferring to let his underlings worry about how to enact his grand designs. His chief diplomat and the castellan of Everlost is a lich named Harthoon.

Twelvetrees

Eons ago, several mighty demons tricked a dozen angels—each the servant of a different Good or unaligned deity—into visiting the Abyss for a council of peace. After a brief challenge to the angels' masters, the demons bound the envoys to the towering trunks of twelve mighty trees in a desolate layer, sacrificing them in a vile arcane ritual that forever infused the layer with evil energies.

The angels' shattering death screams still haunt the layer, now known as Twelvetrees. A massive basalt platform commemorates the site of the original sacrifice. The stone is ringed by sickly pines that ooze spiritual slime in an echo of the blood spilled by the ancient angels. Demons from throughout the Abyss make the pilgrimage to Twelvetrees in memory of their defiant ancestors, many hoping to use the platform to infuse their own debased plots and rituals. Nearly all demons throughout the Abyss know of and respect the power of Twelvetrees, and an affront to this layer is an affront to demons everywhere.

The palpable evil of Twelvetrees is like a drug to the pilgrims that voyage here. These creatures, including some of the most powerful demons, bask in a euphoric haze of ecstasy and pay little attention to the world around them. Nondemonic visitors might find it surprisingly easy to wander about the layer, needing only to avoid the flying horrors that patrol the layer, and the handful of zealous demons that wander the crowds in search of impostors to murder.

CHAPTER 5

The Astral Sea

STEVE BELLEDIN

Beyond the circles of the mortal world lies an expanse of infinite possibility. The Astral Sea is a great silvery void in which countless fragments of divine or mortal purpose drift—dreams, ideas, and wishes, as well as fears and dark desires. All these thoughts and feelings become real and physical in this place. Most are virtually unnoticeable, of course. An ordinary mortal's passing fancy vanishes in the Astral Sea like a single raindrop falling into a mighty ocean. But dreams and dreads with power are a different matter. The desires of deities or beliefs shared by thousands of mortals take shape as vast kingdoms or even whole worlds within the Astral Sea.

These kingdoms and worlds are the astral dominions—planes adrift within the fundamental expanse of the Astral Sea. Some are heavenly realms of peace and splendor. Some are fantastic dreamscapes filled with marvels and strange perils. And some are dark and tormented places, hellish domains filled with unspeakable evil. Of all the planes, with the exception of the Far Realm, the dominions of the Astral Sea are the most remote from the mortal world. Only the mightiest of heroes venture here.

This chapter describes the dominions of the Astral Sea and the challenges of adventuring there, including:

- Sailing the Astral Sea: The means by which mortals can reach the Astral Sea and its planar traits.
- Astral Inhabitants: An overview of the creatures and powers who inhabit the Astral Sea and its dominions.
- The Blood War: A look at the age-old rivalry between devils and demons.
- Astral Dominions: Nine astral dominions figure prominently in the D&D cosmology. Wonders and dangers untold await heroes in these various heavens and hells.
- Other Locales: Although most of the interesting sites in the Astral Sea lie within the bounds of one dominion or another, the Astral Sea conceals more than a few mysteries and perils of its own.

Here dreams, hopes, fears, and dark ambitions become real, and gods and devils have their abodes

ASTRAL SEA TRAITS
Type: Fundamental plane.
Size and Shape: Infinite in extent.
Gravity: Subjective. A creature can stand on any surface equal to or larger than its base. It gains the ability to fly at one-half its normal speed if not under the effect of gravity. It can hover, but it is a clumsy flier. A creature with the ability to fly can use its innate flying speed instead. It gains hover.
Mutability: Normal.

Most sites of interest in the Astral Sea lie inside the borders of the astral dominions. Countless gates, portals, or conduits link the material world with the various astral dominions, so most travelers bypass the astral plane by teleporting directly to their destination. However, adventurers sometimes can't find a portal leading to the dominion they seek, or come up against quests that require them to search out some specific locale in the Astral Sea itself—for example, a lost githyanki stronghold. When no portal can be found, travelers must venture into the limitless Astral Sea and navigate their way to their goal.

Reaching the Astral Sea

Portals leading directly to the Astral Sea are comparatively rare. Instead, most portals leading to the Astral Sea don't lead to the Astral Sea at all, but instead take the traveler to a specific locale in one astral dominion or another. For example, portals leading directly from the mortal world to the Nine Hells are much more common than portals leading to the unspecified Astral Sea.

Portals leading to the various dominions are located in places of great power and well guarded. Traveling to the domains of the deities is a serious matter. Moreover, portals are not always safe or reliable. Some are one-way only, some function intermittently, and many require special keys or passphrases to activate. It's one thing to venture through a portal leading to a remote cave in Avernus, first of the Nine Hells—it's another to find that the portal won't permit return for days or weeks, stranding the travelers in a dangerous place.

Travelers who can't find a portal leading to the astral dominion they want to reach can locate a planar vessel to travel on or use a ritual. A small number of astral vessels roam the starry sea, occasionally calling in various ports. Planar dromonds pass infrequently through places such as the City of Brass, Gloomwrought, or the most cosmopolitan cities of the mortal world. Astral skiffs can't leave the astral, but if a traveler can find an astral junction where such skiffs pass through—for example, a portal in Sigil that leads to a githyanki outpost—then using an astral skiff serves as well.

In the absence of a planar craft, determined heroes can use the Astral Sojourn ritual (see Chapter 7) to leave the natural world and shift to the Astral Sea. However, traveling without the benefit of a vessel is slow and often dangerous. Travelers who have a specific destination in mind would be better off to use a planar portal.

The Nature of the Astral Sea

The Astral Sea is not a sea, of course. It's more like a fantastic version of outer space. It's filled with vast clouds of a luminous, silver-gray substance that is not mist and not liquid. Thousands of stars glitter in the distance, especially in darker portions of the plane. Vast expanses of "open air" between these drifting clouds provide travelers with hundreds of miles of visibility, and even in the middle of the densest astral mists travelers can see objects several miles away with ease—the stuff of the Astral Sea just doesn't impede vision much at all.

Someone floating in the astral doesn't get wet or cold. A cool tingle on the skin is the only sensation. Creatures who need to breathe can do so without trouble. Winged creatures can fly through the astral stuff as if it were air, and natural swimmers can swim through it as if it were water. Other creatures can move slowly by desiring to move.

EXPLORING THE ASTRAL SEA

Even though the Astral Sea is a three-dimensional void, it possesses a distinct astral horizon that forms something like the surface of an ocean. The mists below this surface are darker and denser, and those above it are brighter and more open. Most creatures and objects slowly orient themselves toward this subtle demarcation without even realizing it, and travel toward their destination along the "surface" of the Astral Sea. Two vessels meeting in the Astral Sea do so on this unseen surface, so that encounters begin in a space that seems more two-dimensional than it is. Similarly, a vessel approaching one of the astral dominions normally does so from the dominion's equivalent of sea level, or from its equator in the case of dominions that are shaped like worlds. It's unusual to drop in to a dominion from the zenith or pole of its sky.

Distances in the Astral Sea are unthinkably vast, but most travelers need only journey for a day or two before finding a veil portal leading to their destination. However, finding a specific place in the Astral Sea itself (for example, a particular githyanki stronghold) may take much longer.

Veils of Color

A vast color veil serves as the border surrounding each of the astral dominions. The color veil may appear as a glittering mist, a dancing aurora, a gathering gloom, or a brooding fog. Regardless of its exact appearance, venturing into the veil works as a portal and transports the traveler into the dominion the color veil surrounds.

Most color veils allow at least some glimpse of the dominion that lies within. For example, an astral traveler can easily descry the shining mountains of Celestia from a distance outside its golden veil. The sullen red-black plains of the first layer of the Nine Hells of Baator are wreathed in fumes and smoke, but the clouds part from time to time, allowing a glimpse of the danger that awaits. However, other veils offer no hint of what lies on the other side. The dazzling blue aurora guarding the borders of Shom never parts, nor does the black fog marking the border of Tytherion.

Crossing a color veil can be dangerous, since the traveler immediately becomes subject to the traits of the dominion inside. The sole safe way to approach the Nine Hells is to descend the storm funnel above the lake that marks the source of the Styx. Crossing the veil at any other point around the Nine Hells means that the traveler is no longer sailing the Astral Sea, but instead immediately plummeting through the skies of Avernus. Unless the traveler is ready to fly, or has a vessel that can do so, he or she is not using the Styx will arrive in the Nine Hells in a fiery crash.

Lingering near a color veil is also dangerous because the denizens of the nearby dominion may notice. Astral skiffs near the Nine Hells have been set upon by flights of spined devils attacking suddenly out of the choking fumes surrounding the sullen orb of Baator.

Color veils often appear at vast distances from their plane's actual location, much like mirages. These outlying echoes of a dominion's primary color veil are look like swaths of the primary color veil and come in innumerable shapes. A traveler who ventures into the color veil is transported to its respective dominion, no matter how far away the color veil is from the dominion. In fact, most travelers journeying across the Astral Sea find an outlying color veil long before they would otherwise reach the dominion they seek. Most astral voyages last only as long as it takes to find a veil of the right color.

Psychic Storms

Some portions of the Astral Sea are subject to psychic storms—wild, unpredictable gales that darken the luminous clouds and blow travelers off course. Psychic storms usually delay travelers—except when they sweep travelers through a color veil before they can react. Psychic storms are very large—like hurricanes or vast sandstorms in the mortal world—but move quickly. A psychic storm affects a given area for 1d6 + 4 rounds.

Psychic Storm Effects: All creatures in a psychic storm are dazed. In addition, attacks with the psychic keyword gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls but deal only half damage.

Astral Sea Inhabitants

Although many creatures—mortal, immortal, and otherwise—call the various astral dominions home, comparatively few live in the Astral Sea itself. The lack of firm ground to stand on and scarce supplies of food and water mean that vast stretches of the Astral Sea are devoid of life. Any creatures dwelling in the plane must be able to do without the basic necessities of mortal existence (maruts or astral stalkers, for instance), or must seek out the rare islets of solid ground that lie scattered through this great silvery space (for example, the githyanki). A handful of beings such as astral dreadnoughts are truly adapted for life in the Astral Sea and fly in the ocean of the Astral Sea like whales swim in the waters of the natural world.

The islands of matter in the Astral Sea are highly prized by astral denizens and passing wayfarers alike. Some of these islets are little more than drifting boulders, useful only because they provide something solid to stand on or build on. Other islets are like tiny worlds and boast springs or lakes as well as strange forests of trees and creepers growing unhindered by gravity. (Plants grow well in the astral despite the lack of sunlight.) A few astral islands are the petrified remains of mighty primordials or deities who died long ago. Regardless of their origin, each such mote of matter is extremely valuable. Any islet larger than a hillock is certain to be inhabited or frequently visited by someone.

Abominations

The terrifying monsters known as abominations pose a significant danger to careless astral travelers. Thankfully, they are few in number. A single astral stalker or phane can easily overwhelm an astral skiff and all its passengers and crew, and most abominations immediately destroy any mortals unfortunate enough to cross their paths. Githyanki often pay grudging tribute to tribes of astral stalkers or other abominations near their cities to purchase the monsters' forbearance.

Astral Travelers

Most creatures voyaging through the Astral Sea are traveling to some other place. These astral travelers include powerful mortals from the natural world, devils, divine servitors such as angels (or much more rarely, demigods or exarchs), and immortal guardians such as sphinxes bound to a purpose that requires them to travel from plane to plane. Although some rare rituals can free the soul from the body to journey to the dominions, most astral travelers are physically present in the Astral Sea and are as real there as they would be in the natural world.

Devils or evil mortals often attack other astral travelers they meet, but most others are inclined to give everyone they meet a wide berth and keep to themselves.

Githyanki

Warlike and imperious, githyanki are a mortal race that inhabits the eternal depths of the Astral Sea. Their cities are forbidding, fortresslike holds built atop the rare bits of drifting rock in the astral and surrounded by vigilant patrols in astral skiffs. Githyanki are a cruel people who believe that all other mortal races are their inferiors and are to be enslaved or plundered at any opportunity.

Githyanki eagerly seek out color veils or forgotten portals leading to the material world, for through these magic gates they can launch mighty raids against the unsuspecting people on the other side. Because of their hunger for conquest and riches, githyanki regard humans and other worldbound mortals faring abroad in the Astral Sea as great prizes—after all, the travelers came from somewhere and might be coerced into revealing the location of a portal the githyanki could attack through.

Although githyanki are quick to fall on clueless worldbound mortals who stumble into their grasp, they occasionally permit travel and trade to and from their cities. Nongithyanki who intend to visit a githyanki city should first obtain a sign of safe passage from one of the githyanki cadres—the militant guilds or orders that make up githyanki society. Githyanki respect the promises of safe passage

The Exalted and the Damned

Mortal spirits that come to the astral dominions via the Shadowfell (see the "Exaltation and Damnation" sidebar, page 53) are generally known as exalted or damned. They are living, corporeal beings exactly as they were in life. However, they become immortal (and their origin changes to "immortal"). If killed in this form, they pass on to their final fate, or they rise again the next dawn, or they sleep for a year and a day before awaking again—it depends on which dominion they inhabit. Exalted or damned killed outside of their home dominion usually pass on to the infinite, but if their bodies are swiftly returned to their dominion, the normal rules for the dominion apply.

Heroes are much more likely to be exalted or damned than ordinary people. Most join the shining hosts of their deity's domain, and leave mortal concerns behind them forever. A rare few, however, return (or are sent) back to the mortal world, usually to finish some labor or complete a quest.

offered by any of their military societies, but travelers who appear too dangerous (or too weak) may find their safe passage suddenly revoked.

A small number of nongithyanki captains have leave to ply their astral skiffs or planar dromonds throughout the Astral Sea because they pay ruinous bribes to powerful githyanki factions for the privilege. Worldbound travelers who are trying to arrange safe conduct in the first place can sometimes do so in a meeting place such as Sigil beforehand. Or they can try striking a bargain with the first githyanki ship that attempts to seize them once they reach the Astral Sea—although they'll have to find a way to convince the githyanki to parley and defend themselves until they do.

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

Maruts

Like the githyanki, maruts dwell in astral fortresses—castlelike structures rooted on some drifting bit of astral stone. However, marut strongholds are much less common than githyanki cities, and none are particularly welcoming toward visitors. Unlike the githyanki, maruts do not require mortal sustenance, so they can be content with islets of barren rock.

A few marut fortresses, however, include a number of nonmarut servants, scribes, guards, and artisans. Maruts are not slave takers, but they sometimes require service as their compensation. They might, at times, accept slaves, prisoners, soldiers, or others sent involuntarily into their service for a time. A marut is an inflexible master, but seldom a cruel one

Maruts usually ignore travelers in the Astral Sea. Some repel all intruders. Others allow their servants to trade with visitors as long as doing so does not interfere with other duties.

The Blood War

Demons hate immortals of any kind, but they have a special enmity for devils. Over the ages, many terrible battles have raged across Avernus, the Plain of a Thousand Portals, the Elemental Chaos, and those parts of the mortal world unfortunate enough to hold portals that offer access to the Abyss or the Nine Hells. A sullen truce currently prevails, but this ceasefire could end anytime.

Few mortals are aware of the Blood War, and fewer still know what triggered it. It began when Asmodeus rebelled against the deity he served. The mighty angel stole a shard of the evil seed embedded in the heart of the Abyss (see "The Birth of the Abyss" sidebar, Monster Manual, page 52) and forged it into a ruby-tipped rod, which he then used to slay his divine master. The Abyss wants the stolen shard returned, and consequently every demon does as well.

Armed with a fragment of true evil, Asmodeus hungers to seize the rest of the Abyss's heart. With it, he can subjugate all demonkind to his will and make himself strong enough to overthrow all the other deities. For their own part, the demon lords want to destroy Asmodeus for his impudence and carry his rod back to the Abyss in triumph, thus returning the Abyss and all demonkind to their rightful might.

The intensity of the Blood War varies greatly over time. In centuries past, it has been a cosmic conflagration. Countless thousands of demons have swarmed through portals to assault Avernus. At the same time, devils crafted iron fortresses in the Elemental Chaos to storm the Abyssal depths. The battlefields of these ancient campaigns are littered with powerful (and evil) weapons, curses, and aftereffects. The current uneasy truce has held for several lifetimes of mortals now.

In the current interregnum, demons and devils regard each other with hostility and intense rivalry. They compete for influence in the mortal world—demons by aiding mortals with destructive purposes, devils by guile and corruption. For the moment, Asmodeus husbands the Nine Hells' strength while the lords of demonkind are consumed with their own arguments and jealousy. No demon lord wants to bear the brunt of the losses in an attack against the Nine Hells, fearing that other demon lords will strike against him if he grows too weak.

Until they agree to act in concert, the demons have no real hope of overwhelming the Nine Hells. Asmodeus understands that the only thing that might cause the demon lords to forget their rivalries is the next infernal assault on the Abyss. Consequently, he is determined to plan his next campaign with the greatest of care so that when the Blood War resumes, it will be at the time and place of his choosing.

What follows are some of the astral dominions and other locales that float in the eternal, infinite, and boundless Astral Sea.

Arvandor, the Verdant Isles

The Blessed Isles of Elvenhome, where the fair folk dwell in grace and beauty forever

ARVANDOR TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Archipelago stretching about 400 miles across and composed of six large islands and dozens of smaller ones; bounded.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Divinely mutable. (Deities control their own environs.)
Inveiglement: Attacks with the charm or illusion keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll.

Arvandor is a dominion of emerald forests, enchanting waters, and starry nights. It is home to immortals who love beauty, song, and revelry. It is the domain of Corellon, patron of elves and eladrin, and many elven souls dwell in peace and joy here.

The plane is an archipelago of steep, forest-covered islands in a wine-dark sea. Many of Arvandor's isles lie hidden in glamours of mist and mirage, or shift to the Feywild at times. At the edges of the plane, the dark waters of Arvandor are shrouded in great walls of rolling dark green mist that mark the dominion's borders. Astral vessels approaching Arvandor pass through the misty wall and sail into the plane's waters.

Arvandor experiences day and night, although the nights are brilliant with stars. When it rains, it's little more than a damp mist in the hours before dawn.

Powers of Arvandor

Two deities dwell in Arvandor: Corellon Larethian, god of elves and magic, and Sehanine Moonbow, goddess of the moon. Both are frequently absent from the plane. Sehanine walks in moonlight in the mortal world, and Corellon often roams the Feywild. Although neither is truly good, they dislike cruelty and wickedness, and evil creatures find no refuge in Arvandor. A number of demigods and exarchs attend these two greater powers, including such legendary beings as Erevan Ilesere, patron of jest and revelry. This celestial court is collectively known as the Seldarine.

Many fey inhabit Arvandor, including centaurs, dryads, merfolk, satyrs, and treants. Some of these can be dangerous to mortals—for example, a raging centaur or satyr, or a dryad who decides to charm a handsome mortal and keep him at her side.

Arvandor is also the home of the ruesti—the exalted souls of eladrin and elves granted life after life in the Elvenhome. The ruesti are spirits whose great beauty, wisdom, skill, or deeds in life earned the approbation of Corellon or his exarchs.

Sites in Arvandor

Most of Arvandor is pristine wilderness. Green glades and musical waterfalls lie hidden in the high vales of its many islands. The six large islands in the archipelago range up to 100 miles in length, but scores of smaller ones dot the plane's sea.

Estaira: The largest of Arvandor's islands is Estaira, also known as Elvenhome. Bands of ruesti and fey roam its verdant forests and feast by its mirrorlike lakes. Gleaming eladrin towers dot the island's shores and lie within its wooded vales.

Gloaminghold: On a tiny islet near Arvandor's astral border stands the hidden house called Gloaminghold. Here the legendary tiefling warlock Duskmoon built a secure retreat many years ago. Gloaminghold's halls are filled with curiosities gleaned from a hundred strange places, but powerful guardians protect Duskmoon's treasures.

Nath Seldarie: Corellon's palace is a place of open arcades and colonnades high on the wooded slopes of Estaira's tallest hill. In Nath Seldarie, the Seldarine feast, revel, and take counsel at need. Walls of enchanted mist ward intruders away from the palace when the deities desire privacy.

Adventure in Arvandor

Arvandor is a peaceful dominion. However, it is not entirely safe. Some of Arvandor's fey denizens jealously guard their isles from intrusion. From time to time, evil fey, devils, or githyanki raid the outlying isles seeking plunder and mayhem (although Arvandor's denizens repel these raids easily). Arvandor is also a mustering place for expeditions against bastions of evil throughout the planes. Sealed moongates (permanent portals attuned by the moon's cycle or warded by the magic of Sehanine) lead to the Demonweb Pits, evil-tainted parts of the Feywild and natural world, and even some of the evil dominions. Mortal heroes might find that they need Arvandor's moongates to reach a perilous destination in another plane.

Celestia, the Radiant Throne

A domain of seven holy mountains where the just and the good are eternally exalted

CELESTIA TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Range of seven mountains that runs about 120 miles and reaches a height of 10 miles and is surrounded by a narrow sea; bounded.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Divinely mutable. (Deities control their own environs.)
Radiance Affinity: Attacks with the radiance keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks with the necrotic keyword deal half damage (ongoing necrotic damage is not affected).

Rising above the mists of the Astral Sea shine the seven splendid mountains of Celestia. Peaceful cities, green forests, and golden fields spill over their lower slopes. Mystic monasteries and golden palaces lie hidden beneath their snowy heights. The just, the righteous, and the merciful dwell here in light and joy forever.

Celestia is a single large island in the Astral Sea dominated by its magnificent mountains, each higher and grander than the last. A narrow band of shallow green sea surrounds the dominion, and this sea meets the surrounding astral in a brilliant golden aurora. Ships sailing to or from Celestia sail along a dazzling path of sunshine dancing on the water.

Night never comes to Celestia. The peaks of its mighty mountains glow like suns, waxing and waning from a rosy-hued twilight to a bright, golden noon and back again each day. The clouds of Celestia's skies are a dark silvery color, and rain is rarely heavier than a sunshower.

Powers of Celestia

Several noble deities dwell in Celestia. Kord, the god of strength and valor, roams the plane's mountainsides or feasts in his hall in the green vales below the slopes of Venya, the mountain also known as the legendary Snowbeard. Bahamut, the Platinum Dragon, holds court in his shining castle on a high spur of the mountain Mertion. Beneath the waterfall-graced slopes of Solania, the mountain also called the Rainfather, lie the vast halls of Moradin, the god of the forge. The three deities are close allies and act in concert, but if one of the three is first among equals, it's Moradin. The Dwarf-father governs over a court of lesser deities and powerful exarchs that include such figures as Berronar Truesilver, Moradin's consort, and Clangeddin Silverbeard, the patron of dwarf warriors.

The exalted of Celestia include the spirits of great artisans, valiant heroes, and good dragons. In addition, a number of elementals, galeb duhrs, and other such creatures normally found in the Elemental Chaos call the plane home. Celestia's mountains are suffused with elemental power. These elementals are tempestuous and have been known to attack mortals visiting the plane.

Sites in Celestia

Celestia consists of alpine meadows, thickly forested valleys, and towering mountain ramparts of stone, snow, and ice. A belt of foothills rings the shores of the plane, and most of the plane's denizens dwell in white cities or shining castles close to the sea.

Torzak-Belgirn: The Soulforge of Moradin is the mighty foundry where the Dwarf-father undertakes his greatest works. Under Moradin's tutelage the greatest dwarf smiths create arms and armor unequaled anywhere in the planes.

Empyron: Also known as the City of Healing, this town stands by the shores of a dark, starry tarn amid the high mountain vales. It is said that no curse, poison, or disease can withstand the touch of Empyron's waters, and those who can be healed nowhere else can find healing here.

Bridge of al-Sihal: Behind a mithral gate in Asiryet, the Heavenly City, lies a pathway or road of blinding light that ascends to the highest of Celestia's peaks: Chronias, the Radiant Throne. A mighty angel guards this portal, turning aside the unworthy. What awaits on the slopes of Chronias is a mystery to mortals, for those who pass the Bridge of al-Sihal do not return.

Chernoggar, the Iron Fortress

Destruction and war battle endlessly for supremacy

CHERNOGGAR TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Plateau about 300 miles across surrounded by a belt of dried seabed 10 to 50 miles wide; bounded.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Divinely mutable. (Deities control their own environs.)

Endless warfare surges across the ashen plains and vast ramparts of Chernoggar, the plane known as the Iron Fortress. Here two feuding deities vie against each other with armies of warrior souls. At the end of each day the dead number in the thousands, but the next morning, they return to life to strive and die again, locked into an eternity of unending violence.

Chernoggar is a vast plateau of black, jagged rock. Travelers who breach its red-orange veil (the color of rust, some say) find themselves stranded on a plain of dried, cracked mud that is littered with the wrecks of astral vessels. Whatever sea that once surrounded the plane long ago dried up. A few miles from the veil, mighty cliffs of black stone climb up several thousand feet in beetling ramparts to the ancient battlefield of Chern, a wasteland of barren rock and deep crevasses. Great battlements of iron wall off the passes and crown the clifftops.

Chernoggar has no sun, moon, or stars. Its sky is a sullen orange-red color that waxes and wanes in brightness in a 24-hour cycle. At its brightest, it's equal to an overcast day in the natural world, and at its dimmest, it's about as bright as weak moonlight. The plane displays seasons of a sort. Over the course of a year, it warms to a furnacelike summer and then diminishes to a bitterly chill winter. Dust storms, wildfires, earthquakes, and thunderstorms are common, especially in parts of the plane where Gruumsh holds sway.

Chernoggar is a dangerous plane for astral travelers to visit. Gruumsh's minions are likely to slaughter anything they meet. Bane's servants seek to capture strangers, subjecting them to fearsome inquisitions before sentencing them to thralldom, torture, or imprisonment.

Powers of Chernoggar

Bane, the god of war and tyranny, conquered the dominion of Chernoggar from its previous owner—a fiery war god named Tuern. After Tuern's defeat, Bane raised his mighty fortress of iron over Tuern's ancient throne and began to plan his next campaign. However, the orc god Gruumsh also desired to claim Tuern's place. Gruumsh brought his own domain of Nishrek into contact with Chernoggar, fusing the two dominions together and launching a furious invasion of Bane's newly won plane. The gods of tyranny and destruction have fought to become the sole, uncontested god of war ever since. Gruumsh is unable to overthrow Bane in the seat of Bane's power, and Bane can't drive Gruumsh out of the caves and mountains at the other side of Chernoggar.

Both Bane and Gruumsh field vast armies of monsters, war machines, and deathless warrior souls known as battlesworn. Gruumsh grants the fiercest and most bloodthirsty of his followers—orc champions, vile barbarians, and even a few monsters such as trolls and ogres—with the opportunity to sate their bloodlust again and again through eternity. Similarly, Bane rewards the most courageous, determined, and merciless of his followers with the chance to serve him after death. Battlesworn who die in Chernoggar rise from death at the next dawn.

Chernoggar is also populated by a native race—the bladelings. Bane brought a race of martially inclined mortals to Chernoggar many centuries ago and sought to transform them into the perfect soldiers, but the bladelings proved more independent of will than he had hoped. Although many of these fierce warriors still serve Bane today, others left Chernoggar long ago to seek a fate of their own devising.

Sites in Chernoggar

Most of Chernoggar is a rugged wasteland of ashen plains, bare rock, dry dead steppes, and vast belts of thorny brush. Ruined castles and the rusting wrecks of ancient war machines dot this bleak landscape. Crevasses that are many hundreds of feet deep wind through the plane. They pose a formidable obstacle to travelers on foot. Large stretches of the plane are virtually deserted. Though somewhere a great battle takes place constantly on the plane, Chernoggar is big, and out-of-the-way spots might not see fighting for years at a time. However, travelers might run into patrols, small bands of marauders, or hunting parties from either side anywhere on the plane.

The caves and tunnels of Chernoggar are home to all sorts of dreadful monsters that range from salamanders (who once served Tuern) to ropers, purple worms, and other deep-dwelling creatures. Some creatures escaped from the breeding pits of the goblins in Bane's service, and others Gruumsh brought to Chernoggar to test his warriors' fitness and courage.

Stairs of Woe: Only a handful of paths ascend the cliffs encircling Chernoggar's plateau. The best known is the Stairs of Woe, which climb from the dried seabed to the field of Chern, the great battlefield before Bane's fortress. Bane punishes cowards, traitors, and spies by imprisoning them in crow's cages along this tortuous climb. Bane uses these suspended cages of iron to show visitors the cost of drawing the Black Lord's ire.

Atop the stairs a guardpost offers visitors one chance to present themselves to Bane's servants and state their purpose in visiting Chernoggar. (It had better be a good one!) The guards assign minders (escorts who are guards and spies) to accompany the visitors wherever they go, watching carefully for any indication of treachery.

Tuer-Chern: Tuer-Chern is the Iron Fortress from which Chernoggar takes its sobriquet. Tuer-Chern is Bane's mighty stronghold. The size of the place is staggering. Its ramparts and walls encircle an area fully twenty miles across, and its gates and towers are beyond count. Tuer-Chern is unquestionably the largest single fortress in the cosmos, and only Moradin's fortress in Celestia or the infernal strongholds of Nessus in the Nine Hells rival it.

Although Tuer-Chern's defenses and barracks are hard to miss, the Iron Fortress is a great city as well as a fortification. Countless thralls and servants see to the menial tasks of maintaining the garrison. Vast foundries and armories ring eternally with the sound of weapons being forged. Dark chapels memorialize Bane's many victories, and shadowed libraries hold great collections of destructive lore. Legions of scribes and officials see to it that the Great Tyrant's will is enforced throughout his domain in the smallest of matters.

The heart of Tuer-Chern is Bane's throne hall, a mighty chamber so large in size that an entire mortal cathedral would fit inside it with room to spare. In the throne hall stands the Siege Terrible, the throne of the Black Lord. Few indeed can look upon Bane when he is seated here without falling to the floor in abject terror.

Clangor: Bane awards his exarchs and most capable underlings fiefs of their own to be ruled in his name. Clangor is one such feudal territory. It is a goblin fortress-city built in the sides of a fiery vent. It is governed by the goblin exarch Maglubiyet. Clangor is notorious for its gruesome arena games, in which captives are pitted against each other or forced to fight terrible monsters—sometimes with nothing more than a dagger or a cudgel. Below the arena lie vast breeding pits where goblin beastmasters seek to create ever more fierce and powerful monstrosities to loose upon the orcs of Nishrek.

The goblins of Clangor are not as dedicated to rigorous order as Bane's other servants, and Clangor boasts a small black market of planar traders and information-seekers.

Nishrek: On the far side of Chernoggar from Bane's citadel lie the volcanic mountains of Nishrek, the domain of Gruumsh. Once Nishrek was a dominion of its own, but in order to attack Bane the god of destruction brought Nishrek into Chernoggar. Bane's will prevailed, and Nishrek was halted hundreds of miles from Bane's dark citadel.

Nishrek's mountains are riddled with caves and crudely built stone orc holds. Earthquakes, avalanches of ash, windstorms, and fiery geysers torment the landscape, guarding Nishrek from Bane's legions as effectively as Tuer-Chern's iron walls deter Gruumsh's hordes.

Gruumsh dwells in a brooding keep called the Tower of Skulls. Several fierce exarchs and lesser powers serve Gruumsh, including Baghtru (an orc demigod of brute strength), Vaprak (an immense troll), and Luthic the Blood Moon Witch, who is consort to Gruumsh.

Zoronor: This walled town lies along the edge of the plateau. If Chernoggar has a port on the Astral Sea, Zoronor is it, although cargo must be dragged from grounded ships over the dry sea by lumbering dray-beasts. Zoronor is a sullen, violent bladeling town that serves as a base for mercenaries seeking work in other planes. A bladeling lord named Urlezar governs the town in Bane's name and rules with a surprisingly light hand. However, his apparent laxness is a cover under which numerous spies and informants ferret out disloyalty.

TOWER OF THE ADAMANTINE MAGE

In a forest of dead briars near the middle of Chernoggar stands an imposing tower of jagged stone. This tower is the home of Koth-Amar, the Adamantine Mage. An archmage of great skill, Koth-Amar long ago transferred his consciousness into a magically animated lifelike statue of adamantine. Koth-Amar is a notorious plunderer of magical lore from many planes, and he guards his ill-gotten treasures with deadly monsters. Worshipers of Ioun and Vecna have long sought to glimpse the knowledge within, but to date their efforts have failed.

Hestavar, the Bright City

A shining city of golden domes and precious stones among the clouds

HESTAVAR TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Earthmote archipelago extending for about 30 miles; bounded.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Divinely mutable. (Deities control their own environs.)
Radiance Affinity: Attacks with the radiance keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks with the necrotic keyword deal half damage (ongoing necrotic damage is not affected).

The wondrous city of Hestavar drifts amid golden clouds. Hestavar represents the greatest heights of art, architecture, and invention that civilization can attain. It is a fantastically wealthy domain, with buildings roofed in gold and streets paved in precious stones. In Hestavar's mercantile arcades things that are too precious or scarce to be sold anywhere else can be found.

HESTAVAR

The most cosmopolitan and accessible of the astral dominions, Hestavar is a fantastically wealthy city of wonders.
Population: Approximately 300,000. Exalted souls and angels make up most of the population, with a smaller number of mortal beings.
Government: The deities Erathis and Pelor rule over Hestavar in name, but they leave the actual administration of the city to an efficient bureaucracy headed up by the high minister, an angel named Kemuel.
Defenses: Several legions of angels of battle, angels of valor, and exalted warriors.
Inns: House in the Clouds; Methion Arms; Garden of Geras. The Methion Arms is an excellent choice for travelers who desire a good mix of location, privacy, and reasonable rates.
Taverns: Silver Tankard; Andarman's Taproom; Kossian Vineyard.
Temples: Cathedral of Aurosion (Erathis, Pelor, and Ioun); University Chapel in Kerith-Ald (Erathis, Pelor, and Ioun). The palaces of Aurosion and Kerith-Ald include great halls of reverence, attended by angels and exalted clerics who served Erathis, Pelor, and Ioun in life. Smaller shrines dedicated to most other gods in the pantheon (even a few evil ones) exist elsewhere in the city, since the people of Hestavar are pious and give respect to all the deities.

Gigantic shimmering pale gold and silver clouds surround the city of Hestavar and mark its border with the Astral Sea. Through breaks in the clouds, approaching travelers spy slender towers and soaring domes high overhead. Astral vessels that enter the clouds emerge a few minutes later sailing upon the dazzling turquoise waters of the vast lagoon filling the lower third of the plane. Travelers without a vessel appear on one of the white sandbars dotting the perimeter of the lagoon. Dozens of islands covered in stately homes, white ramparts, and marble quays lie scattered over the surface of the lagoon, but the towns on the lagoon isles are only a small portion of the Bright City—most of the city is built atop the great floating earthmotes that mount higher and higher into the sky of the plane. Soaring bridges or buttresses link many of these motes, although other motes are free to drift.

It is always noontime in Hestavar. The clouds above the plane serve as its sun, shedding brilliant radiance from overhead. As the clouds drift and darken or brighten, the color and intensity of the light varies. At their darkest, the clouds take on a dark silver color like rainclouds, but brighter clouds behind them still glow intensely in a pale gold, peeking through in slanting beams like sunlight. It does not truly rain in Hestavar, but some of the earthmotes hold endless springs that feed small waterfalls high overhead. As lower earthmotes drift underneath, they pass through the falling mists.

Powers of Hestavar

Three greater deities make their homes in Hestavar. Pelor, the god of the sun, and Erathis, the goddess of civilization and invention, rule jointly over the plane. A court of valiant heroes, wise councilors, and great artists attend the two deities. Although Erathis does not share Pelor's boundless compassion or his enmity toward the forces of evil (tyranny is, after all, one of the forms that civilization may take), she greatly desires a peaceful, orderly realm and is a benevolent influence. When Pelor and Erathis do not wish to preside over their court, their palace draws away above the city, and the bridges linking it to the districts below vanish.

Ioun, the goddess of knowledge, plays a less active role in the affairs of the Bright City. She dwells in relative seclusion in a white tower filled with countless tomes and attended by many sages, scribes, and students of the arcane arts. On occasion, she leaves her tower on mysterious journeys to distant corners of the planes or the world. Some say she goes to visit days yet to come and records the events she observes in a secret book of prophecy.

Most of the citizens of Hestavar are exalted, mortal spirits who earned the favor of the deities during life and were granted life after life as a reward. However, Hestavar also serves as a crossroads of the Astral Sea, and many creatures both mortal and immortal pass through its shining streets. Angels in the service of other deities, exalted spirits from other benevolent dominions, maruts, bladelings, mortal adventurers, eladrin lords, guardians such as nagas and sphinxes, and even the occasional githyanki or devil (protected by diplomatic assurances of good behavior) meet in the courts of Hestavar.

Sites in Hestavar

Hestavar is filled with a constant bustle of activity. Ships ply the waters of the lagoon. Flying boats with sails like wings flit between the aerial islands of the higher districts. Although the plane presents a peaceful and friendly face to the Astral Sea beyond, it is not defenseless. The lagoon islands are heavily fortified, and many of the ships and aerial vessels are engaged in vigilant patrols.

Aurosion: A magnificent palace of gold that stands upon the highest of Hestavar's motes, Aurosion is the abode of Pelor and Erathis. A large and well-ordered bureaucracy of angels and wise mortal spirits governs Hestavar from the halls of Aurosion. Only the greatest of living mortals are permitted to approach the twin thrones, but on rare occasions Erathis and Pelor choose to bestow laurels on heroes of great renown.

The Field of Ida: This wide, flat earthmote is covered in a green daisy-flecked meadow. No permanent buildings have been erected on this meadow. Instead, great pavilions and viewing stands surround a broad tournament field. The field is the place where the folk of the city gather in times of celebration. Here the more valiant spirits of the city test their mettle in jousts or magical duels. On momentous occasions, the high lords and ladies of the city award victors with trophies or prizes of tremendous value.

Kerith-Ald, the Swan Tower: Ioun's dwelling place is Kerith-Ald. Kerith-Ald drifts on a lonely earthmote several thousand feet above the lagoon. Kerith-Ald's lower domes and halls contain a magic academy, a university, and a vast library—the finest to be found anywhere. Above these rise a slender white tower graced with a swan motif to which Ioun retreats when she desires time for reflection. Ioun holds court in the Hall of Enlightenment at the foot of the tower, and often bestows boons of knowledge on those who come seeking her favor. Although many people assume that Ioun's servants are academics who withdraw from worldly affairs, the cognoscenti of Kerith-Ald do not hesitate to intervene behind the scenes (often through mortal heroes) to safeguard places of learning or rescue works that would otherwise be lost forever.

LUCIO PARRILLO

Methion: Hovering a thousand feet above the city lagoon, this large, hill-covered earthmote is home to most of Hestavar's great mercantile emporiums and artisan workshops. Winding lanes and steep stairs climb up and down the sides of Methion linking dozens of courts and plazas. Small bookstores, jeweler's shops, goldsmiths, and curio dealers crowd together in an eclectic assortment of buildings and towers. Methion is the Bright City's principle marketplace for rare and unusual goods. The bazaar of the City of Brass may be a better market for arms and armor, but for the rarest and most wondrous treasures—especially implements, rings, and other magic jewelry—Methion is the place to go.

The Silver Tankard: On one of the larger of the lagoon isles stands the Silver Tankard, perhaps the best place in Hestavar to meet strange folk and hear interesting tales. The city boasts many taverns and inns, but the Silver Tankard's location on the lagoon means that astral wayfarers frequent it more than other places. Although no tavern in Hestavar is truly rough, the Silver Tankard comes the closest.

ADVENTURE IN HESTAVAR

Hestavar is normally a peaceful dominion, but sometimes danger lurks in surprising places. Devils, githyanki, and abominations such as astral stalkers sometimes ambush astral vessels as they come or go from the Bright City. Such creatures sometimes even raid the outskirts of the city, although Hestavar's defenses are formidable. Rarely, agents of hostile powers such as Vecna or Bane attempt something nefarious—espionage, kidnapping, or assassination. Mortal heroes visiting Hestavar could easily get caught up in skullduggery and intrigue as they try to ferret out such agents or stumble across villains engaged in some daring crime. Rival heroes or meddlesome demigods may find reason to work against the player characters. Finally, Hestavar's nobility—the greatest of the exalted mortal spirits who live in the Bright City—can be a prickly lot. They include a number of gallants quick to take offense when bumpkins from the mortal world fail to acknowledge their place. Heroes could become caught up in courtly politics, affairs of honor, or romantic rivalries that pit them against some of Hestavar's haughtier spirits. Brawls or pitched battles are unlikely in the Bright City, but lethal duels of sword or spell are not unheard of.

KALANDURREN, THE DARKENED PILLARS

A domain undone by a horde of demons, where few now venture

KALANDURREN TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Island of stepped plateaus about 120 miles across that sports two mighty peaks; bounded.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Normal.
Alignment: Unaligned.
Cold Affinity: Attacks with the cold keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks with the fire keyword deal half damage (ongoing fire damage is not affected).

Once a peaceful, well-ordered domain of shining castles and noble warriors, Kalandurren is now a ruined landscape where dark powers squabble over the choicest plunder. Kalandurren was the dominion of the god Amoth, a power of justice and mercy, but thousands of years ago the demon princes Orcus, Demogorgon, and Rimmon took advantage of a cosmic conjunction to storm Kalandurren and destroy it. Amoth destroyed Rimmon and nearly split Demogorgon in two, but Orcus struck down the deity, and the demons prevailed. Divine hosts from the dominions of other deities soon drove out the victorious demons, but Kalandurren was marred forever.

Kalandurren is a large island dominion surrounded by a sea that pours endlessly off the edge of its being. Ships that sail over the edge continue straight on, soaring gently upward through damp, billowing mist into the Astral Sea. Visitors approaching from the Astral Sea catch glimpses of its waterfalls and peaks through a flickering color veil of pale gray. The isle itself consists of overlapping stepped plateaus covered in rolling hills, rising up to two towering pillarlike mountains. The many lakes and streams at the edges of the plateaus that flow off the edge of the plateau endlessly give the island the appearance of a great white fountain.

Long ago, a great golden orb that shone like the sun capped the mountain Aurama, and the mountain Argeno supported a white orb that gave forth silvery moonlight. Now the great orbs are blackened and dark, leaving only a dim gray gloom that pervades the whole plane from its steel-colored sky. Kalandurren is cold and cheerless, its temperature hovering just above freezing, and light flurries of snow sometimes fall amid driving blasts of wind.

Powers of Kalandurren

No deities reign over Kalandurren, and large portions of the dominion are completely abandoned. Its current denizens include stranded demons, a handful of ancient guardians still protecting treasure vaults and places of power, and the Doomguard—a plane-spanning warrior society dedicated to destroying anything that attempts to impose its order on the cosmos, be it deity, devil, domain, or natural law.

The demons present the most serious threat to visitors. Some of the old portals used in the long-ago demonic assault still function intermittently. These portals allow more Abyssal denizens to trickle into the dominion. Demons prowl many of the ruins, squabbling over territory. The Doomguard, on the other hand, jealously guards a handful of strong citadels near points of particular interest. Although the Doomguard claims all of Kalandurren as its hidden redoubt, the Doomguard leave most of the ruins to whatever demons or other monsters see fit to lair there.

Sites in Kalandurren

Kalandurren was home to several large cities and scores of proud castles in its day. Most of these lie in ruin now. Bands of devils, githyanki, and mortal adventurers sometimes come to Kalandurren to search for a fabled artifact, to ferret out a long-lost piece of lore, or to see what they can unearth. Servants of Vecna are the most common of these ruin-delvers, and they often waylay others who unearth choice prizes.

Citadel Exalhus: The most important of the Doomguard strongholds is Citadel Exalhus. Here the doomlords—the secret masters of the society—take counsel. The high doomlord is Nariche, an evil and pitiless human female who sends powerful Doomguards to marshal hordes against bastions of civilization, whether tyrannical or benevolent. Nariche is intent on collecting the scattered pieces of an ancient artifact known as the Rod of Seven Parts, but what she intends to do with it, only she could say. The Doomguard has many powerful enemies, and so it slays any intruders its warriors detect by default.

Rimmon's Cairn: The slain demon prince Rimmon is entombed in a great barrow in the shadows of Argeno. The divine hosts who drove Orcus and Demogorgon from the dominion wove great wards of power to contain Rimmon's evil where the demon prince fell. From time to time, some maniac or minor demon seeks to destroy the wards, hoping to consume Rimmon's essence and thereby acquire the power of an Abyssal lord.

The Nine Hells

Abandon hope, all ye who enter here

THE NINE HELLS TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Planet roughly 7,000 miles in diameter and riddled with continent-sized caverns; recursive.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Normal.
Plummet to Avernus: Creatures who fall through the dominion's color veil anywhere other than the storm clouds above the Lake of Despond take 5d10 falling damage, are knocked prone, and take ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).
Cold Affinity (Stygia and Cania only): Attacks with the cold keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks with the fire keyword deal half damage (ongoing fire damage is not affected).
Corruption (Minauros and Maladomini only): Attacks with the disease or poison keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll. Healing powers restore only half as many hit points as normal.
Fire Affinity (Avernus, Dis, Phlegethos, and Nessus only): Attacks with the fire keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks with the cold keyword deal half damage (ongoing cold damage is not affected).
Inveiglement (Malbolge only): Attacks with the charm or illusion keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll.

The Nine Hells are the home of the terrible race of immortals known as devils. The hells are housed within a tormented world called Baator that is clouded in ash and smoke. Within this fuming orb lie cauldrons of lava, bitter seas of ice, and cities of scorching iron. Each hell (except Avernus, the first) is a buried continent, a cavern of tremendous size. Each lies deeper than its predecessor. Nessus, the ninth, is a fiery rift at the center of the devils' planet-sized dominion. Some hells are fiery, some are bitterly cold, some are poisonous mires, and some are cruel fortresses—but all are terrible beyond mortal endurance, and only the greatest and most foolhardy of heroes dare venture within.

The color veil of the Nine Hells is a roiling cloud of red smoke that occasionally parts to permit glimpses of the orb below: the burning desert of Avernus, which forms the surface of this tortured world. Astral travelers that pass through the plane's color veil find themselves dozens of miles above Avernus. Vessels (or individuals) that can't fly in worlds with normal gravity plunge to the ground in a fiery, buffeting whirlwind. Oddly, many travelers survive this descent—it seems the Nine Hells are not so merciful as to kill their victims too quickly. The only safe way to enter the Nine Hells is to locate the storm churning above the Lake of Despond, birthplace of the Styx, and descend through its churning funnel. Vessels alight on the lake, but travelers without a vessel drop painfully onto the stony shore.

Unless the traveler can fly, it is much easier to enter the Nine Hells than it is to leave. Ascending the storm above the Lake of Despond is impossible, but some stories claim that the Styx pours back out into the Astral Sea after its frozen passage through Cania.

Powers of the Nine Hells

Countless legions of devils are imprisoned within this cavern world. They are bound for all time to the ruined dominion of the deity they rebelled against long ago. Each layer is governed by one of the Lords of the Nine. Most of the lords are archdevils, unique devils of great power. Archdevils too weak or disloyal to rule a layer of their own serve as viziers or vassals to one of the Lords of the Nine or languish in disfavor and exile, waiting for the chance to supplant one of their betters.

Archdevils are the dukes and princes of the Nine Hells, and they constantly scheme and plot against their peers in a never-ending quest for more power. Mephistopheles dreams of displacing Asmodeus. Baalzebul loathes Mephistopheles. Glasya hates Levistus, who in turn plots his revenge against Asmodeus. Asmodeus fears no single lesser archdevil (except possibly Mephistopheles), but even the Prince of Nessus dreads the day when the other archdevils unite against him. Asmodeus carefully fosters rivalries and distrust among the other archdevils to prevent such a day from ever coming to pass.

Beneath the archdevils are the ranks of the infernal hierarchy. The Nine Hells are highly organized, and each devil has its own place that corresponds to its own personal power. The mighty pit fiends are the barons and nobles of the Nine Hells, each sworn to the service of one or another of the archdevils. War devils are the generals and captains of the Nine Hells. Brazen devils are elite guards, pain devils are torturers and jailors, spined devils are lowly scouts and messengers. Every devil has its place. The archdevils reward lesser devils that excel in their duties by transforming them into progressively more powerful forms through agonizing rituals.

Devils delight in claiming mortal souls—the damned. The Nine Hells are filled with the wretched spirits of mortals. Some deliberately gave themselves to the service of the Nine Hells in life, some did the devils' work unwittingly, and some had the misfortune to fall under fiendish power. The damned appear much as they did in life. They are reborn in the Nine Hells in a form of flesh and blood, although they are gaunt and frail. Through the tormenting of the damned, devils harvest the power inherent in the mortal soul—power to fuel infernal rites, to animate infernal constructs, to strengthen archdevils, or to fortify defenses. Although most damned souls are imprisoned until expended, a scant few—those who served the Nine Hells with particular ability in life—are rewarded with transformation into lesser devils so that they may continue to serve the Nine Hells throughout eternity.

Avernus, the First Hell

The first layer of the Nine Hells is Avernus. It is the surface of Baator's ruddy orb. It is a desert of stone, pumice, and ash broken by the occasional range of low, jagged mountains or a flowing river of lava. The fortresses of devils dot its landscape surrounded by the debris of countless battles. During the most fierce outbreaks of the Blood War, hordes of demons often invade Avernus. Consequently, it is defended by legions of infernal warriors and daunting strongholds.

Unlike the deeper hells, Avernus has a sky. In the sky, sullen, roiling clouds of red and black constantly flicker and burn with gouts of orange flame. Streaking fireballs posing a significant threat to any creatures caught out in the open (see "Avernus Cinderstorm," page 23) pelt the barren landscape below at odd intervals. The air is hot, dry, and acrid, fouled by volcanic fumaroles.

The mighty pit fiend ruler of Avernus is Bel, chosen by Asmodeus for his loyalty and his military genius. Bel is a cool, calculating creature that carefully avoids the intrigues of the other lords. A circle of pit fiends known as the Dark Eight serve as Bel's vassals and councilors. Bel governs only at their pleasure, and he must constantly consider whether his actions will meet with the approval of the Dark Eight.

Avernus is also home to a number of lesser archdevils currently in disfavor, such as Azazel, Moloch, Nergal, and Raamoth. Most are deeply engaged in various plots and schemes to seize a place of true power again or at the least discredit any Lord of the Nine they perceive to be vulnerable to such tactics. Avernus is the largest and most desolate of the hells, so many outcast devils or those few damned who escape their torments hide in its barren mountains.

The Bronze Citadel: The Bronze Citadel is the seat of Bel's power. It is a mighty fortress of fourteen concentric rings, each studded with forbidding towers and infernal war machines. Thousands of spined devils, bearded devils, and legion devils are housed in its vast barracks. Adventurers captured in Avernus and those folk who hope to obtain a letter of safe passage through the Nine Hells are brought here to plead their case before Bel or one of his appointed lieutenants.

Darkspine: Once a corrupt city in the mortal world, Darkspine was engulfed by a great planar rift and brought to the plains of Avernus—a fitting end for its wickedness, according to some. Its ruins are mostly abandoned now, but a handful of desperate wretches still skulk through the burned buildings. Gangs of pain devils and bearded devils rummage through the debris, hoping to ferret out an escaped damned soul or unearth an interesting bauble.

Gates of Malsperanze: Many caves in Avernus lead down to other hells below, but the most notorious is a great archway guarded by towering gates of iron. Molten runes above the gates read, "Abandon hope, all ye who enter here." The gates stand open, and beyond them a road descends steeply to the iron city of Dis, second of the Nine Hells.

Lake of Despond: This large, bitter lake marks the birthplace of the River Styx. Souls newly arrived in the Nine Hells awake on its rocky shores where they are quickly snatched up by devils assigned the task of collecting the damned. A great funnel-like storm cloud churning above the lake marks the only safe descent from the Astral Sea to Avernus, so most planar travelers arrive in the Nine Hells at this point. Naturally, the devils looking out for damned souls often try to collect them, too.

The River Styx

The Styx is a dark and dismal stream that meanders through the Nine Hells. Born in a bitter lake amid basalt cliffs on Avernus, it is linked to the Astral Sea by a seething funnel of storm clouds dense enough to bear astral vessels down to the plains of Hell. It races in a reckless black torrent through steep gorges in Avernus before disappearing into a fuming cavern and plummeting down to the fetid marshes of Minauros. Slow and sluggish at that point, it wanders on a long, dark journey before emerging again in the icy sea of Stygia. The Styx then flows through Malbolge and Maladomini before it ends in the great glaciers of Cania, missing only Dis, Phlegethos, and Nessus in its travels.

Although it is a deadly perilous path, the Styx offers bold adventurers a road leading deep into the Nine Hells, especially if they can find or build a sturdy vessel. The plunges from Avernus to Minauros and from Minauros to Stygia are precipitous and can only be navigated by an expert boater in a vessel no larger than a keelboat. Riding the Styx may seem like the course of a lunatic, but few devils patrol its shores, and it's the best way to reach the middle hells without fighting through legions of devils first.

Dis, the Second Hell

A road littered with skulls leads twenty miles or so from the Gates of Malsperanze down to the vast cavern of Dis. The cavern is illuminated by the ruddy glow of sluggish lava streams and red-hot iron. The cavern is more than a hundred miles wide and easily ten miles tall, and jagged mountains and sheer ravines break up its floor. Bridges of iron span dizzying drops until the road reaches the walls of the Iron City of Dis, from which the whole layer takes its name.

DIS

The largest and most well known of the cities in the Nine Hells, Dis is a vast maze of searing iron ramparts, dark alleyways, squalid slums, and squares where iron gargoyles brood.

Population: Approximately 400,000. Dis is large enough for many more, but much of the city is an uninhabited maze of iron walls and blind alleys. Devils and the damned make up the vast majority of the population, with a considerable number of cambions, tieflings, and assorted planar travelers.

Government: The archdevil Dispater is the supreme ruler of Dis. The city is a cruel and effective tyranny. Every devil knows its place.

Defenses: Thousands of legion devils, spined devils, bearded devils, and succubi dwell in Dis. The city is a tremendous fortress.

Inns: Crown of Iron; Fool's Hope; King's Arms. All are located in the slum area known as the Fetters, where planar travelers often wind up.

Taverns: Wages of Sin; Filched Kiss.

Supplies: The Fetters's market stalls are the best option for routine provisions, but decent food is rare and expensive. Arms, armor, and magic are available in the city's foundries, where many damned who were skilled artisans in life are put to work by Dispater's devils.

Temples: House of Shadows (Zehir); Fane of Glory (Tiamat); Shrine of Swords (Bane). All are located in the Fetters. The Hall of Infernal Might (Asmodeus) is a sprawling cathedral of iron located in the heart of Dis. Devils don't worship Asmodeus, but many of the damned do. It's how they got to be here in the first place.

Dis sprawls over miles of steep hillsides. It is a tangled maze of iron ramparts, black towers, and ramshackle alleyways. Vast dungeons of iron lie beneath the crowded streets. Travelers must be careful to avoid brushing up against walls, gates, and other such objects within the city, for most are searing hot.

The master of Dis is the archdevil Dispater, Father of Strife. Dispater rarely leaves his Iron Tower, preferring to govern his domain through minions and functionaries. Patient, deceitful, and meticulously careful of his personal safety, Dispater has survived the politics of the Nine Hells for ages uncounted. He rules over a small court of lesser archdevils, including Titivilus, Nuncio of the Iron Tower, and Biphant, the provost of Dis.

The Fetters: The city of Dis is the one place in the Nine Hells where creatures from outside the dominion can come to engage in trade, barter information, or seek infernal audiences. The Fetters is the name for the city district where these outsiders gather, along with damned souls who were clever or valuable enough to avoid the torments reserved for most of the Nine Hells' victims. Somehow many of the outsiders who come to Dis find themselves stuck here and never leave the Nine Hells—hence the name of the district. The Fetters is a sprawling, dismal slum crowded with shrines to dark deities and dilapidated palaces where splendor has long ago peeled away to reveal the rot beneath. Gangs of vicious thieves fight for control of the Fetters, but their freedom is an illusion. Dispater's spies and informants keep the archdevil apprised of dealings here.

Mentiri: The vast prison of Dis lies in the heart of a confusing labyrinth that is guarded by bone devils, bearded devils, chain devils, and barbed devils. Living mortals captured in the Nine Hells languish here. The inmates include crusading paladins, planar mercenaries, demon cultists—and more than a few luckless adventurers. The souls of mortals who somehow wind up in the Nine Hells without damning themselves in life are also held here. Due to ancient compacts, these do not belong to the devils and cannot be tormented or destroyed—but neither need they be released.

The Iron Tower: The citadel of Dispater is the Iron Tower, a mighty fortified palace that stands above the center of the city by hanging down from a gigantic stalactite in the cavern ceiling. The tower itself answers to Dispater's will. It forms new corridors and walls off intruders in blind mazes at the archdevil's whim. Within its bounds, Dispater is immune to assault.

Minauros, the Third Hell

A road lined with gibbets leads from the lower gate of Dis and descends deeper and deeper as the city's cavern gradually broadens into the even vaster cavern of Minauros. Dank and brooding, Minauros extends for three hundred miles or so beneath a ceiling that is rarely more than a few hundred feet overhead. Towering columns of rock scattered every mile or two support the ceiling above. The only light comes from the faint luminescence of stinking, yellow-green swamp mists. Oily, foul-smelling water seeps down through the ceiling and falls as an endless rain to create a black, muddy bog throughout most of Minauros. In some places, warmth rising up from below heats the bogs of Minauros into stinking mud geysers.

Minauros is the domain of the archdevil Mammon, the King of Greed. Given to insatiable lust and avarice, Mammon is a vile, duplicitous creature that retains his position only by shamelessly fawning before Asmodeus. Despised by the other Lords of the Nine, Mammon must find his allies beyond the Nine Hells. Consequently, he seeks to corrupt powerful mortals through avarice and lust. Mammon constantly promotes and casts aside lesser devils, so the mires of Minauros are full of devils hoping to win their way back into his good graces.

Minauros, the Sinking City: Mammon's seat of power is the city of Minauros, from which the cavern takes its name. Black muck oozes up between the paving stones, streets buckle and shift, and from time to time entire buildings vanish into the slime below. Mammon's gilded palace leans drunkenly as its foundations sink, but somehow it never completely collapses. Within the palace, the King of Greed surrounds himself with vast amounts of tawdry and tasteless (but valuable) treasure and legions of lesser devils.

Jangling Hiter: Jangling Hiter, the City of Chains, is the domain of the chain devils (kytons). The buildings of Jangling Hiter are kept from sinking into the layer's mire by great chains anchored in the rock of the cavern ceiling. Many are the torments of the Nine Hells, but nowhere are the damned more cruelly or creatively made to suffer as they are here. Damned souls are brought here from all corners of the plane and herded into Jangling Hiter by the scores every day. The bloated archdevil Sagirsa, a loyal vassal to Mammon, governs the city.

Labyrinth of Truths: The Labyrinth, a grim fortress of worn gray stone, is a vast repository of records kept by Mammon's underlings. Most of these are useless now, but a few are of inestimable worth—ancient treasure maps, books holding terrible rituals, and scrolls that record words of power forgotten elsewhere. A horde of lesser devils guards the Labyrinth.

Phlegethos, the Fourth Hell

Dripping steps cut into the muddy geysers of Minauros descend for scores of miles to the fiery cavern of Phlegethos. Curtains of lava pour down from fissures in the ceiling of this hell to pool in great lakes of molten rock or race riverlike along slag-splattered courses. Mountainous volcanoes that contribute to the fiery destruction rise from the cavern floor. The air is scorching hot and flecked with ash.

Phlegethos is a long, twisting cavern world about thirty miles wide, two hundred miles long, and one to ten miles in height. It descends steeply from its upper end—where stairways from Minauros emerge at the feet of great rocky columns—down to a black plain of cracked and cooling lava. Amid this desolation stands the city of Abyrimoch, the only one in this nightmarish landscape. The Road of Cinders runs from the depths of Abyrimoch. The Road is a broken maze of old lava tubes that wind into the darkness. This maze serves as the corridor linking Phlegethos to Stygia, the fifth hell, but it is a dangerous path indeed.

DAARKEN

Sudden floods of lava spill down into this maze often to overtake travelers far from the layer's normal boundaries.

The archdevil Fierna rules over Phlegethos, but her father Belial stands beside her throne. Belial is the patron of secrets and seduction, an old and canny archdevil indeed. Fierna is the patron of fire and pleasure. Belial has long schemed against Levistus, the Lord of Stygia, but Fierna has little interest in that frozen domain. She instead courts the favor of Glasya, who rules the domain of Malbolge.

The Lake of Fire: The Lake of Fire is a vast lake of burning pitch in the middle of Phlegethos. It has long been considered a neutral ground in diabolical disputes. The angelic army of Asmodeus was encamped in this spot when the prince of Nessus succeeded in slaying the divine master of this realm, and here the dying deity's wrathful curse struck, submerging the faithless angels in seething fire. Despite their resistance to fire, devils still cannot abide the torment of this lake, and devils who earn the wrath of Asmodeus are often condemned to be chained in the burning pitch for years at a time.

Abyrimoch: Fierna and Belial rule from their palace in Abyrimoch, a city built in the caldera of an active volcano. Abyrimoch is the home of the Court Infernal, a circle of pit fiends who settle disputes between devils (and from time to time, the plea of a damned soul who thinks he or she has been unfairly condemned). Abyrimoch is the strongest fortress in the middle hells, and its black towers house vast numbers of legion devils and elite cadres of barbed devils, bone devils, and war devils.

Tymphalos, the Mouth of Iron: This volcano houses a tremendous foundry where lesser devils and hundreds of duergar toil to forge the weapons of Hell and create various infernal constructs. The archdevil Tymphal, a mechanical genius and master smith, supervises this work. Tymphal distrusts Fierna's reckless passions and has chosen to immerse himself in his work and to ignore events outside his volcanic workshop.

Stygia, the Fifth Hell

The tortuous Road of Cinders wanders for hundreds of miles through the broken maze of lava tubes and rifts. As the traveler leaves behind the furious heat of Phlegethos, the Road grows darker and colder until at long last it emerges on the shores of a frozen sea—Stygia, the fifth of the Nine Hells. Stygia is an icy domain, dotted with jagged icebergs and dimly lit by green-blue auroras of frostfire that flicker in the upper reaches of the miles-high vault.

Stygia is a vast layer, and it extends for more than fifteen hundred miles. Its ceiling is supported by a handful of mountainous columns that rise like islands from its frozen seas. It lies at about the same depth as Phlegethos, but due to the twists and turns of the Nine Hells' caverns, it underlies the layer of Dis. Hidden stairs of ice-covered iron in one of Stygia's mountain-columns lead up many long miles to link the two domains. At its farther shore, several long, icebound canals lead off into the darkness toward distant Malbolge.

The archdevil Levistus is master of Stygia, but he is imprisoned in his own domain. Long ago he murdered Bensozia, the consort of Asmodeus and mother of Glasya. In punishment, Asmodeus entombed Levistus in one of the layer's towering icebergs and gave his domain to the archdevil Geryon. However, a century ago Asmodeus dismissed Geryon and restored Stygia to Levistus's rule—but he did not free the Prince of Betrayal from his icy prison. Levistus is still frozen, but he is awake and aware, and he rules through intermediary devils he commands with the power of his mind.

The Denizens of Hell

As you might expect, the Nine Hells steadily increase in danger, because more powerful devils reside in deeper levels. Adventurers can find traveling pit fiends and archdevils in any of the Nine Hells, but most of the devils residing in the upper hells are much weaker than these mighty fiends. Common devils encountered on each layer include those listed below; statistics for these monsters can be found in Chapter 6 as well as the Monster Manual.

Avernus: Bearded devil, hell hound, legion devil grunt, legion devil hellguard, spined devil

Dis: Bearded devil, cambion hellsword, hell hound, legion devil grunt, legion devil hellguard, pain devil, spined devil, succubus

Minauros: Bearded devil, cambion hellsword, chain devil, legion devil grunt, legion devil hellguard, pain devil, hellstinger scorpion

Phlegethos: Chain devil, barbed devil, barbed devil enforcer, bone devil, firebred hell hound, legion devil hellguard, legion devil veteran, hellstinger scorpion

Stygia: Barbed devil, barbed devil enforcer, bone devil, legion devil veteran, ice devil, succubus

Malbolge: Barbed devil, barbed devil enforcer, bone devil, cambion hellfire magus, chain devil, legion devil veteran, succubus

Maladomini: Barbed devil, barbed devil enforcer, bone devil, cambion hellfire magus, legion devil veteran, legion devil legionnaire, storm devil, war devil

Cania: Bone devil, cambion hellfire magus, ice devil, legion devil veteran, legion devil legionnaire, storm devil, war devil

Nessus: Brazen devil, firebred hell hound, storm devil, legion devil legionnaire, pit fiend, war devil

The powerful pit fiend Amon serves as Levistus's seneschal. He oversees armies of bone devils, ice devils, and storm devils, which are all common in Stygia. Most other devils avoid the layer. Its bitterly cold seas can quench even a devil's fire.

Tantlin: Carved from the ice of a giant iceberg, Tantlin is the largest city in Stygia. Its structure consists of concentric rings. Lesser devils are consigned to the outer districts and forbidden from setting foot in the inner circles on pain of death. Although Tantlin is deep in the middle hells, it sees a fair amount of nondevil visitors. A number of well-guarded icy portals adrift in the surrounding sea link Stygia to various parts of the mortal world. Only Dis sees more traffic with outsiders. Of course, visitors are tolerated only as long as a powerful devil (a pit fiend or war devil) guarantees their safe passage.

Tomb of Levistus: The iceberg prison of Levistus drifts slowly throughout the dark reaches of Stygia. The frozen archdevil's form is visible through the exceptionally clear ice, where it is entombed about 100 feet deep inside a towering rampart. The iceberg is enchanted, and it quickly regenerates any effort to excavate its prisoner. Ice devils stand guard over the iceberg, but they have been known to accept bribes to allow visitors into Levistus's presence. The archdevil can perceive and communicate with those who stand immediately outside his prison.

Malbolge, the Sixth Hell

Hundreds of miles from the frozen sea of Stygia lies the great cavern of Malbolge. Long icebound canals link the two layers. They thaw gradually as the traveler approaches the sixth hell. Malbolge is a poisoned garden, a realm that seems fair at first glance, but which conceals terrible rot and despair. Its trees are twisted and brown, its ponds and streams hold poisoned waters, the fragrance of its flowers brings dark, drugged sleep and nightmares, and its white cities and proud towers are charnel houses.

Malbolge is one of the smaller of the Nine Hells. It is a cavern kingdom less than a hundred miles wide. Dozens of great lamps burning with a yellow-green radiance hang from the ceiling a mile overhead. The cavern floor is covered in dead forest and meadows dotted by ruined palaces and abandoned pavilions. This domain was once a beautiful garden in truth, cherished by the deity who ruled over this dominion before the rebellion of Asmodeus, but it is beautiful no longer.

The archdevil Glasya, daughter of Asmodeus, rules Malbolge. She is brilliant, seductive, manipulative, and thoroughly wicked. She delights in playing with those who fall into her power by mixing subtle mockery and cruel teasing with queenly hauteur. She may seem decadent and uncaring, but Glasya surrounds herself with devils (and other servants) who leap to do her bidding. Her chief lieutenant is Tartash, the high marshal of Malbolge. He is an archdevil who commands the elite palace guard of brazen devils and war devils.

Although devils of all sorts can be found in Malbolge, monstrous insects and hellstinger scorpions also plague the layer.

Garden of Delights: Enclosed within the walls of a lovely palace, the Garden of Delights is a cruel place indeed. It is a glimpse of true beauty within the lie that is Malbolge. Glasya keeps it pristine to tantalize and mock her victims. Here succubi soothe broken prisoners, whispering temptations in their ears and promising escape from torment. Of course, nothing adds to the agonies of the Nine Hells more than a promise of relief cruelly rescinded.

Osseia, Palace of Glasya: Glasya governs her layer from a lustrous white palace whose walls and archways are lavishly decorated with baroque ornamentation. Only on close inspection does it become clear that the structure is made from the lacquered bones of countless victims. Glasya's court includes many succubi as well as reckless mortal courtiers, damned souls of wit or nobility, and high-ranking devils who have fallen out of favor with the other Lords of the Nine. When she tires of her playthings, her guard of brazen devils whisk them away to imprisonment or execution in virtual forests of the impaled.

Maladomini, the Seventh Hell

A great marble boulevard lined with grotesque statues known as the Road of Perdition leads from Malbolge to Maladomini, the seventh hell. This layer consists of dozens of vast tunnels that meet and diverge in a maze stretching for hundreds of miles. Maladomini is one of the largest of the hells, and its branching passages link all the lower hells together—in various spots its tunnels reach Malbolge, Cania, and even Nessus.

The tunnels of Maladomini average three to five miles wide, with a ceiling a thousand feet or more overhead. Each tunnel is a long, curving cavern featuring ancient strongholds, crumbling cities, and ruined palaces that climb the tunnel's steep sides. Rivers of filth and sludge wind through the center of each tunnel. Swarms of biting flies plague all who venture through Maladomini's polluted ruins. Guttering green flames fed by pitch seep along the river banks and drifting balls of luminous green fire provide a dim, sickly illumination for the layer, but some tunnels lack this natural lighting and brood eternally in foul, cloying darkness.

Many infernal fiefs are located in Maladomini, and the strongholds of many quarrelsome pit fiends and war devils are located here. The ruler of the layer is the archdevil Baalzebul, the Lord of Flies. Decades ago Asmodeus caught Baalzebul plotting against him. In punishment, Asmodeus transformed the lord of Maladomini into a horrible, sluglike form. Thoroughly beaten, Baalzebul now focuses his attention on wriggling back into the good graces of Asmodeus and earning release from his wretched state. If he can do so by ruining his ancient rivals Dis or Mephistopheles, so much the better. Baalzebul's consort is the powerful archdevil Lilith, who counsels the Lord of Flies in his plotting so that he (and therefore she, too) might be restored to his former glory. Other archdevils in Baalzebul's entourage include Barbatos (marshal of Maladomini) and Nebaz, the Herald of Lies.

Malagarde: The embodiment of Baalzebul's sloth, Malagarde is a once-grand city that is crumbling into ruin. Armies of damned souls and lesser devils labor to raise new buildings or repair streets slumping into sludge, but their efforts seem pointless, and the decay advances. A miasma of fatalism pervades the city. Visitors often fall into a gray despair and never muster the willpower to leave Malagarde. Baalzebul rules from the Palace of Filth, a vast structure constantly filled with refuse by lesser devils in obedience to the punishment decreed by Asmodeus.

The Carnival Macabre: Under a sluice that showers filth into a mucky vale, devils cavort in an endless bacchanal known as the Carnival Macabre. Dark pleasures and degradation of the most unspeakable sort are available within the Carnival's filth-splattered pavilions. The Carnival is home to a thriving black market in which devils barter for things forbidden even in the Nine Hells—stolen souls, treasures hidden from the Lords of the Nine, writs of safe passage, and books of banned rituals.

Grenpoli: Violence is forbidden within the walls of Grenpoli, the City of Guile. Much like the city of Dis on the second layer or Tantlin in the fifth, Grenpoli is a place where commerce and intrigue come together. It lies on a broad and easily navigable portion of the Styx, and trade bound from the middle hells to the lower hells often passes through its dilapidated storehouses.

The politics of the Nine Hells flowers in Grenpoli because this city is the place where the infernal bureaucracy established by Asmodeus carries out its business and the emissaries of the Lords of the Nine (and other powers) meet. Grenpoli is ruled in Baalzebul's name by a powerful cambion named Mysdem, but the true power in the city is the pit fiend Lenphant, the chief administrator of the infernal bureaucracy.

Cania, the Eighth Hell

The winding tunnels of Maladomini eventually connect to the vast, cold cavern of Cania. This great vault is a mountain-floored gulf several hundred miles across and dozens of miles in height, an icy kingdom shrouded in eternal night. Only a dim blue-white radiance glimmering from the mighty glaciers of the layer alleviates the darkness. In places where no glaciers are nearby, Cania is lightless. Violent, howling winds that quickly overcoming all but the hardiest of creatures blow a stinging spray of ice and dust over Cania's mountains and icefields.

Much like Maladomini above, Cania was once a realm of great cities before the rebellion of Asmodeus. Although the cities of the seventh hell have crumbled into unrecognizable ruin, the cities of Cania are preserved in the icy depths. Here the remnants of the ancient domain that existed before the fall of the devils still exist in the form of icy tombs, forgotten libraries, and ghost-haunted palaces. Many of the angels who refused to rebel were condemned to torment and death here, and they linger in Cania's depths as undead creatures of terrible power. Even devils fear to delve too deeply into Cania's depths, preferring to leave these ancient ruins alone.

Because of this legacy of buried powers, the archdevil Mephistopheles—second in might only to Asmodeus himself—chose Cania for his own realm millennia ago. Some whisper that the treasures Mephistopheles has unearthed from the depths of his domain include the secrets of hellfire, as well as baleful weapons strong enough to deter even Asmodeus from interfering in this layer. Proud, handsome, and princely in demeanor, Mephistopheles has made a long career of tempting mortals with power, especially magical power, and is the patron of many infernal pact warlocks.

Mephistopheles's great strength lies in his command of the ice devils, or gelugons. These were once a mercenary race of demons akin to mezzodemons, but he entrapped them in perpetual servitude millennia ago, transforming them into denizens of the Nine Hells. Although Mephistopheles permits ice devils to serve other archdevils, they are bound to obey him before any others—a significant bit of insurance for the lord of Cania. Mephistopheles also commands the loyalty of several important archdevils, including Adonides (steward of Cania), Bifrons (commander of a great legion of ice devils), and Belphegor (warden of the hellfire fonts beneath Mephistopheles's palace).

The Icy Dark of Cania

Cania's bitter cold can quickly kill any creature not immune to its effects. Devils dwelling in this layer are acclimated by an infernal ritual, but more than a few foolish mortals have died in Cania's icy wastes.

Cania is an environmental danger (see the Dungeon Master's Guide, page 158). All characters without resistance or immunity to cold must attempt a DC 29 Endurance check once every hour or lose one healing surge. Characters who have no healing surges left lose hit points equal to their level instead. Creatures slain by exposure to Cania's cold are quickly entombed in ice, their features frozen in expressions of horror and dismay.

Mephistar: Carved from the ice of a tremendous glacier, the citadel of Mephistopheles is oddly warm and inviting. It is an enormous castle with literally thousands of living spaces and a horde of guards and servants to attend the lord of the eighth hell. The palace and all its furnishings—even the throne of Mephistopheles—are carved from ice. Slaves and artisans tend to the palace, its contents, and its lord. One of Mephistar's courtyards holds the Garden of Frost, a perfectly detailed frozen facsimile of a living garden accurate down to each delicate icy petal of the smallest flower.

Kintyr: Kintyr is a lost city seated high in a saddle between two icy mountains. It was once the seat of a lesser archdevil who was a faithless vassal to Mephistopheles. The lord of the eighth hell eventually destroyed his rival and entombed the city in cursed ice. Hidden within its icy depths lies the sepulcher of the dead archdevil, along with secret treasuries where the ice conceals a mighty artifact. Mephistopheles believes that ancient wards hide the device from devils who are loyal to him, so he sometimes sentences mortal prisoners to explore the ruins, promising freedom for them if they find anything of value.

Nessus, the Ninth Hell

Hundreds of miles below Maladomini and Cania lies Nessus, the ninth hell. Black, icy rifts beneath Cania's glaciers plunge down to the fiery heart of the hells to link the two layers. Nessus is home to the mighty Asmodeus and countless legions of powerful devils. Few indeed are those who have looked upon its flaming rifts and infernal fortresses and returned again to the mortal world.

Nessus is spherical in shape, a cavern surrounding the dark core of the poisoned world of Baator. It consists of winding crevasses and great, flame-filled gulfs. It is similar to the tunnels of Maladomini, but the tunnels of Nessus more often than not have no floor and instead drop scores of miles down to rivers of molten rock. Citadels of iron inhabited by numberless legions of powerful devils cling to the sides of these terrible precipices, and great bridges span the dizzying drops.

The archdevil Asmodeus, Prince of Evil, personally rules over Nessus. On the rare occasions that he appears in person, he takes the form of a red-skinned humanoid with small black horns dressed in bejeweled robes and affecting an urbane manner. He is a calm, chillingly reasonable creature whose modest appearance is completely at odds with his true power. Asmodeus commands the loyalty of a number of able archdevils, including Alastor (executioner of Nessus), Baalberith (chancellor of the Nine Hells), and Phongor the Inquisitor. He is also served by scores of pit fiends and war devils.

Malsheem: Malsheem is the stronghold of Asmodeus himself. It is one of the strongest fortresses in the cosmos. It is built in the circular walls of a volcanic crater on the "floor" of Nessus. The grim walls of Malsheem hold interior passageways and courts that are magnificent beyond description—halls of gold-veined marble, walls covered in intricate gold leaf, and furnishings of the finest quality. However, a tangible aura of despair suffuses its splendid hallways. Some parts of Malsheem are completely deserted, and visitors could wander for hours through empty chambers and echoing halls. For all Asmodeus's power and pride, the Nine Hells are still a prison. Most of the palace's demesnes are not so quiet, of course—Malsheem houses thousands of guardians, including a legion of brazen devils who guard Asmodeus with suicidal loyalty.

Taj Bari: Taj Bari, a copper-clad citadel that juts from the wall of a deep rift, serves as a repository for dark lore. In its vaults lies a copy of the pact diabolus, an ancient agreement between Asmodeus and the deities regarding the devils' place in the universe. No mortal has ever viewed the pact, but many suspect that Asmodeus got the better of his divine enemies.

The Chalices of Woe: Creatures who arouse the particular ire of Asmodeus are sealed into red-hot coffins and left here, kept alive through endless years of torment by diabolical magic. The hundreds of "chalices" stand in rows amid the ruins of a forgotten city. Some are said to hold the spirits of great heroes who fell under Asmodeus's power centuries ago.

Neshminaar: This secretive city hides behind towering walls of black stone broken only by a single small gate. Within its gloomy halls a cabal of cambions and devils learned in arcane lore experiment with the breeding of monsters, the creation of infernal constructs, and the perfection of dark rituals. Damned souls brought to Neshminaar are consumed in the most terrible ways imaginable, sometimes as nothing more than feed for hellish monstrosities as yet unknown beyond the citadel walls. The pit fiend Neshm rules over the city and supervises the dark studies of its foul lords.

The Firestorms of Nessus

The rifts of Nessus are periodically swept by racing walls of fire driven by furious winds like a gargantuan blast furnace. These firestorms are dangerous to any creatures not resistant or immune to fire damage.

Firestorm Attack and Hit: A firestorm is a moving wall of fire several hundred feet long, 5 to 10 feet deep, and 10 to 60 feet high. When a firestorm first appears, roll initiative for it. On its turn, it sweeps across a battlefield from one side to another, moving 1d12 squares on each of its turns. The wall attacks all creatures it contacts when it advances, as well as any creature that is pushed into it or otherwise enters it during the round: +22 vs. Reflex, 4d8+8 fire damage, and ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends). Miss: Half damage, and no ongoing damage.

Pandemonium

A forgotten domain where the exiled, the hunted, and the desperate slowly succumb to madness

PANDEMONIUM TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Maze of great tunnels that extends for about six hundred miles; recursive.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Normal.
Winds of Pandemonium: Outside of the shelter of a sturdy structure, all of these detrimental effects are imposed by the howling winds: All creatures take a –5 penalty to Perception checks in Pandemonium. Flying creatures treat all squares as difficult terrain. Attacks with the thunder keyword deal half damage (ongoing thunder damage is not affected). Zones of any kind cannot be sustained.

A rambling maze of black tunnels blasted by fierce winds, Pandemonium is the most desolate and dismal of the known astral dominions. The deity who created this place in the timeless depths of antiquity abandoned it soon afterward, and no great powers or races have ever called Pandemonium home. It is a place where the forgotten, the banished, and the lost wander without hope or rest, driven before the never-ending wind.

A dark and tempestuous portion of the Astral Sea surrounds Pandemonium. As the traveler approaches the dominion, roiling magenta purple clouds (the dominion's color veil) press closer and closer, and the wind grows to a howling gale. A sudden burst of turbulence leaves the traveler sprawled on the floor of a vast cavern, and the seething clouds abruptly change into cold, black stone.

The entire plane is wrapped in an endless, black hurricane. To leave Pandemonium, an astral traveler needs to fly back through howling black rifts in the "outer" wall of the cavern-plane while battling wild winds. Many travelers wreck their vessels in this violent passage and become stranded here.

Pandemonium is a kingdom-sized labyrinth of long, winding tunnels and great caverns. These eventually return to their starting points, creating a sealed world-maze that no one has ever fully explored. The plane has no natural sources of light, and most of it is cold. The most dangerous feature is the violent, shrieking wind that buffets and torments any creature faring abroad.

Powers of Pandemonium

No divine realms exist in Pandemonium, but that was not always so. Once this plane was the dominion of the awful god Tharizdun. Tharizdun abandoned the plane shortly after creating it, drawn subsequently by the possibilities of the Elemental Chaos. He never bothered to create any great citadel or palace for himself in Pandemonium. Nevertheless, Pandemonium still bears the mark of Tharizdun, the Chained God. Pandemonium's lightless, winding tunnels, its bone-numbing chill, and its maddening winds are as Tharizdun made them uncounted thousands of years ago. A small number of Tharizdun's ancient servants—monstrous guardians and angels of madness—still lurk in the depths of the plane. In addition to the mad minions of Tharizdun, the lich-god Vecna maintains a hidden tower in the heart of Pandemonium. Dark angels and powerful undead servitors ensure that no visitors stumble upon Vecna's tower and live to tell the tale.

Unlike most of the other astral dominions, few mortal spirits come to this dark place after death. Most of the mortals dwelling in Pandemonium are still alive. They are collectively known as the banished, because most have been consigned to this awful place by terrible curses or fled here to hide from powerful enemies. Many are driven insane by the dark and the wind. The most powerful group of banished is the Bleak Cabal, a secret order of adepts who deliberately give themselves over to madness to master magical power no mortal mind could otherwise endure.

Sites in Pandemonium

Pandemonium's tunnels average 40 to 200 feet in width, but many are a bit smaller and a few are absolutely colossal. Most non-natives quickly become lost in this great, dark maze.

Madhouse: The citadel of the Bleak Cabal lies near the plane's veil. It is a sprawling edifice of haphazardly arranged buildings and walls. The insane masters of the Bleak Cabal care little whether visitors stumble into their citadel or not, but the sellswords and monsters who serve the Bleak Cabal are often on the lookout for travelers who might be taken advantage of.

Wintervault: This portion of Pandemonium is noticeably colder than the rest of this cheerless plane. Here stinging blizzards are carried on the wind, and lakes of black ice lie on the cavern floor. A fierce tribe of frost giants lurks here, making slaves of any creatures who blunder into their grasp.

Agathion: Some of Pandemonium's caverns are completely sealed from the surrounding tunnels. They are completely cut off from the howling winds, also. The only way in or out is by magic portal. Many forgotten evils and slumbering monsters are imprisoned in the silent caverns of Agathion.

Shom, the White Desert

Where the monuments and ruins of a vanished race conceal ancient secrets

SHOM TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Desert of white dunes and low mountains seven hundred miles across; bounded.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Normal.

Once a mysterious mortal race of great knowledge and enlightenment made its home in the dominion of Shom. Pilgrims journeyed to this plane in search of truth and insight and to learn from the elders of Shom. But the ancient race vanished long ago, leaving behind its deserted temples, its buried mausoleums, and its monuments of stone. Now Shom is a magnificent wasteland, a desert of white sand where titanic statues and empty cities silently guard their ancient riddles.

Shom is a large dominion. Mesas of faded orange rock and lush palm oases break up its rolling white dunes. The sky is a strikingly dark blue. A sun and moon orbit the plane, bringing day and night in the normal measure, but this sun and moon are fantastically decorated vessels of gold and silver that sail scores of miles above the ground. Although Shom is arid and swept by strong winds that drive plumes of dust from the dune crests, the temperature remains cool and comfortable.

Astral travelers nearing Shom find a brilliant blue aurora blocking their path. Those who venture through this color veil within to the dominion find themselves transported to the dazzling sands near the half-buried ruin of a city. Astral vessels alight gently on the ground. From the inside, the planar boundary resembles a strong, stationary heat shimmer mirage. Walking into the shimmer—or, in the case of a grounded vessel, taking hold of the helm with the desire to depart—returns the traveler to the Astral Sea.

Powers of Shom

Shom's ancient inhabitants are long vanished, but they guarded their treasures and vaults with mighty constructs, immortal guardians, and sleepless undead. Sphinxes, nagas, mummies, ghosts, and golems protect many places of power in the dominion's ruined cities. Of course, the legendary relics and libraries of this plane draw would-be looters despite these guardians. Githyanki raiders, cultists, devils, or dark angels in the service of Vecna often search for some new treasure or bit of lost lore in Shom's wastes.

Although no mortals have dwelled in Shom in long ages, the bright wastes are dotted with the citadels of marut enclaves. The maruts keep watch on Shom's most powerful and dangerous ruins, driving away intruders when necessary.

Sites in Shom

Great statues, some hundreds of feet tall, dominate Shom's half-buried ruins.

Elirhondas: Once known as the City of Philosophers, Elirhondas was the capital of the domain. It was the final redoubt of Shom's people, and in its failing days many treasures of magical power or hidden knowledge were buried and sealed behind potent wards. Great flameskulls patrol the catacombs beneath its sand-covered streets and attack any intruders they encounter.

Oracle of Qarma-Thaal: This ancient oracle stands in a narrow cleft between two mesas. Together one of the oracle priests and the person seeking advice would drink from the mystic waters of a magic fountain and venture into strange dreams of hidden knowledge and things yet to come. Although the priests are long gone, the magic fountain remains, guarded by a great sphinx known as the Voice of Sarpoth.

The Vanished Illumians

Shom was once the realm of a mortal race known as the illumians. The illumians were much like humans, but Ioun blessed each illumian with two syllables of the Words of Creation: one for the mind and one for the soul. Empowered by this divine gift, the illumians created the astral dominion of Shom and withdrew from the mortal world to lead lives of reflection and study. The illumians flourished for ages, but in their isolation from the mortal world, they slowly ossified around the Words that each embodied. They drew apart from their kind, dividing into ever-smaller cabals that regarded each other with suspicion. An age of bitter rivalry, suspicion-fueled conspiracies, and violent feuds descended over Shom. Many cabals fled, returning to the mortal world or venturing into the far corners of the cosmos. Eventually only one cabal remained, ruling over an empty domain—and then, that cabal died. Ioun grieves for Shom still, for no other mortal realm gained so much understanding or preserved so much knowledge. As for the illumians, it's said that some still remain in the world, a diminished but wiser race.

Tytherion, the Endless Night

A terrible realm of thirst, of darkness, of dragon-hunted deeps

TYTHERION TRAITS

Type: Astral dominion.
Size and Shape: Canyon maze about 100 miles across, 800 miles long, and up to 12 miles deep, surrounded by a belt of dry steppes 10 to 50 miles wide; bounded.
Gravity: Normal.
Mutability: Divinely mutable. (Deities control their own environs.)
Corruption: Attacks with the disease or poison keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll. Healing powers restore only half as many hit points as normal.
Necrotic Affinity: Attacks with the necrotic keyword gain a +1 bonus to the attack roll, and attacks with the radiant keyword deal half damage (ongoing radiant damage is not affected).

A vast maze of canyons shrouded in perpetual darkness, Tytherion is a monster-haunted wasteland where serpents lurk and dragons feed. Sinister temples brood over dizzying precipices, and grim fortresses dot the slopes and spires hidden in the lightless depths below. It is a plane of gloom, of despair, of disillusionment. Here voracious evil gathers its servants and its assets to itself, and hungers for yet more.

Astral travelers who breach Tytherion's murky indigo color veil find their vessels aground in the dry steppes of the rimlands of a canyon in the heart of a great desert or arid savannah. Tytherion consists of a great canyon, or rather, a canyon complex. The canyon stretches for hundreds of miles. Scores of side canyons, hanging valleys, stony shelves, and mountainous mesas complicate its depths. In many places, canyons cut into other canyons, and the deepest lie a dozen miles or more below the surface.

As travelers descend lower and lower into this brooding black maze, they pass from the desert of the rimlands down through a steep belt of dry, dead brush, where black pines and vicious brambles cling to the slopes. Moving lower still, and the brushland gives way to barren rock, choking fumes, and ash—for in the lowest depths volcanic vents feed sluggish streams of cooling lava that wind through the canyon floors.

Tytherion has no sun, no moon, and no stars. Above its barren mesas a thick cowl of black clouds seethe, lost in the gloom that pervades the plane. The only light native to the plane comes from the evil glow of magma rivers in the lowest depths and the occasional flash of lightning in the black skies overhead. From time to time, violent thunderstorms scour the land, sending torrents of cold water cascading down into the canyons below. Most of the water evaporates by the time it reaches the bottom, turning into layers of steam and vapor that offer the dry brushland a small amount of moisture. How the dead trees and briars grew in the first place, none can say.

Powers of Tytherion

The deities who rule in Tytherion do not pay much attention to their benighted realm. Both Tiamat and Zehir are content to allow their servants—and the monsters native to this awful place—to struggle on as best they can, thereby proving their worth.

The steppes, deserts, and higher canyons of Tytherion are the domain of Zehir. Mortal spirits who displeased Zehir in life are transformed into tormented serpentine monsters. In their mindless anguish, they may yet prove useful by guarding his temples. Mortal spirits who pleased Zehir are rewarded with the opportunity to continue their service to the god of night in the afterlife as darksworn. They remain in their humanoid forms but are granted serpentine features—forked tongues, fangs, lidless eyes—as marks of Zehir's favor. They serve as priests, acolytes, and temple guards who grovel and chant in the black temples Zehir orders to built in his own honor.

Tiamat rules in the lower canyons, haunting the volcanic depths of Tytherion. She claims comparatively few mortal spirits for her own. Those she chooses as her darksworn are left to their own devices in the fuming depths of the plane. The strongest and most clever make themselves into lordlings, ruling over their lessers in the brooding castles of the depths. With little required of them by their dragon goddess, many of these servants of Tiamat continue their former lives of avarice and amass hoards in the afterlife as well. They can be found pursuing their greedy schemes in places such as Sigil, Gloomwrought, Chernoggar, or even Hestavar. Those who fail to win a place for themselves in this heartless order are left to fend for themselves outside the citadel's walls and become the playthings of the dragons who roam throughout Tiamat's domain.

Tytherion is also home to a number of outcast devils. Chief among these is the archdevil Geryon, who once ruled Stygia, the fifth hell. The devils of Tytherion are a wretched lot. Some pursue schemes designed to regain the favor of Asmodeus, some continue in their proud rebellion and make empty boasts about wreaking revenge on their infernal rivals, and still others sell themselves as planar mercenaries. Doubtlessly, some of them are also only feigning their disfavor and are secretly serving Asmodeus in their "exile."

RALPH HORSLEY

Sites in Tytherion

In the dry steppes of the rimlands, ancient roadways zigzag down into the depths past the brooding ruins of zigguratlike temples. Outside the chasm's rim, much of the plane seems devoid of level ground. Treacherous slopes of barren rock and scree constantly threaten travelers with the possibility of a fatal fall. Tytherion is warm and dry in its upper reaches, but its depths are hot as a furnace.

Amun-Atl: This massive stepped pyramid of black stone stands atop an island plateau and is the seat of Zehir's power. Lesser temples and dark monasteries surround the central ziggurat, which is a city of darksworn acolytes and assassins devoted to their scaly god. Zehir resides in a vast, lightless maze beneath the ziggurat, but he rarely emerges from his den to acknowledge the devotion of his worshipers. His eyes are fixed on his plots against rival deities. Atlathessk, the Seneschal of Night, a yuan-ti exarch who governs in Zehir's name, runs the domain. Atlathessk demands a steady supply of living mortals to slay upon Zehir's altars, which means that the denizens of Amun-Atl often deal with githyanki slavers or launch raids of their own against mortal worlds.

Caverns of Fiery Splendor: Beneath the deepest pit of Tytherion lies a vast cavern complex of flowing magma rivers and stone ramparts. This sprawling, labyrinthine cavern system is the lair of Tiamat, the Queen of Dragons. The darksworn spirits of evil dragonborn, outcast devils who have sworn allegiance to Tiamat, dark angels, and all manner of draconic spawn fly, crawl, and slither through these vast caves, fawning on the Dragon Queen. Five great wyrms—white, black, green, blue, and red—serve as Tiamat's consorts and guard her hoard, a collection of treasure that beggars the imagination.

Within Tiamat's lair stand a set of adamantine gates over 100 feet tall. Tiamat does not reveal what might lie beyond them and has never allowed them to be opened. Some sages speculate that mighty primordials were bound and imprisoned behind them long ago.

The Crawling Castle: A strong keep of iron walls and forbidding ramparts, the Crawling Castle roams the middle canyon level of Tytherion. It is called the Crawling Castle because it is carried upon hundreds of clawed iron legs. The castle is the citadel of the dark demigod Vulkur Vaal, also known as Vaal the Flayer. Vaal is a cambion warlord who cut a bloody path through the mortal world centuries ago before raising his sights to the abodes of the deities. He dabbles in the darkest sort of magic, seeking the power to make himself greater than any deity. The Castle itself is a mighty artifact that answers to Vaal's will alone. Tormented souls swing from iron gibbets on its battlements, and mercenary devils watch over its iron gates.

Hopelorn: In a hanging vale filled with thorny forest stands the obsidian necropolis of Hopelorn, the stronghold of the lich-lord Melif and his cabal of undead mages. Sarcophagi glow dimly with an evil green phosphorescence in the necropolis, shedding a ghastly light over the vale. It's rumored that Melif earned the wrath of the Raven Queen for his necromantic experiments and therefore withdrew to Tytherion. Horrible undead creations plague the vale of Hopelorn, and the darksworn have learned to give the place a wide berth lest they become the necromancer king's next subject.

Yithomel: Within this forbidding citadel, a cabal of Tiamat's most powerful darksworn spirits rules over a vast region of Tytherion's middle level canyons. These are the Seven Kings of Yith, mortal monarchs who each devoted their lives to a truly draconic lust for wealth and splendor. Each of the kings competes fiercely to amass more wealth and influence over mortal affairs than the others, with each of them engaged in an endless game of one-upmanship. Dozens of maruts who are bound by centuries-old contracts to protect their gluttonous employers guard the fortress.

Other Locales

The cosmography of the Astral Sea is not symmetrical. Some dominions are large, and some are small. Some are well known, and others are virtually forgotten. The Astral Sea washes up against many strange and distant shores, and no one has ever charted out all its floating islets and dark currents.

Carceri, the Red Prison

Carceri is a well-hidden astral dominion. Its entrance is barred by great gates of adamantine. Those who breach the red color veil of the dominion are deposited in front of those adamantine gates. They cannot enter the dominion further without discerning a way to open or bypass the gates.

Carceri is a prison plane. The deities created Carceri as a place to imprison a terrible primordial monster that was too powerful to destroy without unleashing power sufficient to destroy all existence. Moradin himself forged the mighty gates and the chains that bind the monster inside.

Carceri takes the form of a bleak archipelago beneath a starless sky. Six barren islands lie beyond the adamantine gate: Othrys, Cathrys, Minethys, Colothys, Porphatyx, and Agathys. The first five islands are cold and marshy and sometimes lashed by acidic rain. They are inhabited by a wretched, lawless handful of stranded creatures—mortals, mortal spirits, devils, and monsters of all sorts—who were sentenced to perpetual imprisonment in this plane. The strongest among these prisoners and outcasts dominate and enslave the weak.

The sixth island, Agathys, is uninhabited. It lies far beyond the others, and it is here that the gods buried the nameless thing the dominion was made to entomb. Grim, vigilant angels guard the shores and permit none to approach.

Haemnathuun

Gods, primordials, and other powerful beings are sometimes preserved in the Astral Sea after their deaths. Drifting through the starry mists like statues of their former selves, they slumber through eternity, awaiting the divine spark that might reawaken them. One such drifting corpse is Haemnathuun, the Blood Lord, a terrible primordial who fell during a furious assault on the dominions of the gods countless ages ago.

Haemnathuun's drifting corpse is a floating mountain of strange scarlet stone 1,000 feet long. The primordial was nowhere near this size when he perished, but as the ages pass the drifting corpses of dead beings in the Astral slowly transform into astral matter. Haemnathuun was a terrible giant with four clawed arms and a wide mouth full of needle-sharp fangs. The petrifaction of his body and the trees and vines veiling his form do not obscure his monstrosity. The abominations known as blood fiends were his creation, and Haemnathuun made them in his own image.

A fierce tribe of astral stalkers dwells atop Haemnathuun's corpse. They dwell in the weird forest covering his body.

Pluton, the Gray Waste

A dominion of dying willows, shriveled olive trees, and black poplars, Pluton is forgotten by all but the most learned of sages. This cheerless land was once the domain of Nerull, a god of death who trapped the spirits of countless mortals in his kingdom, holding them in thrall. Some he punished with terrible torments and some he forced to serve in his grim legions, but most he kept as powerless shades, aching for the release of true death. Nerull wanted to reign as the king of the gods, and he sent curses and plagues against the mortal world to swell the numbers of the host of the dead.

Fate intervened in the form of a haughty mortal sorcerer-queen whose death brought her into Nerull's realm. The Lord of the Dead sought to bind her to him as his consort, but the sorcerer-queen refused him. Leading a rebellion of tormented souls, the queen overthrew Nerull, broke his hold on the dead, and claimed his portfolio. To prevent her from becoming a tyrant in the same mold as Nerull, the deities elevated this mortal shade to their own ranks and appointed her the goddess of death—but not the dead. Although sovereignty over the dead has been denied her, over the long ages of her reign she has added winter and fate to her domain. She is known in the mortal world as the Raven Queen.

Although Pluton is largely abandoned, and no new mortal souls come here, some spirits feared to pass into true death and chose to cling to the half death that Nerull granted them. Most of these are now hateful, mindless undead creatures. Other mortal spirits were sentenced to torments or bondage that has not ended yet. For example, some spirits were consigned to build a wall that perpetually crumbles before it is finished or to move a mountain one spoonful of dirt at a time. Other creatures, such as minions of Vecna or plunder-seeking githyanki, come to Pluton in search of wealth or knowledge lost for the ages. The funerary wealth of a thousand dead monarchs lies in the mausoleums and crypts of this gloomy plane.

Tu'narath, City of the Githyanki

The greatest of githyanki settlements is Tu'narath, a city ruled by the githyanki lich-queen Vlaakith. Built atop the vast corpse of a forgotten god, Tu'narath is an astral metropolis. Tens of thousands of githyanki and a like number of slaves throng its twisting streets and spiked towers. The city encircles the body of the lost deity, and dizzying bridges span the spaces between outstretched limbs and twisted sections of torso.

A small number of nongithyanki merchants and mercenaries granted safe passage by the Lich-Queen's functionaries carry out their business in the city's crowded market districts but are barred from leaving the quarters set aside for foreigners on pain of death. More than a few visitors have discovered the hard way that their safe conduct lasts only as long as the githyanki find it profitable to permit them to remain free.

Vlaakith the Lich-Queen has ruled over the githyanki race for more than a thousand years. Although other cities and citadels are nominally independent of Tu'narath, no githyanki dares to defy her. She habitually destroys would-be rivals with her fearsome necromancy, feeding on their life forces to sustain her in undeath. Vlaakith's palace is carved from the great skull of the dead deity upon which the city stands, dominating the skyline. It is a none-too-subtle reminder to her subjects that Vlaakith is always watching.

CHAPTER 6

Monsters of the Planes

Solemn spirits haunt the gloomy trails of the Shadowfell, sadistic demons prowl the dungeons of the Abyss, and cruel devils wander the twisted caverns of the Nine Hells. From the forests of the Feywild to the citadels of the Astral Sea dwell creatures so terrible and so great that the mortal world would quake at their power.

This chapter introduces new monsters native to the planes.

| MONSTER | LEVEL | ROLE |
|---|---|---|
| Bladeling Spiker | 6 | Soldier |
| Canoloth (Demon) | 7 | Soldier |
| Bladeling Razorguard | 8 | Artillery |
| Pain Devil | 8 | Soldier |
| Korred Cudgeleer | 8 | Soldier |
| Bladeling Ironmage | 10 | Elite Controller |
| Korred Dancecaller | 10 | Controller (Leader) |
| Pain Devil Captain | 11 | Controller (Leader) |
| Shadow Demon | 12 | Elite Lurker |
| Canoloth Harrier (Demon) | 13 | Minion |
| Chasme (Demon) | 14 | Skirmisher |
| Solamith (Demon) | 15 | Artillery |
| Dark Acolyte of Graz'zt | 15 | Minion |
| Six-Fingered Slayer | 15 | Lurker |
| Air Archon Zephyrhaunt | 16 | Lurker |
| Howling Blade | 16 | Skirmisher (Leader) |
| Keeper | 17 | Lurker |
| Air Archon Tempestblade | 18 | Skirmisher |
| Barbed Devil | 18 | Skirmisher |
| Barbed Devil Enforcer | 18 | Soldier |
| Raavasta Observer | 19 | Lurker |
| Aspect of Dispater | 20 | Elite Controller (Leader) |
| Chosen of Graz'zt | 22 | Elite Controller |
| Storm Devil | 23 | Artillery |
| Raavasta Conniver | 23 | Elite Controller |
| Astral Dreadnought | 24 | Solo Brute |
| Aspect of Graz'zt | 24 | Elite Skirmisher |
| Baphomet (Demon) | 28 | Solo Brute |
| Brazen Devil | 28 | Soldier |
| Dispater (Devil) | 28 | Solo Controller |
| Graz'zt (Demon) | 32 | Solo Skirmisher |

STEVE ELLIS

ARCHON, AIR

Air archons are elemental warriors created by the primordials to wage war against the gods and their servants.

| Air Archon Zephyrhaunt | Level 16 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (air) | XP 1,400 |
| Initiative +18 Senses Perception +12 | |
| HP 122; Bloodied 61 | |
| AC 30; Fortitude 28, Reflex 29, Will 27 | |
| Immune disease, poison; Resist 15 lightning | |
| Speed fly 8 (hover) | |
| ⨺ Spiked Chain (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning, Weapon | |
| Reach 2; +22 vs. AC; 2d4 + 5 damage plus 2d6 lightning damage, and the target is pulled 1 square. | |
| ⨳ Cyclone Fling (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) | |
| Close burst 1; +19 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 8 damage, and the target is pushed 3 squares and knocked prone. | |
| Whirlwind Escape (move; at-will) ✦ Teleportation | |
| Adjacent creatures are pushed 1 square, and the archon zephyrhaunt teleports 8 squares. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial | |
| Skills Stealth +19 | |
| Str 16 (+11) Dex 23 (+14) Wis 18 (+12) | |
| Con 20 (+13) Int 15 (+10) Cha 14 (+10) | |
| Equipment plate armor, spiked chain | |

Air Archon Zephyrhaunt Tactics

A zephyrhaunt surges forth and targets as many enemies as possible with cyclone fling. While waiting for this power to recharge, it attacks with its spiked chain, unleashing a barrage of attacks before using whirlwind escape to briefly retreat.

| Air Archon Tempestblade | Level 18 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (air) | XP 2,000 |
| Initiative +18 Senses Perception +14 | |
| Billowing Winds (while bloodied) aura 3; while in the aura, enemies without the air keyword are deafened and take a –2 penalty to melee attack rolls and ranged attack rolls. | |
| HP 174; Bloodied 87 | |
| AC 32; Fortitude 31, Reflex 32, Will 30 | |
| Immune disease, poison; Resist 15 lightning | |
| Speed fly 8 (hover) | |
| ⨺ Longsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning, Weapon | |
| +23 vs. AC; 1d8 + 3 damage plus 2d6 lightning damage, and the target is pushed 1 square. | |
| ⨽ Bonds of Wind (standard; encounter) ✦ Lightning, Weapon | |
| Requires longsword; +23 vs. AC; 4d8 + 10 lightning damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends). Hit or Miss: Once per round on this creature's turn, it can use a minor action to slide the target 1 square (save ends). | |
| Tempest Dash | |
| If the tempestblade moves 4 squares or more from its previous location on its turn, it gains a +2 bonus to AC, and its melee attacks deal an extra 1d8 lightning damage. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial | |
| Str 18 (+13) Dex 25 (+16) Wis 20 (+14) | |
| Con 22 (+15) Int 17 (+12) Cha 15 (+11) | |
| Equipment plate armor, longsword | |

Air Archon Tempestblade Tactics

A tempestblade uses hit-and-run tactics, striking and then flying away to harry other foes. It tries to hit a powerful enemy with bonds of wind, using the slide effect to maneuver the adversary into a flanked position.

Air Archon Lore

DC 20: Zephyrhaunts are elemental assassins, and tempestblades serve as the vanguard in battles.

DC 25: Zephyrhaunts transform into raging cyclones that fling enemies away. Screaming winds protect tempestblades by turning aside weapons and projectiles.

Encounter Groups

Air archons fight alongside other elemental creatures, even those of different elements.

Level 20 Encounter (XP 12,000)

- ✦ 2 air archon zephyrhaunts (level 16 lurker)
- ✦ 2 air archon tempestblades (level 18 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 ice archon frostshaper (level 20 controller)
- ✦ 2 red slaads (level 15 soldier)

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

ASTRAL DREADNOUGHT

Astral dreadnoughts swim fearlessly through the Astral Sea in search of prey. A dreadnought consumes its quarry alive, attempting to fill the emptiness of its existence with the souls of others.

| Astral Dreadnought | Level 24 Solo Brute |
|---|---|
| Gargantuan immortal magical beast | XP 30,250 |
| Initiative +18 | Senses Perception +19; darkvision |
| Frightful Presence (Fear) aura 3; enemies in the aura take a -2 penalty to attack rolls. | |
| HP 1,135; Bloodied 567 | |
| AC 38; Fortitude 38, Reflex 35, Will 38 | |
| Immune fear; Resist 30 variable (3/encounter; see Monster Manual, page 282); see also swallow | |
| Saving Throws +5 | |
| Speed fly 12 (hover) | |
| Action Points 2 | |
| ⊕ Pincer Claw (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 3; +27 vs. AC; 2d6 + 13 damage, and the target is grabbed (until escape). An astral dreadnought can grab up to two creatures at a time, one in each claw. The astral dreadnought cannot use this attack if it has two creatures grabbed. | |
| ⸸ Twin Pincer Claw (standard; at-will) | |
| The astral dreadnought makes two pincer attacks. The astral dreadnought cannot use this attack if it has a creature grabbed. | |
| ⸸ Pincer Crush (standard; at-will) | |
| Targets creatures grabbed by the astral dreadnought; +25 vs. Fortitude; 2d12 + 13 damage. | |
| ⸸ Swallow (standard; at-will) | |
| Targets a bloodied Large or smaller creature that the astral dreadnought has grabbed; +25 vs. Fortitude; the target is swallowed. The target enters a demiplane that is 8 squares wide, 8 squares long, and 2 squares tall. The swallowed creature arrives in a square of the dreadnought's choosing. A hovering eyeball occupies the center 4 squares of the demiplane. | |
| Creatures in the demiplane can attack the eye. It shares the current hit points, defenses, immunities, resistances, and saving throws as the astral dreadnought, and it is also insubstantial. The eye can't be knocked prone or teleported, and it is immune to forced movement. Creatures in the demiplane are not affected by the dreadnought's aura. | |
| Any damage or effects the eye takes are also applied to the astral dreadnought. When an astral dreadnought dies, the swallowed creatures are expelled into the space the creature formerly occupied. | |
| ✧ Chained God's Gaze (minor; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Psychic | |

Astral Dreadnought Tactics

The astral dreadnought relies on its aura to strike fear into the hearts of its enemies. While foes suffer the effect of its gaze, the monster snaps up weak and undefended creatures in its pincer claws, attempting to damage them enough to stuff them into its yawning maw.

Astral Dreadnought Lore

DC 24: Astral dreadnoughts were once angels of the Chained God, but their master's madness corrupted them. They became hideous abominations of mindless, destructive hunger.

DC 29: The dreadnought's star-filled gaze contains a fragment of the Chained God's evil. Those who meet its gaze glimpse utter madness, and the experience can leave a person's mind reeling.

Any creature the astral dreadnought swallows becomes trapped in a demiplane. Only the death of the astral dreadnought can free those it has trapped in this extradimensional space.

DC 31: Cultists and scholars alike have speculated that if one were to harvest the eyes of enough astral dreadnoughts, he or she might use the combined power to free the Chained God.

BLADELING

Spikes and blades protude from a bladeling's skin, hence its name.

The first bladelings were created by the god Bane as soldiers, and while some bladelings continue to serve their creator in his astral dominion of Chernoggar, others have escaped the war god's yoke to lead fiercely independent lives.

Bladeling Spiker Tactics

A bladeling spiker charges eagerly into battle, using its falchion to hack through foes. The spiker uses natural spikes once per round, or twice if it doesn't move. Only when surrounded by multiple foes does the bladeling spiker use razor storm.

Bladeling Lore

A character knows the following information with a successful Nature check.

DC 10: Bladelings are fierce warriors who respect power. Many bladelings still roam the battlefields of Chernoggar, but some have managed to escape to find homes elsewhere within the planes.

DC 15: A bladeling's body is a living weapon. Although these warriors rely on weapons and armor in battle, they can also unleash the spikes and the blades on their bodies. All bladelings can loose their spikes in a barrage around them, but only a few can shoot the spikes out to great distances.

DC 20: Long ago, Bane plucked a race of mortals from the world and used it to fashion a new race of soldiers. He bestowed the race with fighting skills and natural weaponry, yet he could not quash the independence that led some bladelings to rebel against him.

Bladeling Ironmage Tactics

Bladeling ironmages take charge in battle, supporting allies by launching shrapnel bursts into the enemies' midst and hurling razor darts. Even if an ironmage's foes manage to close in, the ironmage can respond with improved razor storm and its painful cloud of blades aura.

Encounter Groups

Bladelings reside throughout the planes and are often encountered in Sigil, Gloomwrought, and the wilds of the Elemental Chaos. Bladelings often serve as mercenaries, fighting for whoever meets their price.

Level 11 Encounter (XP 3,000)

- 1 bladeling ironmage (level 10 elite controller)

BAPHOMET

Baphomet, also known as the Horned King, embodies the destructive force of rage and the savage aspects of nature. His cult is a powerful force within minotaur society, helping to steer the race toward its evil, bestial side. His creed is to embrace the beast within, so worshipers often include mercenaries, pirates, and savage tribes of barbarians.

Baphomet is an aggressive, boastful demon with delusions of grandeur that infect his worshipers with blinding zealotry. He is violent and easily angered. Although he can be cunning, he prefers to act on impulse. Creatures who appease Baphomet's whims are allowed to live, while those who express doubts are crushed beneath his hooves.

Baphomet sometimes dons an iron crown with the severed heads of slain enemies impaled on its sharp tines. He wears sparse armor and carries an enormous greataxe called Heartcleaver.

Baphomet Lore

DC 19: Baphomet is called the Horned King, the Trampler, the Prince of Beasts, and the Minotaur Lord. Minotaurs and those who worship the savage aspects of nature revere him.

DC 28: Baphomet's enmity is directed at two great enemies: the demon prince Yeenoghu and the goddess Melora. Baphomet, like Yeenoghu, believes he is best suited to rule the natural world. Baphomet also bears a grudge against Graz'zt, who once imprisoned him.

DC 33: Baphomet rules a layer of the Abyss called the Endless Maze, which is a vast labyrinth of stone. Goristro demons and savage minotaurs stalk the Endless Maze, hunting anyone who stumbles into their lord's domain.

Baphomet Level 28 Solo Brute
Huge elemental humanoid (demon) XP 65,000

Initiative +23 Senses Perception +27; darkvision

⨺ Heartcleaver (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 3; +32 vs. AC; 3d12 + 10 damage (crit 9d12 + 46), and the target takes a -2 penalty to AC (save ends).

⨺ Goring Horns (standard; at-will)
Reach 2; +31 vs. AC; 4d8 + 10 damage, and the target slides 2 squares. When Baphomet makes this attack as part of a charge, the target is also knocked prone.

⨺ Rampage (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Baphomet makes a heartcleaver attack against one target and a goring horns attack against a different target.

✧ Bellow (immediate reaction, when Baphomet is damaged by an attack; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Fear, Thunder
Close burst 6; +29 vs. Will; 7d8 + 6 thunder damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

✧ Bloodied Fury (standard; usable only while bloodied; at-will)
Close burst 2; +29 vs. Fortitude; 4d8 + 10 damage, and the target is pushed 3 squares and knocked prone.

Abyssal Maze (minor; at-will) ✦ Illusion
Area wall 4 within 10 squares; the illusory wall occupies 4 contiguous squares and lasts until the end of the encounter. The wall cannot be destroyed or climbed. If Baphomet creates more than one wall, no part of the walls can be adjacent.
The wall blocks movement and line of sight for enemies. Baphomet and his allies can move, see, and attack through the wall without penalty. If Baphomet or an ally moves into space within the wall that is adjacent to an enemy, that enemy can ignore the effects of that wall.

Ferocity (when reduced to 0 hit points)
Baphomet makes a bloodied fury attack.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal, Common
Skills Athletics +29, Intimidate +25, Nature +27

Con 27 (+22) Int 20 (+19) Cha 22 (+20)
Equipment Heartcleaver (+6 vicious greataxe)

Baphomet Tactics

Baphomet revels in melee combat, charging boldly into battle. He uses bellow the first time he is hit while at least three enemies are within range. If his foes are beyond melee range, Baphomet uses abyssal maze to split them up and sow confusion. Once he's in melee, Baphomet uses abyssal maze to keep enemies from retreating. He directs his Heartcleaver attacks against heavily armored foes and his goring horns attacks against less armored enemies. Once bloodied, Baphomet tosses aside his weapon and uses bloodied fury each round until his opponents are dead or he is destroyed.

Howling Blade

Howling blades are religious zealots that worship Baphomet and engage in ritualistic and profane activities that encourage chaos and savagery.

| Howling Blade | Level 16 Skirmisher (Leader) |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid, human | XP 1,400 |

| +21 vs. AC; 2d8 + 7 damage, and the target slides 1 square. | |
| ⨺ Mobile Charge (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Requires longsword; the howling blade makes a charge attack: +22 vs. AC; 1d8 + 9 damage, and the howling blade shifts 3 squares. | |
| ⨺ Strike of the Horned King (standard; usable only while bloodied; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Requires longsword; +21 vs. AC; 3d8 + 7 damage. | |
| Rage of Beasts (minor; usable only while bloodied; encounter) | |
| The howling blade gains 15 temporary hit points and 1 action point. | |
| Blood for Baphomet (minor; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) | |
| An ally in a flank with the howling blade makes a melee basic attack against the flanked creature as a free action. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal, Common |
| Skills Athletics +15, Bluff +18, Nature +17 | |
| Str 14 (+10) | Dex 25 (+15) Wis 18 (+12) |
| Con 15 (+10) | Int 12 (+9) Cha 20 (+13) |
| Equipment hide armor, longsword | |

Howling Blade Tactics

A howling blade uses mobile charge at the start of combat and then resorts to longsword attacks, fighting with utter devotion to the Horned King and using its blood for Baphomet power whenever it can. Once bloodied, it uses its rage of beasts and strike of the Horned King powers.

Howling Blade Lore

DC 20: Minotaur cabalists lead cults of Baphomet in minotaur cities, though worship of the Horned King has spread into rural areas where poor, depraved humanoids live. Led by a cult called the Temple of Ire, the followers conduct raids on the patrols and garrisons of local authorities.

DC 25: Howling blades are the spiritual leaders of the Temple of Ire. They worship Baphomet and perform rituals that climax with the decapitation of a bull. Witnesses have reported that the severed head speaks in the whispered voice of Baphomet.

Encounter Groups

Baphomet's cults include both minotaurs and humanoid cultists.

Level 14 Encounter (XP 4,800)
- ✦ 2 howling blades (level 16 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 savage minotaur (level 16 brute)
- ✦ 8 human lackeys (level 7 minion)

Compared to other demon lords, Baphomet is relatively weak. He is rarely found alone and prefers the company of savage minotaurs and goristro demons.

Level 30 Encounter (XP 94,000)
- ✦ Baphomet (level 28 solo brute)
- ✦ 1 marilith demon (level 24 elite skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 goristro demons (level 19 elite brute)

DEMON

The corrupted depths of the Abyss contain a wide variety of demons, which live only to destroy.

Canoloth

The canoloth is the hunting hound of the Abyss. Some canoloths are kept as profane pets, and others roam the Elemental Chaos in feral packs, leaving carnage in their wake.

Canoloth Tactics

A canoloth moves to within 4 squares of its enemies and employs tongue lash. If the enemy is dazed by the attack, the canoloth uses tongue seize to pull that foe within easy reach of its jaws. The creature also uses canoloth yowl to weaken the defenses of enemies it's unable to hit or when it is surrounded by foes.

| Canoloth Harrier | Level 13 Minion |

| Str 18 (+10) | Dex 14 (+8) Wis 12 (+7) |
| Con 18 (+10) | Int 5 (+3) Cha 6 (+4) |

Canoloth Harrier Tactics

Canoloth harriers employ similar tactics to those of canoloths. The only difference is that the canoloth harriers like to gang up on one target.

Canoloth Lore

DC 16: Canoloths hunger for flesh, and like evistros, they are drawn to form hunting packs. They are tolerant of other abyssal denizens and often accompany a variety of demonic creatures.

DAVE ALLSOP

DC 21: Despite its lack of eyes, a canoloth has senses to detect and track prey.

Encounter Groups

Mezzodemons frequently train canoloths as savage pets. They even sell canoloths to those willing to buy such monsters. A canoloth's pack instinct makes it willing to work with a variety of creatures.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,500)
- 2 canoloth demons (level 7 soldier)
- 1 howling hag (level 7 controller)
- 2 crimson acolytes (level 7 skirmisher)

Level 12 Encounter (XP 3,400)
- 2 mezzodemons (level 11 soldier)
- 5 canoloth harriers (level 13 minion)
- 1 spirit devourer (level 11 elite controller)

Chasme

Clever, swift, and craven, chasmes are insectlike demons that slake their unending thirst for blood and pain by tormenting the weak.

| Chasme | Level 14 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Large elemental magical beast (demon) | XP 1,000 |
| Initiative +16 Senses Perception +7 | |

| AC 29; Fortitude 26, Reflex 29, Will 24 | |
| Resist 10 variable (2/encounter; see "Resist," Monster Manual, page 282) | |
| Speed 6, climb 6 (spider climb), fly 10 | |
| ⊕ Gore (standard; at-will) | |
| +19 vs. AC; 2d6 + 7 damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends), or ongoing 10 damage if the target already has ongoing 5 damage (save ends). | |
| ↓ Mobile Melee Attack (standard; at-will) | |
| A chasme can move up to half its speed and make one melee basic attack at any point during that movement. The chasme doesn't provoke opportunity attacks when moving away from the target of its attack. | |
| ✧ Drone (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Sleep | |
| Close burst 2; targets creatures without the demon keyword; +17 vs. Will; the target is dazed (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is unconscious (save ends). | |
| Chasme Mobility | |
| The chasme gains a +2 bonus to AC against opportunity attacks provoked by movement. | |
| Combat Advantage | |
| The chasme deals an extra 1d6 damage against any target it has combat advantage against. This damage increases to 2d6 against unconscious foes. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal | |
| Skills Bluff +14, Insight +12, Intimidate +14, Stealth +19 | |
| Str 19 (+11) Dex 24 (+14) Wis 10 (+7) | |
| Con 18 (+11) Int 11 (+7) Cha 14 (+9) | |

Chasme Tactics

A chasme relies on speed and the advantage of flight to plague its enemies while avoiding harm. The creature begins combat with drone and then focuses on slaying unconscious enemies. The chasme darts from opponent to opponent, attempting to inflict ongoing damage on multiple adversaries. The chasme reserves its recharged use of drone for covering its retreat or sealing victory.

Chasme Lore

DC 18: A chasme's cunning and sense of self-preservation provide it with a subtlety unusual in demons. Although its goal is ruin, mayhem, and pain, it takes the time to gather power and knowledge. Usually through lies, threats, and torture, it coerces other beings into helping it.

DC 23: Chasmes spontaneously emerge from the corpses of creatures slain in the Abyss. Like fiendish maggots, young chasmes crawl from the bodies and begin feeding off the corruption that saturates the Abyss. Other demons, especially those that fly, often kill and eat any chasme larvae they happen upon. The few young chasmes that possess the wiles to survive grow into adult specimens within a month.

Encounter Groups

Chasmes prefer strong, stupid allies, so they often accompany or manipulate brutish demons. If service to a mightier demon allows a chasme to spread mayhem, it seizes the opportunity.

Level 14 Encounter (XP 5,200)
- 2 chasme demons (level 14 skirmisher)
- 2 night hags (level 14 lurker)
- 2 mezzodemons (level 11 soldier)

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,000)
- 2 chasme demons (level 14 skirmisher)
- 1 demonweb terror (level 14 elite controller)
- 2 drider fanglords (level 14 brute)

Shadow Demon

Born of the unadulterated corruption of the Abyss, a shadow demon is a fiend of consuming darkness. These lurking demons act as spies, scouts, and assassins.

| Shadow Demon | Level 12 Elite Lurker |

Shadow Demon Tactics

A shadow demon tries to ambush foes. If it gains surprise, it uses void rake and then spends an action point to use abyssal void. The shadow demon takes advantage of phasing to avoid combat with multiple enemies. It often delays until it sees an opportunity to gain combat advantage. Once bloodied, the shadow demon uses abyssal void again, retreating if severely wounded.

Shadow Demon Lore

DC 16: Despite its resemblance to a wraith, a shadow demon is a living spawn of the Abyss. Its powers utilize the necrotic energy resulting from the demonic connection to oblivion and entropy.

DC 21: Shadow demons are like devils in that they lie and scheme to drive mortals toward evil. However, shadow demons aim to proliferate death and destruction, not to acquire souls and power. A shadow demon's primary goal is always the annihilation of life.

Encounter Groups

Shadow demons interact with other demons only when they share a common goal. This usually occurs at the behest of a powerful leader, such as a demon lord. Shadow demons work with undead and other creatures associated with death, such as corrupt shadar-kai, servants of nightwalkers, and Orcus's deathpriests.

Level 13 Encounter (XP 3,800)
- ✦ 1 shadow demon (level 12 elite lurker)
- ✦ 1 deathpriest of Orcus (level 9 controller)
- ✦ 5 battle wights (level 9 soldier)

Level 13 Encounter (XP 3,900)
- ✦ 1 shadow demon (level 12 elite lurker)
- ✦ 2 minotaur warriors (level 10 soldier)
- ✦ 1 minotaur cabalist (level 13 controller)
- ✦ 1 viscera devourer (level 12 soldier)

Solamith

A corpulent creature of all-consuming hunger, the solamith attacks by tearing off chunks of itself and hurling the wads of necrotized, exploding tissue at enemies. Those it slays, it devours to replenish its spent flesh.

| Solamith | Level 15 Artillery |
|---|---|

| Str 20 (+12) Dex 23 (+13) Wis 13 (+8) | |
| Con 19 (+11) Int 4 (+4) Cha 8 (+6) | |

Solamith Tactics

Despite its imposing bulk, a solamith is a soft target that must rely on protection from its allies. It moves around the battlefield with surprising speed, hurling soulfire. It avoids melee and uses soulfire retort to keep adversaries away.

Solamith Lore

DC 18: A solamith can peel away parts of its body. The creature hurls the chunks of flesh, which explode in bursts of necrotic energy and fire. When a battle ends, the solamith gorges on the fallen to replenish its cannibalized flesh. Its favorite food is the flesh of mortal humanoids.

DC 23: When eating, a solamith tears its victims apart and then slowly consumes the flesh, savoring each morsel. When the creature finishes, a tortured face appears under the skin of the demon's belly—a spiritual echo of the dead creature's soul.

DAVE ALLSOP

Encounter Groups

Solamiths are fierce tormenters that press weaker creatures into service. They sometimes work with demons of equal or greater strength, if only to ensure their own safety. Creatures that can summon and control demons use solamiths as gatekeepers and artillery.

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,000)
- ✦ 1 solamith demon (level 15 artillery)
- ✦ 2 red slaads (level 15 soldier)
- ✦ 3 gray slaads (level 13 skirmisher)

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,000)

DEVIL

As punishment for betraying their divine masters, devils are bound to the Nine Hells. Yet devils sometimes escape into the world. They often serve powerful, evil mortals, though such service is dangerous and usually comes at a price.

Barbed Devil

Barbed devils are fierce warriors entrusted with the defense of infernal fortresses or assigned to patrol the lower hells in search of spies and intruders. When summoned to the world, they serve as elite bodyguards or champions for mortal tyrants.

Top to bottom: Brazen devil and barbed devil

FRANZ VOHWINKEL

Barbed Devil Enforcer Tactics

A barbed devil enforcer begins combat with hurl flame. The creature then teleports into its foes' midst and makes double claw attacks while subjecting them to its grasping barbs aura. If a creature retreats, the barbed devil enforcer pursues, teleporting or moving after it.

Barbed Devil Lore

DC 20: Barbed devils (known as hamatulas) are named for the prickly spines that cover their bodies. They disdain weapons and prefer to attack with their spikes and claws.

DC 25: Barbed devils serve as guards in the citadels and vaults of the middle and lower hells. They are common in Phlegethos, Malbolge, and Maladomini, where they patrol the vast, winding tunnels.

Encounter Groups

Barbed devils are proud and love to fight. They serve masters who value their power.

Level 18 Encounter (10,000 XP)
- ✦ 2 barbed devils (level 18 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 barbed devil enforcer (level 18 soldier)
- ✦ 2 cambion hellfire magi (level 18 artillery)

Level 19 Encounter (11,200 XP)
- ✦ 2 barbed devils (level 18 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 bone devil (level 17 controller)
- ✦ 2 ice devils (level 20 soldier)

Brazen Devil

In the fiery depths of Nessus lies Malsheem, the infernal fortress of Asmodeus. This is the domain of the brazen devils, so named because they are permanently encased in hellforged brass armor. The devils are stalwart defenders and ferocious combatants, swarming anyone who dares trespass into their territory.

Brazen Devil Lore

DC 28: The Malsheem Guard, a force of 1,001 brazen devils, consists of the most loyal and ferocious devils. The Guard protects Asmodeus's palace and serves as an elite bodyguard. When a member of the Malsheem Guard dies, a new brazen devil is soon elevated in its place.

Unlike pit fiends, brazen devils lack ambition and crave only to serve their evil lord.

DC 33: Brazen devils are created from the worthiest and most devoted war devils, bone devils, and barbed devils. In a lengthy and agonizing ritual, the creatures are cut apart and fitted into hellforged brass armor. The armor is irremovable and remains attached to the devil for the rest of its existence.

Brazen Devil Level 28 Soldier
Large immortal humanoid (devil) XP 13,000

Initiative +20 Senses Perception +26; darkvision

↯ Furious Assault (standard; encounter) ✦ Teleportation, Weapon
+33 vs. Fortitude; 4d12 + 10 damage, and the target is pushed 3 squares. In addition, the brazen devil teleports into a space adjacent to the target after the target is pushed.

↯ Fiendish Opportunist (immediate reaction, when an enemy is pushed, pulled, or slid into a square adjacent to the brazen devil; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+33 vs. Fortitude; 1d12 + 9 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Infernal Assault (move; encounter) ✦ Teleportation
The brazen devil teleports 20 squares and gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls until the beginning of its next turn. The brazen devil can teleport into occupied squares, sliding any creatures occupying those squares into the nearest unoccupied squares.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Skills Intimidate +25

| Con 25 (+21) | Int 23 (+20) | Cha 22 (+20) |

Equipment hellforged plate armor (destroyed if the brazen devil is slain), halberd

Brazen Devil Tactics

A brazen devil uses furious assault to push its enemy adjacent to another brazen devil in order to trigger the other devil's fiendish opportunist power. The devils spread out to cover a large area with cloying hellfire. A brazen devil withholds infernal assault for an opportunity to keep its enemies from reuniting or retreating.

Encounter Groups

Asmodeus trusts no one, but what trust he has, he places in his palace guards. He uses brazen devils for the most sensitive or important tasks.

Level 28 Encounter (68,900 XP)
- ✦ 2 brazen devils (level 28 soldier)
- ✦ 1 pit fiend devil (level 26 elite soldier)
- ✦ 6 war devils (level 22 brute)

Level 30 Encounter (94,900 XP)
- ✦ 3 brazen devils (level 28 soldier)
- ✦ 1 ancient green dragon (level 27 solo controller)

Pain Devil

Pain devils are mercenaries of the Nine Hells that serve any master who lets them torture the weak and helpless. Pain devils are eager combatants, relishing the chance to crush foes beneath their scourges.

Pain Devil Level 8 Soldier
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 350

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +12; darkvision
Aura of Torment aura 2; a creature without the devil keyword that starts its turn in the aura takes 2 damage.
HP 86; Bloodied 43

Wave of Pain (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Weapon
Close burst 2; targets enemies; +13 vs. AC; 3d6 + 5 damage, and the target is slowed until the end of the pain devil's next turn.

Sadism
When the pain devil scores a critical hit or its attack renders an enemy bloodied, it gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls and saving throws until the end of its next turn.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Skills Insight +12, Intimidate +10
Str 20 (+9) Dex 15 (+6) Wis 17 (+7)
Con 14 (+6) Int 14 (+6) Cha 12 (+5)
Equipment scourge

Pain Devil Tactics

The devils target nimble enemies, using the debilitating effect of their scourges to keep the creatures within reach. Pain devils take positions where they can affect the most creatures with aura of torment. Pain devils withhold wave of pain until they have two or more enemies in the area, or until they gain the attack bonus from sadism.

Pain Devil Lore

DC 15: Pain devils are relatively weak devils, but they are cruel and bloodthirsty foes. A pain devil's scourge causes agony that briefly cripples its target.

DC 20: Pain devils are skillful and cruel torturers. They are common in the upper hells, especially Dis and Minauros. Sadistic mortals summon pain devils to the world to serve as mercenaries.

Pain Devil Captain Level 11 Controller (Leader)
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 600

Initiative +7 Senses Perception +13; darkvision
Aura of Torment aura 2; a creature without the devil keyword that starts its turn in the aura takes 2 damage.
HP 110; Bloodied 55

Resist 10 fire
Speed 5

Scourge (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +16 vs. AC; 2d8 + 5 damage, and the target is weakened until the end of the pain devil captain's next turn.

Ignite Weaponry (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Fire
Close burst 10; allies in the burst deal an extra 5 fire damage on attacks with the weapon keyword until the end of the pain devil captain's next turn.

Supreme Sadism
When the pain devil captain scores a critical hit or its attack renders an enemy bloodied, it and all allies within 5 squares of the pain devil captain gain 10 temporary hit points.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Skills Insight +13, Intimidate +11
Str 20 (+10) Dex 15 (+7) Wis 17 (+8)
Con 14 (+7) Int 14 (+7) Cha 12 (+6)
Equipment scourge

Pain Devil Captain Tactics

The pain devil captain wades into battle and uses ignite weaponry as often as it can, but otherwise tries to pound enemies with its scourge in the hope of triggering its supreme sadism.

Encounter Groups

Pain devils sell their services outside of the Nine Hells, and they can be found in the company of various evil creatures.

Level 7 Encounter (1,500 XP)
- ✦ 2 pain devils (level 8 soldier)
- ✦ 2 spined devils (level 6 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 tiefling darkblade (level 7 lurker)

Level 9 Encounter (2,300 XP)
- ✦ 2 pain devils (level 8 soldier)
- ✦ 1 pain devil captain (level 10 controller)
- ✦ 2 cambion hellswords (level 8 brute)

Storm Devil

Storm devils rain down destruction from above. They serve as artillery in the armies of the lower hells, especially in Maladomini and Nessus.

| Storm Devil | | Level 23 Artillery |
|---|---|---|
| Medium immortal humanoid (devil) | | XP 5,100 |
| Initiative +18 | Senses Perception +17; darkvision | |

| Infernal Thunderclap (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Lightning, Thunder | | |
| Area burst 2 within 20; +26 vs. Fortitude; 2d10 + 6 lightning and thunder damage, and the target is pushed 3 squares from the origin square and dazed until the end of its next turn. | | |
| Cyclone (free, when first bloodied; encounter) | | |
| The storm devil shifts 3 squares, and any Medium or smaller enemy adjacent to the storm devil at the start of the move is knocked prone. | | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Supernal | |
| Skills Stealth +23 | | |
| Str 20 (+16) | Dex 25 (+18) | Wis 22 (+17) |
| Con 25 (+18) | Int 16 (+14) | Cha 17 (+14) |
| Equipment trident | | |

Storm Devil Tactics

Storm devils begin battle by flying to a perch that provides a view of the battlefield. From there, they blast foes with infernal thunderclap. While they wait for that power to recharge, they use lightning fork.

Storm devils are clumsy fliers, so they avoid fighting from the air. They land before attacking, and they fly only to find a new perch from which to blast foes.

Storm Devil Lore

DC 25: Storm devils are the artillery of the Nine Hells. They patrol the citadels of the lower hells, and they serve as bodyguards to pit fiends. Their lightning and thunder powers are feared by weaker devils because few have resistances to those energy types.

DC 30: Storm devils can be unruly and have little patience for the regimentation of infernal ranks. They sometimes disobey orders or abandon their posts for an opportunity to score a quick kill or to torment weaker devils.

Encounter Groups

Storm devils are known to harass vessels passing through the Astral Sea. They also provide artillery support to hosts of other devils as well as mortals who summon them and bind them to service.

Level 23 Encounter (25,550 XP)
- ✦ 2 storm devils (level 23 artillery)
- ✦ 1 war devil (level 22 brute)
- ✦ 4 ice devils (level 20 soldier)

WARREN MAHY

DISPATER

A MASTER OF STRATEGY AND INTRIGUE, Dispater is the lord of Dis, the second hell. He is known as the Iron Duke and as the Father of Strife, and he governs with an iron fist wrapped in a velvet glove.

Clever and cautious, Dispater is rarely caught off guard. He is usually urbane and calm, speaking with courtesy and reason. However, when his enemies defy him, his eyes flash red with fury, and his words scour foes with unholy power.

Dispater Level 28 Solo Controller (Leader)
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 65,000

Initiative +20 Senses Perception +21; darkvision
HP 1,295; Bloodied 647
AC 45; Fortitude 41, Reflex 43, Will 42
Resist 30 fire
Saving Throws +5
Speed 6, teleport 10
Action Points 2

⊕ Smiting Rod (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Requires rod of Dispater; +34 vs. AC; 2d8 + 10 damage (crit 8d8+10), and the target is pushed 2 squares and dazed (save ends).

↯ Blasphemous Reply (immediate reaction, when hit by a melee attack; at-will) ✦ Thunder
Targets the attacker; +32 vs. Will; 3d8 + 10 thunder damage, and the target is pushed 1 square.

↣ Scathing Rod (standard; at-will) ✦ Acid, Implement
Requires rod of Dispater; ranged 20; +32 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 10 acid damage, and the target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of Dispater's next turn.

↣ Inveigle (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Ranged 20; +32 vs. Will; 2d8 + 10 psychic damage, and the target slides 3 squares and is dominated (save ends). Aftereffect: The target is dazed until the end of its next turn.

✧ Gates of Dis (minor; at-will) ✦ Conjuration, Fire
Area wall 10 within 20 squares. Dispater conjures a lattice of scalding iron that lasts until the start of his next turn. The wall blocks movement and line of effect, but it does not block line of sight. Creatures that end their turn adjacent to the wall take 10 fire damage. Creatures pulled, pushed, or slid adjacent to the wall take 20 fire damage. The wall is 4 squares high and cannot be destroyed.

Diabolic Awe (free 1/round, when an enemy within 10 squares becomes bloodied or takes a critical hit; at-will) ✦ Fear, Healing
The enemy is pushed 3 squares away from Dispater and is dazed until the end of Dispater's next turn. Creatures with the devil keyword within 10 squares of Dispater regain 20 hit points.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Skills Arcana +29, Bluff +28, History +29, Insight +26, Religion +29
Str 22 (+20) Dex 23 (+20) Wis 24 (+21)
Con 27 (+22) Int 30 (+24) Cha 29 (+23)
Equipment scarlet robe, rod of Dispater (see below)

DISPATER'S TACTICS

Dispater chooses his fights carefully, and he avoids confronting dangerous enemies until he has secured every advantage. He keeps lesser devils on hand, including legion devils, war devils, and even a few pit fiends. Dispater sends his followers into battle first so he can gauge the strength of his foes.

If he does fight, Dispater uses gates of Dis to divide his enemies while he tries to dominate the most powerful foe with inveigle. He remains at range, using scathing rod while waiting for inveigle to recharge. If closely pressed in melee, he uses an action point to make two smiting rod attacks and then teleports away. He does not hesitate to flee if a fight turns against him.

Rod of Dispater Level 28
A symbol of Dispater's authority, this adamantine rod is shaped like two serpents entwined together, and it grants the power to scour foes with acid.

Implement (Rod) 2,125,000 gp
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +6d8
Property: The rod functions as a +6 heavy mace as well as an implement.
Power (At-Will): Free Action. Use this power when you hit with a melee attack using the rod. The target is pushed 2 squares and dazed (save ends).
Power (At-Will ✦ Acid): Standard Action. Ranged 20; Intelligence vs. Reflex; 2d8 + Intelligence modifier acid damage, and the target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

DISPATER LORE

DC 20: Dispater is the lord of Dis, the second hell. Dispater's palace is the infamous Iron Tower, a mighty fortification in the center of the city of Dis. Dispater is renowned for his powers of persuasion.

DC 25: Dispater is cautious, and he often creates aspects of himself. These avatars deal with matters outside of Dis.

DC 28: Dispater does not encourage cults. Instead, he seduces influential mortals with the promise of power. Dispater's agents are often viziers, councilors, or ministers who secretly govern from behind the scenes.

DC 33: A master of Hell's politics, Dispater is closely allied with Mephistopheles, lord of the eighth hell. Both the archdevils share a hatred for Baalzebul, lord of the seventh hell.

Aspect of Dispater

Dispater rarely ventures from his Iron Tower. Instead, he prefers to send an aspect to treat with his peers or tempt mortals who interest him.

Dispater has no connection to his aspect except that he knows where and when one enters the world.

Aspect of Dispater Level 20 Elite Controller (Leader)
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 5,600

+25 vs. AC; 2d8 + 6 damage, and the target is pushed 2 squares and dazed until the end of the aspect of Dispater's next turn.

Lesser Blasphemous Reply (immediate reaction, when hit by a melee attack; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Thunder
Targets the attacker; +24 vs. Will; 3d8 + 7 thunder damage, and the target is pushed 1 square.

Lesser Inveigle (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Ranged 10; +24 vs. Will; 2d6 + 7 psychic damage, and the target slides 2 squares and is dominated until the end of the aspect of Dispater's next turn.

Lesser Gates of Dis (minor; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Conjuration, Fire
Area wall 5 within 20 squares. The aspect of Dispater conjures a lattice of scalding iron that lasts until the start of his next turn. The wall blocks movement and line of effect, but it does not block line of sight. Creatures that end their turn adjacent to the wall or are pulled, pushed, or slid adjacent to the wall take 10 fire damage. The wall is 4 squares high and cannot be destroyed.

Lesser Diabolic Awe (free 1/round, when an enemy within 5 squares becomes bloodied or takes a critical hit; at-will) ✦ Fear, Healing
The enemy is pushed 3 squares away from the aspect of Dispater and is dazed until the end of the aspect's next turn. Creatures with the devil keyword within 5 squares of the aspect of Dispater regain 10 hit points.

Aspect of Dispater Tactics

Dispater's aspect avoids risky fights. It surrounds itself with allies and seeks advantages in combat. The aspect targets enemies with lesser inveigle while using lesser gates of Dis to keep foes at bay. The aspect is patient, and rather than engaging in melee, it stays away from dangerous enemies while waiting for lesser inveigle to recharge.

Aspect of Dispater Lore

DC 25: Aspects of Dispater are summoned or created through rituals, and they often work covertly within a government to sway rulers toward evil.

Encounter Groups

Aspects of Dispater are accompanied by retinues of other devils that can assist in their master's diabolical plans.

Level 22 Encounter (19,200 XP)
- ✦ 1 aspect of Dispater (level 20 elite controller)
- ✦ 2 ice devils (level 20 soldier)
- ✦ 2 cambion hellfire magi (level 18 artillery)

Dispater rarely leaves his layer of the Nine Hells, but he does not shy from confronting enemies intruding in his demesne.

Level 30 Encounter (101,000 XP)
- ✦ Dispater (level 28 solo controller)
- ✦ 2 pit fiend devils (level 26 elite soldier)

Level 30 Encounter (101,400 XP)
- ✦ Dispater (level 28 solo controller)
- ✦ 2 war devils (level 22 brute)
- ✦ 3 storm devils (level 23 artillery)
- ✦ 16 legion devil legionnaires (level 21 minion)

GRAZ'ZT

DEMONS AREN'T SUBTLE, BUT THEN every rule has its exception. Graz'zt is the schemer of the Abyss, and he constantly plots against Demogorgon and Orcus from his realm of Azzagrat. Graz'zt uses seduction, guile, and trickery as his weapons, launching demonic hordes only after his intrigues leave enemies in disarray. Known also as the Dark Prince, Graz'zt appears and acts more human than other demon princes. However, he is capable of atrocities to rival even the most sadistic demons. Graz'zt has black skin, six small horns atop his head, and six digits on each hand and foot.

Graz'zt was once a devil and a trusted advisor to Asmodeus, who charged Graz'zt with invading the Abyss and seizing the evil seed that created it (see "The Birth of the Abyss" sidebar, Monster Manual, page 52). Graz'zt's initial invasion was successful, and he managed to seize three layers of the Abyss. However, pressure from Orcus and Demogorgon stalled Graz'zt's descent toward the heart of evil. Graz'zt eventually rejected his heritage and turned the conquered territory into his own kingdom. Today, he is one of the most powerful demon princes. And whether he truly spurned the Nine Hells or is secretly colluding with Asmodeus is known only to Graz'zt. Regardless, that doesn't preclude a change of allegiances later.

Graz'zt cultivates an atmosphere of indolence and lassitude within his horrid palace. The outward decadence of his court masks the truth, though: The palace is a nexus of schemes that extend throughout the planes and across the centuries.

GRAZ'ZT TACTICS

Graz'zt uses overwhelming domination to make enemies into allies and then sets them up to help flank opponents with him.

One or more characters will likely be dominated through much of the fight against Graz'zt. If your players are amenable, allow a player to retain control of his or her character if the player agrees to fight faithfully on Graz'zt's behalf.

Graz'zt is elusive on the battlefield, moving from flank to flank, teleporting when appropriate. If the PCs are intent on maintaining their distance, then Graz'zt employs unholy blight. If the battle turns against Graz'zt, he willingly flees and leaves his allies to die.

GRAZ'ZT LORE

DC 20: Graz'zt is the Dark Prince, a demonic patron of tyrants and despots. Evil schemers swear obeisance to him.

DC 25: Graz'zt's greatest rival is Demogorgon, and Graz'zt would like nothing better than to destroy the two-headed demon prince and claim the title of "Prince of Demons."

DC 28: Graz'zt rules a three-tiered realm in the Abyss known as Azzagrat. Within the twisted streets of this landscape dwell hordes of demons and deadly elementals.

DC 33: Graz'zt was once an archdevil in the service of Asmodeus. Graz'zt was sent by Asmodeus to retrieve the shard of evil embedded in the heart of the Abyss, and though he did not succeed, Graz'zt did conquer three levels of that plane. He established his own kingdom there, rejecting Asmodeus to instead reign over his newly conquered territory.

DC 35: Graz'zt carries a massive, serrated greatsword called Wave of Sorrow. He wields the sword in one hand, and the blade moves like a wave when he brandishes it. In addition to fighting with the sword, Graz'zt is a master of dominating his enemies, whom he directs to fight on his behalf.

Aspect of Graz'zt

Agents of Graz'zt can perform a ritual that brings an aspect of Graz'zt into the world. The aspect heeds the commands of its summoner, acting as an advisor and bodyguard.

Graz'zt has no connection to this aspect except that he knows where and when one enters the world.

RALPH HORSLEY

Aspect of Graz'zt Tactics

Like the true Dark Prince, the aspect of Graz'zt starts a battle with an attempt to dominate an enemy. The aspect then works in concert with the target of its domination, focusing attacks on the enemies that appear resistant to attacks that target Will defense.

Aspect of Graz'zt Lore

DC 30: Powerful cult leaders can perform a ritual that conjures an aspect of the Dark Prince.

DC 35: An aspect of Graz'zt is nearly as cunning as the true Graz'zt, though it obeys the commands of its summoner rather than engaging in its own plots and schemes.

Chosen of Graz'zt

Graz'zt likes creatures predisposed toward trickery and espionage, and for that reason, he favors lamias. A lamia's ability to change its appearance makes it an effective cult leader—one capable of sowing the seeds of chaos within any society.

The most powerful cult leaders become the Chosen of Graz'zt, privy to the secrets and magic of the Abyss, including the ritual to conjure an aspect of Graz'zt.

Iggwilv, the Sometime Ally of Graz'zt

Known widely as the Witch Queen, the once-human spellcaster Iggwilv has a long history with Graz'zt. Through a clever and audacious series of rituals, Iggwilv imprisoned Graz'zt in the world under her command. The two became lovers, each trying to gain power over the other, and Iggwilv bore at least one child as a result of the union. Eventually, Graz'zt escaped Iggwilv's bonds and returned to the Abyss. Iggwilv attempted to hide from the wrathful demon, but she failed. When Graz'zt found her, he imprisoned Iggwilv in Azzagrat for a time.

Now, the two maintain a wary alliance, each certain that the other will inevitably perform some act of betrayal. They share an affinity for subterfuge that makes them effective partners, so long as each can keep from stabbing the other in the back.

Chosen of Graz'zt Level 22 Elite Controller
Medium fey magical beast, lamia (shapechanger) XP 8,300

Initiative +15 Senses Perception +13
Swarm's Embrace aura 1; an enemy that starts its turn in the aura takes 15 damage.
HP 416; Bloodied 208

Resist takes half damage from melee and ranged attacks; Vulnerable 10 against area and close attacks
Saving Throws +2
Speed 6, climb 6
Action Points 1

Cursed Touch (standard; at-will) ✦ Healing
+26 vs. Fortitude; 1d8 + 7 damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). In addition, the Chosen of Graz'zt regains hit points equal to the damage dealt.

Devouring Swarm (standard; sustain minor; at-will)
Reach 5; +26 vs. Fortitude; 3d8 + 7 damage. When the Chosen of Graz'zt sustains this power, the devouring swarm deals 3d8 + 7 damage to the target (no attack roll required). The target must be within this power's range for the Chosen of Graz'zt to sustain the power.

Word of Graz'zt (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Charm
Close burst 5; targets enemies, affects first enemy hit only; +26 vs. Will; the target is dominated (save ends).

Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
A chosen of Graz'zt can alter its physical form to appear as an attractive Medium humanoid of any race or gender (see "Change Shape," Monster Manual, page 280).

Squeezing Swarm
By altering its shape, a Chosen of Graz'zt can squeeze through small openings as if it were a Tiny creature (see "Squeeze," Player's Handbook, page 292).

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Elven
Skills Arcana +22, Bluff +25, Insight +18

| Con 24 (+18) | Int 23 (+17) | Cha 28 (+20) |

Chosen of Graz'zt Tactics

A Chosen of Graz'zt opens combat with word of Graz'zt. It then attacks nondominated enemies with devouring swarm. The lamia relies on cursed touch for close combat, attempting to keep its hit points full while waiting for word of Graz'zt to recharge.

Chosen of Graz'zt Lore

DC 25: The Chosen of Graz'zt are the Dark Prince's most devoted followers. A Chosen of Graz'zt is charged with facilitating assassinations and espionage in the world. All of the Chosen are lamias who have learned from their master's cunning.

DC 30: The Chosen of Graz'zt can dominate enemies. As lamias, they also have the powers and characteristics common to their species, including their ability to assume humanoid forms.

Cults of Graz'zt

Cults of Graz'zt gather in hidden places near locations of power—the catacombs under a palace, the supply tunnels beneath a stronghold, or an unused library or laboratory at a wizards' college.

When they meet, the cultists hatch nefarious schemes to enhance their members' influence and power. At any time, a cult of Graz'zt has several plots in motion. Graz'zt monitors the activity of his cults, though most have plans of such a petty scale that he cares little about their fate. Only the best schemes attract his attention.

A cult's sacrifice to Graz'zt might include a powerful person or an object symbolic of an individual's power, such as a scepter or a crown. Victims are often tortured as a way of demonstrating the cult's power over that person.

A typical paragon-tier cult of Graz'zt includes a small group of six-fingered slayers (human assassins that have six fingers on each hand) and droves of dark acolytes.

Six-Fingered Slayer Level 15 Lurker
Medium natural humanoid, human XP 300

Initiative +13 Senses Perception +10

Six-Fingered Strike (standard; recharges when bloodied) ✦ Poison, Psychic, Weapon
Requires dagger; close burst 1; +20 vs. AC; 1d4 + 2 damage plus 2d6 psychic damage, and the six-fingered slayer makes a secondary attack against the same target.
Secondary Attack: +20 vs. Fortitude; the target takes ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends).

Dark Veil (minor; recharge ⚄ ⚅)
The six-fingered slayer gains concealment and phasing until the end of its next turn.

Con 12 (+8) Int 13 (+8) Cha 14 (+9)
Equipment leather armor, dagger, robes

Six-Fingered Slayer Tactics

Six-fingered slayers are assassins who follow Graz'zt's teachings. They use dark veil to step through solid walls into the midst of their enemies before striking with their poisonous daggers. Once dark veil recharges, they use the power to slip away.

Dark Acolyte of Graz'zt Level 15 Minion
Medium natural humanoid, human XP 300

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +10
HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
AC 29; Fortitude 27, Reflex 26, Will 27
Immune charm
Speed 6

Greatsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+20 vs. AC; 7 damage, or 9 damage if the dark acolyte has combat advantage against the target.

Longbow (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+19 vs. AC; 7 damage.

Dying Whispers (when reduced to 0 hit points by an attack)
Allies within 5 squares of the dark acolyte gain combat advantage against the attacker.

Alignment Evil Languages Abyssal, Common
Skills Bluff +13, Insight +15
Str 17 (+10) Dex 14 (+9) Wis 16 (+10)
Con 14 (+9) Int 13 (+8) Cha 12 (+8)
Equipment leather armor, greatsword, longbow, quiver of 30 arrows

Dark Acolyte of Graz'zt Tactics

Dark acolytes work together to flank enemies, thereby increasing the damage they deal with their melee attacks, while a few keep to the fringes and pepper enemies with arrows.

Encounter Groups

Graz'zt sometimes sends demons to aid his most ardent supporters, but only the most worthy followers can summon his aspect to do their bidding. The Chosen of Graz'zt prefer tough, vicious demons that they can use as bodyguards and soldiers.

Level 15 Encounter (6,000 XP)
- ✦ 8 dark acolytes of Graz'zt (level 15 minion)
- ✦ 2 six-fingered slayers (level 15 lurker)
- ✦ 1 immolith demon (level 15 controller)

Level 20 Encounter (15,900 XP)
- ✦ 1 Chosen of Graz'zt (level 22 elite controller)
- ✦ 2 nabassu gargoyles (level 18 lurker)
- ✦ 12 dark acolytes of Graz'zt (level 15 minion)

Level 23 Encounter (28,700 XP)
- ✦ 1 Chosen of Graz'zt (level 22 elite controller)
- ✦ 1 aspect of Graz'zt (level 24 elite skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 hezrou demons (level 22 brute)

Graz'zt trusts in his peerless ability to dominate enemies, which means he can always count on extra allies if battle should come.

Level 33 Encounter (193,300 XP)
- ✦ Graz'zt (level 32 solo controller)
- ✦ 3 marilith demons (level 24 elite skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 balor demon (level 27 elite brute)

KEEPER

KEEPERS ARE THE EERIE CUSTODIANS of the Shadowfell city of Gloomwrought, though they sometimes travel abroad and even visit the natural world. They avoid conflict until their secret agendas come into conflict with others' actions—and because their agendas are mysterious, such conflicts can arise at any time.

If the keepers serve a master, no one knows who that master is. Gloomwrought's residents believe the keepers serve the city's prince, Rolan the Deathless, but no evidence exists to validate this belief.

KEEPER LORE

DC 20: Keepers are the strange custodians of the Shadowfell city of Gloomwrought. They see to the upkeep of the city for reasons unknown.

DC 25: Keepers act at the behest of an unnamed master. Their agendas are secret, but their activities often relate to death. Seeing a keeper outside the Shadowfell is considered an ill omen pointing to imminent death.

DC 27: Keepers speak among their kind in an unknown clicking language. When a keeper dies, it dissolves into an inky black pool similar to the liquid form it can take while alive, but leaves its equipment behind.

| Keeper | Level 17 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Medium shadow humanoid (shapechanger) | XP 1,600 |

Initiative +18 Senses Perception +17; blindsight 20
HP 128; Bloodied 64
AC 31; Fortitude 29, Reflex 30, Will 28
Immune charm, fear, sleep; see also dissolution
Speed 6; see also dissolution

Shadowformed Weapon (standard; at-will) ◻ Weapon
The keeper attacks with a weapon it forms out of shadow: +23 vs. AC; 2d8 + 3 damage, and the target is marked until the end of the keeper's next turn. A keeper can only have one creature marked by this attack at a time. The condition ends if the keeper uses its dissolution power.

Caustic Breath (standard; encounter) ◻ Acid
Close blast 3; +20 vs. Fortitude; 3d6 + 5 acid damage, and the target is blinded (save ends). Aftereffect: the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends).

Dissolution (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Healing, Polymorph
The keeper dissolves into a dark, viscous liquid. While in this form, the keeper is immune to the restrained and immobilized conditions, and it ignores difficult terrain. The keeper gains a +5 bonus to all defenses, and it regains 10 hit points at the end of each of its turns. The keeper gains a climb speed and swim speed equal to its base walking speed. The keeper can take only move actions and minor actions. It can stay in this form indefinitely, and it can return to its normal form as a move action.

Marked Advantage
The keeper deals an extra 2d6 damage against a target it has marked.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common
Skills Stealth +19, Thievery +19

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Str 17 (+11) | Dex 22 (+14) | Wis 19 (+12) |
| Con 20 (+13) | Int 18 (+12) | Cha 9 (+7) |

Equipment trench coat, smock, goggles

KEEPER TACTICS

Keepers tend to attack in groups. One group makes a frontal assault, using shadowformed weapons, while another group moves into a tactical position where its members can use caustic breath. When the first group's members are heavily injured, they retreat using dissolution. The other group then engages the enemy while its companions heal.

When a battle appears lost, keepers sacrifice themselves to provide cover and allow one of their numbers to escape—presumably so that creature can report the encounter to the keepers' secret master.

ENCOUNTER GROUPS

Keepers rarely associate with other creatures. They are usually found in groups of their own kind or occasionally with subservient, shadowy allies.

Level 17 Encounter (8,000 XP)
- ✦ 4 keepers (level 17 lurker)
- ✦ 2 spectral tendrils traps (level 13 obstacle)

Statistics for the spectral tendrils trap are presented in the Dungeon Master's Guide, page 91.

Level 18 Encounter (10,800 XP)
- ✦ 2 keepers (level 17 lurker)
- ✦ 2 shadow snakes (level 16 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 blackroot treant (level 19 elite soldier)

KORRED

Korreds are distant relatives of gnomes, or like many dark fey, gnomes altered in elder times by fomorian magic. These capricious fey enjoy wild revels that they often compel unwitting passersby to join.

| Korred Cudgeleer | Level 8 Soldier |

| Con 14 (+6) | Int 11 (+4) Cha 13 (+5) |
| Equipment hide armor, cudgel | |

Korred Cudgeleer Tactics

A korred cudgeleer treats battle like a rowdy dance, laughing and singing as it viciously pounds its foes. It charges into the midst of its enemies, unleashing cudgeleer's jig immediately. It remains near a korred dancecaller, who helps it gain a better position at times.

Korred Dancecaller Tactics

The korred dancecaller positions other korreds advantageously using rhyme of calling. It stays close to its allies, but it tries to avoid enemies so it can call a fool's dance. If the dancecaller is in danger, it uses reactive call to draw allies closer to help defend it.

Korred Lore

A character knows the following information with a successful Nature check.

DC 20: Korreds have a love of dance, bawdy tunes, and lewd rhymes. They have a dark sense of humor that manifests as cruel practical jokes and forcing others, especially worldly mortals, to be entertainment. With a mix of magic and callousness, korreds have made many ill-fated travelers dance themselves to death.

Encounter Groups

Owing true allegiance to no one, korreds live in communities among their own kind or other dark fey. They are easily influenced to mischief and wickedness, so they can be found alongside evil creatures.

Level 9 Encounter (2,300 XP)
- ✦ 4 korred cudgeleers (level 8 soldier)
- ✦ 1 korred dancecaller (level 10 controller)
- ✦ 1 quickling runner (level 9 skirmisher)

RAAVASTA

Cunning and manipulative, raavastas prowl the dark corners of the Elemental Chaos and the Abyss, working their evil to foment warfare and mayhem.

Raavastas (pronounced rah-VAH-sta) are consummate dealmakers, the classic string-pullers that use deception and diversion to achieve their goals. They play their enemies against one another, whispering a tangle of truths and lies in the hope of sparking a conflict that draws attention away from their true designs. Raavastas are most active in the Abyss, manipulating the demon lords and their servants, but they are found in Sigil and throughout the Elemental Chaos, particularly in the City of Brass.

A raavasta rarely shows its true form (that of a fox-headed humanoid), preferring to alter its appearance to lull others into a false sense of security. Raavastas also have an uncanny gift for languages. After a few moments of observing communication, they become fluent in the language, using it with the mastery of a native speaker.

Raavasta Observer Level 19 Lurker
Medium elemental humanoid (shapechanger) XP 2,400

Initiative +19 Senses Perception +18; truesight 6
HP 136; Bloodied 68
AC 32; Fortitude 29; Reflex 32; Will 33
Resist 10 psychic, 10 variable (3/encounter; see "Resist," Monster Manual, page 282)
Speed 8

⨺ Claws of Blindness (standard; at-will)
+23 vs. AC; 1d6 + 6 damage, and the target is blinded (save ends).

✧ Mind Lure (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Psychic
Ranged 10; +22 vs. Will; 1d10 + 7 psychic damage, and the target slides 5 squares and grants combat advantage to the raavasta observer until the end of the target's next turn.

Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
The raavasta observer can alter its physical form to take on the appearance of any Medium humanoid, including a unique individual (see "Change Shape," Monster Manual, page 280).

Cloak and Claw
The raavasta observer deals an extra 2d6 damage against a target when it makes an attack while it has total concealment.

Vanish (immediate reaction, when an enemy hits the raavasta observer; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Illusion
The raavasta observer shifts 3 squares and is invisible until the end of its next turn or until it attacks.

Alignment Evil Languages All
Skills Bluff +21, Stealth +20
Str 15 (+11) Dex 22 (+15) Wis 18 (+13)
Con 16 (+12) Int 19 (+13) Cha 24 (+16)
Equipment fine clothing

Raavasta Observer Tactics

A raavasta observer uses change shape to lure an enemy close before using mind lure against it. Cautious, it uses vanish at every opportunity and never hesitates to flee a battle if defeat seems inevitable.

Raavasta Conniver Level 23 Elite Controller
Medium elemental humanoid (shapechanger) XP 10,200

Initiative +16 Senses Perception +22; truesight 6
HP 428; Bloodied 214
AC 40; Fortitude 35; Reflex 38; Will 36
Resist psychic 15, variable 15 (2/encounter; see "Resist," Monster Manual, page 282)
Saving Throws +2
Speed 6
Action Points 1

⨺ Claws of Blindness (standard; at-will)
+26 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage, and the target is blinded (save ends).

✧ Bind (minor; recharges when enforce contract is used) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Ranged sight; no attack roll required; the target chooses to take ongoing 20 psychic damage (save ends) or be dominated (save ends); see also enforce contract.

✧ Mind Stab (standard; encounter) ✦ Fear, Psychic
Close burst 5; targets enemies; +28 vs. Will; 5d6 + 9 psychic damage, and the target moves its speed away from the raavasta conniver.

Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
A raavasta conniver can alter its physical form to take on the appearance of any Medium humanoid, including a unique individual (see "Change Shape," Monster Manual, page 280).

Enforce Contract (immediate reaction, when an enemy's melee or ranged attack targets the raavasta conniver; recharge when bind is used) ✦ Charm
The attack targets the creature affected by the raavasta conniver's bind power instead of the raavasta conniver. Using this power ends the bind effect on that creature.

Vanish (immediate reaction, when an enemy hits the raavasta conniver; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Illusion
The raavasta conniver shifts 3 squares and is invisible until the end of its next turn or until it attacks.

Alignment Evil Languages All
Skills Bluff +23, Diplomacy +23, Insight +22
Str 14 (+13) Dex 20 (+16) Wis 23 (+17)
Con 22 (+17) Int 28 (+20) Cha 25 (+18)
Equipment fine clothing

Raavasta Conniver Tactics

A raavasta conniver begins combat by using bind against an enemy, preferably a ranged attacker. Whenever the conniver is the target of a dangerous attack, it uses enforce contract to defer the threat. Should the conniver become overwhelmed, it uses mind stab to drive off enemies while it escapes.

Raavasta Lore

DC 22: Raavastas are cunning humanoids that spin sinister schemes. They act as dealers, bargainers, and merchants, selling their services and anything else to make a profit and sow chaos. Often, their commodities come with hidden flaws that can eventually destroy a client.

DC 27: Many raavastas have rituals they use to augment their bargaining techniques. Conventional and magical methods for detecting truth are often ineffective against them. If a raavasta's plot is revealed, the raavasta usually has a magical means of escape, either by the use of an item, a nearby portal or gate, or some other form of teleportation.

DC 29: Many planar scholars believe that raavastas were once demons known as arcanaloths. According to sages, the demon lords drove the arcanaloths out of the Abyss due to their conniving ways, and it is from these demons that raavastas and rakshasas descend. Their similar tendencies and greed supports this theory, though rakshasas are quick to dismiss such claims as evil slurs against their race's honorable nature.

Encounter Groups

Raavastas surround themselves with useful servants and are loath to be caught alone. Raavastas use mezzodemons as guards and warriors. However, raavastas can be found with virtually any creature that has the muscle and the power to provide proper defense.

Level 18 Encounter (10,000 XP)
- 1 raavasta observer (level 19 lurker)
- 1 rockfire dreadnought (level 18 soldier)
- 1 azer beastlord (level 17 soldier)
- 1 firebred hell hound (level 17 brute)
- 6 azer warriors (level 17 minions)

Level 19 Encounter (12,000 XP)
- 1 raavasta observer (level 19 lurker)
- 2 fire archon blazesteels (level 19 soldier)
- 2 ice archon rimehammers (level 19 soldier)

Level 19 Encounter (12,000 XP)
- 3 raavasta observers (level 19 lurker)
- 8 mezzodemons (level 11 soldier)

Level 21 Encounter (19,800 XP)
- 1 raavasta conniver (level 23 elite controller)
- 3 marut blademasters (level 21 soldier)

Level 22 Encounter (24,100 XP)
- 1 raavasta conniver (level 23 elite controller)
- 2 efreet fireblades (level 22 soldier)
- 2 fire archon ash disciples (level 20 artillery)

Level 23 Encounter (25,500 XP)
- 1 raavasta conniver (level 23 elite controller)
- 1 efreet cinderlord (level 23 artillery)
- 1 glabrezu demon (level 23 elite brute)

CHAPTER 7

Planar Characters

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

Heroes armed with knowledge of the planes can walk the sylvan vales of the Feywild or visit the lonely trails of the Shadowfell. They can explore elemental realms, where the building blocks of worlds still wait for hands to shape them. Heroes can storm the astral ramparts of the heavens and the hells, challenging gods and devils alike. Epic threats to the mortal world originate from these otherworldly dimensions, and only the mightiest heroes are equipped to face the extent of planar dangers. Despite the hostile environment, though, some heroes come to call the planes home, traveling between unseen dimensions as easily as their world-bound counterparts journey from city to city.

The planes are filled with secret societies, arcane cabals, and individuals who master strange and rare fighting techniques. The paragon paths, rituals, and magic items described herein are ideal for characters native to the planes or characters who frequent the planes often. For example, a warlord interested in the shadow captain paragon path ought to have visited the Shadowfell at some point during his or her adventuring career (perhaps between adventures), or one can assume that he or she found a mentor with extensive knowledge of the plane in question.

This chapter includes:

- Paragon Paths: The planes are rife with arcane lore, powerful patrons, and potential mentors. Characters native to the planes and heroes who visit the planes can master paragon paths inaccessible to the inhabitants of the natural world.
- Rituals: Planar travelers rely on potent rituals to navigate the planes.
- Magic Items: Rare and unusual treasures fill the bazaars of the City of Brass and Sigil, the armories of Moradin's fortress, and the golden streets of Hestavar. Heroes must be equipped to deal with the most hostile environments and deadliest creatures if they are to travel the planes.

Blade of Cendriane

"That which consumed my homeland will find me a much more dangerous, much less palatable meal."

Prerequisite: Eladrin, ranger

The ancient empire of Cendriane left ruined cities when it fell long ago, but these remnants are not the only legacy of the eladrin kingdom. A group of rangers remains in the service of the lost empire, surviving in the borderlands of the once-great realm.

You are a descendant of the survivors of Cendriane's mysterious cataclysm, or you have been tutored in the martial secrets of that realm. You have perfected the use of fey step and the art of double-wielding longswords. The Cendriane sword style has pushed you to explore the boundaries of your heritage and expand upon the eladrins' innate magic. This self-knowledge combined with your blade mastery makes you a transient adversary on the battlefield, disappearing and reappearing as necessary.

Blade of Cendriane Path Features

Fey Step Assault (11th level): When you use a power that has the teleportation keyword, or when you use the Call of Cendriane path feature, you gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls with powers that have the weapon keyword until the end of your next turn.

Call of Cendriane (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can teleport 5 squares before or after your extra action.

Blademaster of Legacy (16th level): You gain a +1 bonus to damage rolls with melee attacks that use a longsword.

Blade of Cendriane Exploits

Forcing the Portal Blade of Cendriane Attack 11

You strike two nearby foes, teleporting them apart to create an opening.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Teleportation, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you teleport the target 2 squares. Make a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier, and you teleport the target 2 squares. The target must be teleported to a space within 3 squares of the primary target.

Ethereal Hunter Blade of Cendriane Utility 12

Stepping though thin air, you blink back into existence next to your enemies, making them your prey.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Teleportation
Move Action Personal
Effect: You teleport 5 squares. You must teleport to a square adjacent to at least one enemy. Each enemy adjacent to you grants combat advantage to you and is designated as your quarry until the end of your next turn. The enemies don't count against your normal limit of one quarry at a time, although you can still deal Hunter's Quarry damage only once per round.

Feywild Tempest Blade of Cendriane Attack 20

You travel unseen through the battlefield, materializing to strike at a foe before disappearing and moving on to the next adversary.

Daily ✦ Martial, Teleportation, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] damage per attack.
Effect: Teleport 5 squares. Make a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] damage per attack.
Effect: Teleport 5 squares. Make a tertiary attack.
Tertiary Target: One creature other than the primary and secondary targets
Tertiary Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] damage per attack.

Doomguard Marauder

"You and all you strive to create will someday fall. I shall hasten this fate."

Prerequisite: Fighter

The Doomguard is a nihilistic society of mercenaries, marauders, and freebooters that troubles the domains of good and evil alike. As a member of the Doomguard, you believe the universe is sliding toward destruction and that everything eventually comes to an end. The best of the Doomguard are free-willed revolutionaries who fight to overthrow tyranny and stifling order; the worst are murderous villains who revel in destruction.

As a Doomguard Marauder, you possess the traits of an anarchist. Laws run counter to nature and deprive mortals of the freedom to choose their fate. For good or bad, the Doomguard is ever the enemies of tyranny and government. The society's members especially hate devils, and they continuously wage war against them.

Doomguard Marauder Path Features

Ruin's Reward (11th level): Whenever you score a critical hit, you regain hit points equal to your Constitution modifier.

Destructive Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you deal 1d12 extra damage on attacks made before the end of your turn. The damage increases to 2d12 at 21st level.

Inevitable Doom (16th level): When you miss with a melee weapon attack, you gain a +2 bonus to your next melee attack roll against that creature.

Doomguard Marauder Exploits

Entropic Blow Doomguard Marauder Attack 11

You swing with a devastating strike that leaves you and the enemies around you open to attack.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you and each enemy adjacent to you takes a -2 penalty to AC until the end of your next turn.

Strike of Unmaking Doomguard Marauder Utility 12

Your attack puts your foe on the path to destruction.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Free Action Melee weapon
Trigger: You hit an enemy with a melee attack
Effect: The target loses all resistances until the end of your next turn.

Arm of Dissolution Doomguard Marauder Attack 20

Your attack resounds with a chord of dissolution, and your foe crumbles under the power of entropy.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and ongoing 10 damage (save ends). Each time the target takes the ongoing damage, you gain a +1 power bonus to melee attack rolls until the end of your next turn.
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends). You gain no power bonus from the ongoing damage.

CHIPPY

Gatecrasher

"A chalice of Corellon would be pretty rare. But maybe I know where to find one, if you have enough gemstones to jog my memory. . ."

Prerequisite: Rogue, trained in Arcana

Your rogue skills are as useful in the planes as in the world. You might be negotiating with a fomorian king instead of a tiefling merchant or cracking open a portal instead of picking a padlock, yet the principles are the same. You make it your business to locate lost relics across the planes and to learn the whereabouts of creatures that don't want to be found. Your connections span hundreds of organizations and people, and you know the locations of scores of portals.

Gatecrasher Path Features

Portal Alteration (11th level): A gatecrasher gains benefits related to portals (page 14).

Transparency: A gatecrasher sees through all but illusory portals as if they were clear. A gatecrasher that succeeds on a DC 25 Arcana check can recognize an illusory portal as illusory and can observe the portal's true destination.

Access: A gatecrasher gains a +5 bonus to Thievery checks to attempt to unlock an Arcane Lock on a portal.

Precision: A gatecrasher who moves through a portal can give the portal the precise trait. This trait lasts for 5 minutes after the gatecrasher exits the portal.

Gatecrasher Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain an additional move action that you can expend to teleport a number of squares equal to your speed. You can only use the move action on your turn, and the additional action expires at the end of the encounter.

Gatecrasher Advantage (16th level): When an enemy within your line of sight uses a power that has the teleportation keyword, you gain combat advantage against that creature until the end of your next turn.

Gatecrasher Exploits

Striker's Gate — Gatecrasher Attack 11

You dash through a dimensional pocket and skewer your foe.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Teleportation, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the attack, you teleport 5 squares to a space adjacent to the target and gain combat advantage against it until the end of your turn.
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Trickster's Gate — Gatecrasher Utility 12

You open a planar rift that lets you and your allies briefly pass through another plane before reappearing from a connected gate.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Teleportation
Move Action Ranged 20
Effect: You create two dimensional gates in two unoccupied squares within range. The gates last until the end of your next turn. You and your allies can move from one gate's square to the other gate's square as if the squares were adjacent to each other. Movement through the gates is impossible if either gate's square is occupied.
Sustain Minor: The gates persist. As a move action, you can move a gate 4 squares and must move it to a square within 20 squares of you.

Boltportal Strike — Gatecrasher Attack 20

You create a small portal in front of you and a corresponding one next to your foe, allowing you to strike your enemy from across the battlefield.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Effect: You make an attack from a square within 10 squares of you, gaining any benefits or penalties associated with that square, such as combat advantage from flanking.
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

TORSTEIN NORDSTRAND

Knight of Celestia

"The first time I beheld the beauty of Celestia, its splendor so moved me that I swore to become its champion."

Prerequisite: Paladin

As a knight of Celestia, you are an icon of virtue, championing the causes of Celestia and doing battle with those that seek its ruin. Although you retain devotion to your own deity, you also enjoy the favor of the gods that dwell in Celestia. You advance the agendas of the deities of Celestia in addition to that of your patron deity.

When you use your knight of Celestia powers, a flickering flame appears above your head, displaying the blessing the gods have bestowed upon you.

Knight of Celestia Path Features

Aura of Menace (11th level): When a creature that you have marked takes radiant damage from your divine challenge, the creature sheds bright light on 20 squares in all directions and grants combat advantage to any attacker until the end of your next turn.

Blessing of the Gods (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain a +2 bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn.

Dedicated Foe (16th level): When you score a critical hit against an enemy that you have marked with divine challenge, the attack ignores the creature's resistances, and the target takes radiant damage from divine challenge as if it had made an attack that didn't include you as a target. This damage triggers your aura of menace.

Knight of Celestia Prayers

Celestia's Challenge Knight of Celestia Attack 11

You channel righteous outrage into your weapon, challenging your foes with the wrath of the gods.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier + Charisma modifier damage.
Effect: Make a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier + Charisma modifier damage. If both attacks hit, the targets are marked as if by your divine challenge until the end of your next turn.

Brilliant Guardians Knight of Celestia Utility 12

You create a pair of luminescent reflections of yourself that hover near allies, safeguarding them from harm.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Divine
Standard Action Ranged 10
Effect: Two glowing duplicates of yourself appear in separate spaces within range. Each duplicate sheds bright light on 20 squares in all directions, and each ally adjacent to a duplicate gains a +2 power bonus to its AC and Will defense.
Sustain Minor: The duplicates persist and you can move one duplicate 3 squares or each duplicate 2 squares.

Purifying Radiance Knight of Celestia Attack 20

White motes of purifying radiance dance along your weapon as your strike sears a foe with the divine retribution of Celestia.

Daily ✦ Divine, Radiant, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target takes ongoing 10 radiant damage (save ends). Each time the target fails a saving throw against this effect, each enemy adjacent to the target takes radiant damage equal to your Charisma modifier.
Miss: Half damage, ongoing 5 radiant damage (save ends), and no damage to adjacent creatures.

LUCIO PARRILLO

Malec-Keth Janissary

"My oath and sword shall remain unbroken for as long as I draw breath."

Prerequisite: Swordmage

Malec-Keth janissaries are products of the elite arcane and military practices taught in the Tower of Malec-Keth, a war-magic academy in the City of Brass. Highly disciplined and rigorously trained, Malec-Keth janissaries have a fighting style demonstrative of their mastery of mind and body. They learn offensive and defensive techniques to protect their wards, and they also study music, art, and language.

Many Malec-Keth janissaries are servants to powerful masters, both humanoid and elemental. Proud and loyal, janissaries are single-minded in defense of their allies and masters. They favor a modest appearance; the only distinguishing mark a janissary bears is the tattoo of single blue flame on the brow that declares him or her a graduate of Malec-Keth. Those who wear the mark of Malec-Keth are known far and wide among the elemental realms for their determination and deadly skill with spell and blade.

Many powerful lords and ladies favor janissaries as bodyguards for their defensive abilities. Other Malec-Keth janissaries owe allegiance to no master, preferring to use their training to further their own ambitions.

Malec-Keth Janissary Features

Devshirme Training (11th level): You gain training in a skill from your class list or gain an additional two languages.

Malec-Keth Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra attack, you ignore your enemies' resistances until the end of your turn.

Chant of War (11th level): While you are bloodied, your aegis of assault or aegis of shielding power is a close burst 5.

Primordial Blade (16th level): Years of tireless study and exposure to the forces within the Elemental Chaos have honed your ability to control the elements. At the end of each short rest or extended rest, select one of the following damage types: cold, fire, thunder, or lightning. Your attacks deal 1d4 extra damage of the selected damage type until the end of your next rest.

Malec-Keth Janissary Spells

Loyal Unto Death Malec-Keth Janissary Attack 11

In a flash of light, you and a nearby ally vanish, reappearing only after you have switched positions.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Teleportation, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the attack, you and an ally within 10 squares of you swap places, teleporting into each other's space. Each enemy adjacent to you grants combat advantage to you, and each enemy adjacent to the ally grants combat advantage to him or her until the end of your next turn.
Secondary Target: One enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Ever-Present Escort Malec-Keth Janissary Utility 12

You extend the invisible field of protection granted by your swordmage warding to a nearby ally.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Teleportation
Immediate Interrupt
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 5
Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you is hit by an attack that targets AC
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: You teleport to a square adjacent to the target. The target gains a +4 power bonus to AC until the end of your next turn.

Elemental Scourge Malec-Keth Janissary Attack 20

You draw forth a burst of energy from the Elemental Chaos, scouring your enemies while allowing your allies to retreat to safety.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Fire, Implement, Lightning, Teleportation, Thunder
Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Reflex
Hit: 4d8 + Constitution modifier cold, fire, lightning, and thunder damage. The attack ignores any resistance to these damage types.
Effect: Each ally in the burst can teleport 3 squares.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

Planeshifter

"You could argue that the sunrise in Arvandor is the most beautiful sight in all the planes—but then, you've never seen Erathis pass judgment on a wayward cleric . . ."

Prerequisite: Warlock or wizard

Exploration is in your blood, but the world doesn't hold your interest. Instead, you enjoy the myriad wonders of the planes. You have extensive knowledge of the planes, and your ability to find portals and traverse dimensions is unrivaled.

Planeshifter Path Features

Study of the Planes (11th level): You acquire and master the Planar Portal ritual (Player's Handbook, page 311), even if you do not have the Ritual Caster feat or are of the appropriate level. You gain a +4 bonus to Arcana checks when performing rituals that have the travel category.

Planeshifter's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you also gain an extra move action for that turn. You can use that move action to teleport 10 squares.

Location Mastery (16th level): You and allies within 5 squares of you cannot be teleported against your will.

Planeshifter Spells

Sequester — Planeshifter Attack 11

A vortex opens behind your foe, drawing it into a timeless demiplane and briefly trapping it there.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Teleportation
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence or Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target is banished to a demiplane (save ends). The target disappears, cannot take actions, and cannot be targeted. On a save, the target reappears in the space it last occupied. If that space is occupied, the target returns to the nearest unoccupied space of its choice. You can expel the target from the demiplane as a free action, in which case it appears as described above.

Quick Portal — Planeshifter Utility 12

No one can open a portal quicker than you.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Teleportation
Standard Action Ranged 5
Effect: You create a portal in an unoccupied square within range that lasts until the end of your next turn. The portal leads to a permanent teleportation circle on your current plane. You must know the teleportation circle's sigil sequence, and you lose three healing surges when you create the portal. If you have fewer than three healing surges when you use this power, you take damage equal to your healing surge value for each healing surge you don't lose.
Sustain Standard: You lose a healing surge or take damage equal to your healing surge value when you sustain the portal.

Dimensional Cascade — Planeshifter Attack 20

You cast an enemy through a sequence of deadly planar locations.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Teleportation; Varies (see below)
Standard Action Ranged 20
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence or Charisma vs. Will
Hit: The target is cast through a series of dangerous planar locations. Until the start of the target's next turn, the target disappears, cannot take actions, and cannot be targeted. In addition, choose four damage types from the following list: acid, cold, fire, force, lightning, necrotic, poison, psychic, radiant, and thunder. The target takes 4d8 damage (1d8 of each damage type in whatever order you choose), and the target takes ongoing 5 damage of each type (save ends all).

At the start of the target's next turn, the target reappears in the space it last occupied. If that space is occupied, the target reappears in the nearest unoccupied space of its choice.
Miss: The target is cast through the dangerous planar locations but takes damage and ongoing damage of only two types, and the target reappears at the end of your turn.

CHIPPY

Shadow Captain

"My soldiers do not tire, thirst, or anger. If you cross me, your soul will join their ranks."

Prerequisite: Warlord

Not all heroic warriors walk in the light. As a shadow captain, you know there is strength to be found in darkness. Among the lost souls, you gain the power to command shadows. Spirits carry out your wishes on the battlefield, and those forces are strong and disciplined.

Shadow Captain Path Features

Shadows' Reconnoitering (11th level): Shadowy spirits constantly whisper to you, describing the unseen. You gain a +2 bonus to Perception checks and a +2 bonus to Insight checks.

Shadow Captain's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you and an ally within 5 squares of you deal 1d6 extra necrotic damage on melee attacks until the end of your next turn. Increase this damage to 2d6 at 21st level.

Inspiring the Invisible Legion (16th level): When you score a critical hit, the target of the attack is harried by shadows, causing the creature to grant combat advantage to any attacker until the end of your next turn.

Shadow Captain Powers

Underworld Gambit Shadow Captain Attack 11

Shadows writhe around your weapon, infusing your attack with necrotic energy that deprives your enemy of strength.

Encounter ✦ Necrotic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier. Make a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Charisma + 2 vs. Reflex
Hit: Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is weakened until the end of your next turn.

Shadow Guardians Shadow Captain Utility 12

Soldiers of shadow heed your call and aid your defenses.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
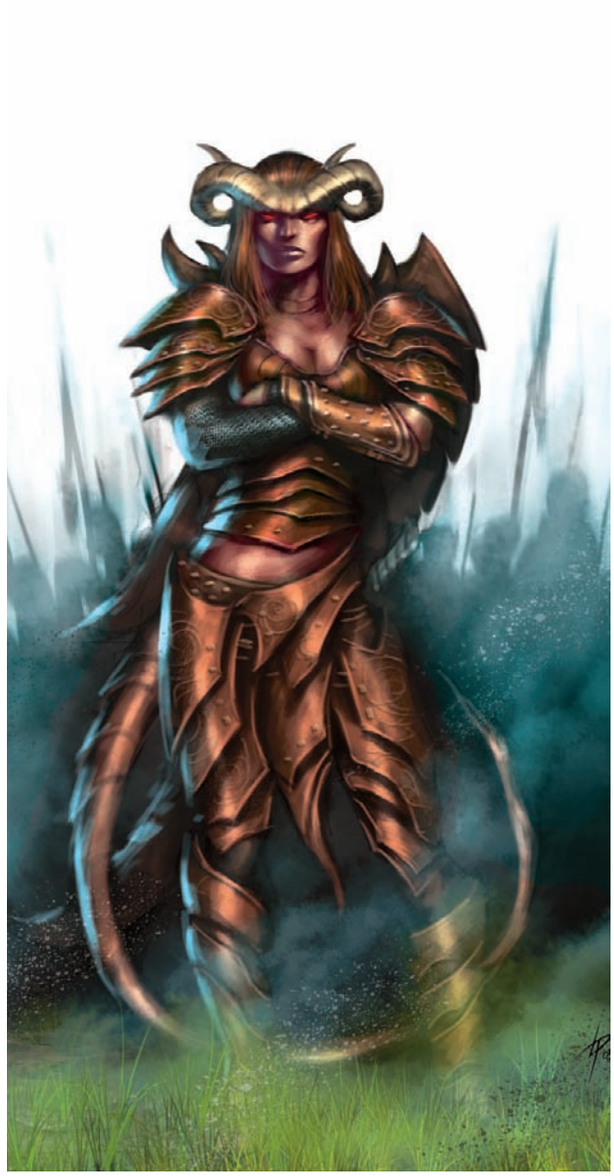
Effect: You conjure a number of shadow soldiers equal to your Intelligence modifier (minimum 1) that last until the end of your next turn. Each shadow soldier appears in an unoccupied square within range. The shadow soldiers provide cover to allies but not enemies. An enemy that enters a shadow soldier's square is immobilized (save ends).
Sustain Minor: The shadow soldiers persist. As a move action, you can move each shadow soldier a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum 1).



LUCIO PARRILLO

Shadow Turncoat Shadow Captain Attack 20

With a single strike, you tear off a shadowy piece of your opponent. That shadow then rebels against its former master.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Reliable, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you conjure a shadow in an unoccupied square adjacent to the target. Until the end of the encounter, each time you hit the target, a new shadow is created and the old one is destroyed.

The shadow is a reflection of the target. It has the defenses, immunities, resistances, speed, and melee basic attacks of the target. The shadow also has the same type and keywords, though it has the shadow origin. The shadow has 1 hit point, and a missed attack never damages the shadow. You control the shadow as a free action, which acts on your turn and has one standard action.

Soul Guide

"Let the light of righteousness guide you to your eternal reward."

Prerequisite: Cleric

You are a beacon in the darkness, one who reveals the way, and a guardian of the dead. Through your holy works, you ensure that the souls of the dead move on, free of fear and remorse, and unimpeded by sinister entities that would use them for dark deeds. You harbor a special hatred for undead, seeing them as perversions of the natural order.

Visions of past lives—leftover fragments from those you have saved—haunt your dreams. Although the sights are unsettling, they renew your commitment to guard the souls from the dangers lurking between this world and the next.

When you use your soul guide powers, ephemeral bits of soul materialize and swirl about you.

Soul Guide Path Features

Rebuke Soul (11th level): You can invoke the power of your deity to use rebuke soul.

Channel Divinity: Rebuke Soul — Soul Guide Feature

You shock your enemies to the very foundation of their being.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Implement, Radiant
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: Each creature that has the shadow origin or the undead keyword in burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: The target is immobilized until the end of your next turn. If the target has both the shadow origin and the undead keyword, it also takes 2d8 + Charisma modifier radiant damage.

Spiritual Guidance (11th level): Instead of spending an action point to take an extra action, you can spend an action point to regain the use of an encounter power that has the radiant keyword, or you can gain an extra use of your Channel Divinity class feature.

Weighty Soul (16th level): When you hit an insubstantial creature with a power that has the radiant keyword, that creature loses insubstantial until the end of your next turn.

Soul Guide Prayers

Soul's Enthrallment — Soul Guide Attack 11

Your holy symbol erupts with divine power, tugging on the souls of all who behold its splendor.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Implement, Radiant
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier radiant damage, and you pull the target a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier. If the target has the shadow origin or the undead keyword, it is also dazed until the end of your next turn.

Shadowbane Circle — Soul Guide Utility 12

You draw upon divine energy to summon a nimbus of holy light that is anathema to your enemies.

Daily ✦ Divine, Radiant, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Effect: The burst creates a zone of bright light that lasts until the end of your next turn. Creatures that have the shadow origin or the undead keyword treat the zone as difficult terrain. While within the zone, those creatures gain vulnerable 10 radiant or increase their vulnerability to radiant damage by 10.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists.

Soul Brand — Soul Guide Attack 20

A blazing glyph appears on your enemy's brow, emitting a holy glow that burns its corrupted soul.

Daily ✦ Divine, Implement, Radiant
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d8 + Wisdom modifier + Charisma modifier radiant damage. The target takes ongoing 10 radiant damage and sheds bright light on 20 squares in all directions (save ends both). Until the target saves, any enemy takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls while adjacent to the target.
Miss: Half damage, ongoing 5 radiant damage (save ends), and no other effects.

RALPH HORSLEY

Rituals are a tool to reach and explore the planes. They can create portals to bridge impossible distances, alter existing portals to send you and your allies into the unknown, and shelter you from the worst that the planes can throw against you. Many of the following rituals facilitate planar exploration and are staples in every planes-traveler's ritual book.

RITUALS BY LEVEL

| Lvl | Ritual | Key Skill |
|---|---|---|
| 6 | Fey Passage | Arcana or Nature |
| 8 | Analyze Portal | Arcana |
| 8 | Shadow Passage | Arcana or Religion |
| 12 | Demicache | Arcana |
| 12 | Elemental Transference | Arcana |
| 12 | Rope Trick | Arcana |
| 14 | Astral Guide | Religion |
| 14 | Scramble Portal | Arcana |
| 15 | Astral Sojourn | Religion |
| 15 | Create Teleportation Circle | Arcana |
| 16 | Far Sending | Arcana |
| 18 | Plane Shift | Arcana |

Analyze Portal

You can read the language of the portal's movement and colors and can decipher its secrets.

Level: 8
Category: Divination
Time: 1 hour
Duration: Instantaneous

Component Cost: 250 gp
Market Price: 800 gp
Key Skill: Arcana

When you perform this ritual, choose a portal you can see. Analyze Portal causes the portal to erupt with faint lights that flicker and spin, letting you learn about its destination and function. This ritual reveals the name of the portal's destination and its location in the world or plane on which the destination is located.

Depending on your Arcana check result, you can learn information about the last creature to use the portal and learn the identity of the creature or the nature of the event that created the portal.

| Arcana Check Result | Information Learned |
|---|---|
| 15 or higher | You learn the portal's precision characteristics. |
| 20 or higher | You learn the portal's access characteristics. |
| 24 or higher | You learn the name of the portal's destination. |
| 30 or higher | You learn the origin, type, and keywords of the last creature to use the portal, including the length of time since that event. |
| Arcana Check Result | Information Learned |
| 25 + half the ritual caster's level | You learn what keys, if any, open the portal. |
| 30 + half the ritual caster's level | You learn the identity of the creature who created the portal. |
| 35 or higher | You learn where the portal leads regardless of its transparency. You can see the other side up to 24 squares away. |

Astral Guide

A mote of white light coalesces before you, prepared to guide you through the Astral Sea.

Level: 14
Category: Binding
Time: 1 hour
Duration: Special

Component Cost: 700 gp, plus 1 healing surge
Market Price: 2,200 gp
Key Skill: Religion

You must use this ritual in the Astral Sea. You summon a fragment of divine essence to guide you. The guide sheds bright light on 8 squares in all directions, and it lacks physical form and cannot be harmed in any way.

As part of this ritual, you name a specific, fixed destination in the Astral Sea. The most common use of this ritual is to lead its user to a particular astral dominion. However, the astral guide could also lead you to the exit of a labyrinth, the entrance to a dungeon, or to a site within an astral dominion. The guide cannot lead you to a general location, such as "a room with astral diamonds" or to an unknown place, like "the death knight Malachi's hiding place." If the named location does exist within the Astral Sea, the guide leads you there by the shortest (though not always the safest) route.

The guide hovers in the air and moves at your speed. It remains within 12 squares of you. The guide remains until you reach your destination, the ritual's duration expires, or you take an extended rest.

At the completion of the ritual, make a Religion check. The result determines the duration for which astral guide remains.

| Religion Check Result | Duration |
|---|---|
| 19 or lower | 30 minutes |
| 20–29 | 1 hour |
| 30–39 | 4 hours |
| 40 or higher | 16 hours |

Astral Sojourn

With each word of the ritual, the world around you grows fainter, until finally it vanishes altogether, and you find yourself floating in the silvery void of the Astral Sea.

Level: 15
Category: Travel
Time: 1 hour
Duration: Special
Component Cost: 3,800 gp
Market Price: 7,000 gp
Key Skill: Religion

You must use this ritual in the world. When you perform this ritual, you transport yourself and up to eight allies to a random spot in the Astral Sea.

Creatures that travel the Astral Sea using this ritual have a faint silver nimbus surrounding them, which coalesces into a ghostly cord trailing a few inches from the neck. The manifestation of the cord represents the traveler's connection to the location from which they departed the world.

If you or one of your affected allies leaves the Astral Sea, such as by stepping through a portal to another plane, then the ritual ends and all participants return to the location from which they departed the world. At the end of the ritual's duration, or upon the death of the ritual caster, the participants also return to the location from which they departed the world.

The ritual caster can choose to end the ritual at any time. This requires 10 minutes, has no cost or skill check, and instantly returns all participants to the world. A participant always returns to the same location from which he or she departed the world.

At the completion of the ritual, make a Religion check. The result determines how long the ritual's participants remain in the Astral Sea.

| Religion Check Result | Effect |
|---|---|
| 19 or lower | 3 days |
| 20 to 29 | 7 days |
| 30 to 39 | 21 days |
| 40 or higher | 1 year |

Create Teleportation Circle

You inscribe a ring of sigils on a stone surface, bestowing it with the power to connect with portals.

Level: 15
Category: Travel
Time: 4 hours
Duration: 24 hours (special)
Component Cost: 1,000 gp per square filled by the teleportation circle, plus 5 healing surges
Market Price: 10,000 gp
Key Skill: Arcana (no check)

You create a teleportation circle with a unique sequence of magic sigils, which you and other ritual casters can use as a location marker for rituals such as Linked Portal and Planar Portal. The teleportation circle does not transport creatures anywhere on its own—it merely enables other travel rituals. The ritual caster chooses the size of the teleportation circle, which in turn affects the ritual's component cost: 1 square, 4 squares (a 2-square-by-2-square area), 9 squares (a 3-square-by-3-square area), or 16 squares (a 4-square-by-4-square area).

The teleportation circle lasts for 24 hours, but the ritual caster can extend the duration by spending a healing surge every 24 hours to sustain it. The caster does not need to see or even be on the same plane to sustain the effect. If the ritual's effect is sustained without interruption for a year and a day, the teleportation circle becomes permanent.

Arcane Lock, Knock, and Portals

Portals are like cosmic doorways, and as such, Arcane Lock (Player's Handbook, page 301) and Knock (Player's Handbook, page 307) can affect them.

You can use Arcane Lock to seal a portal against anyone who does not provide a password or against creatures of certain origins, types, descriptions, sizes, or those possessing specific equipment. Unlike mundane doorways, though, you can designate a special portal key to allow entry. The following paragraphs apply to Arcane Lock when the ritual is performed on a portal:

Key Object: You can assign an item as a portal key. You designate a form and a material for the key item, such as an iron key or a silver holy symbol of Ioun, or you can choose an item of a specific origin, such as a cockatrice feather or a rock from the Abyss. You cannot designate a specific item, like the Wand of Orcus or "my wand." Typically, a creature performing Arcane Lock chooses a key that corresponds to the portal's destination.

Like with mundane doorways, you can use Knock to open a portal sealed with Arcane Lock. However, many portals are barred by Arcane Locks created by powerful, planar creatures (or even groups of creatures), so the DCs to open them can be high.

Demicache

You open a small portal into a personal demiplane that can store small objects.

Level: 12
Category: Warding
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Special
Component Cost: 1,000 gp
Market Price: 2,600 gp
Key Skill: Arcana

You create a small, personal demiplane that can store nonliving items of up to 250 pounds. The demiplane has a portal that is 6 inches in diameter and is always open. The portal floats near you or can be affixed to your clothing (like a pocket), and you can retrieve items from the portal as a minor action. The portal is visible to others, and it moves with you at your speed.

At the completion of the ritual, make an Arcana check. The result determines how long the portal stays open. If the portal closes before you retrieve the stowed objects, they appear at your feet.

| Arcane Check Result | Duration |
|---|---|
| 19 or lower | 1 day |
| 20-29 | 7 days |
| 30-39 | 30 days |
| 40 or higher | 1 year |

Elemental Transference

The world around you vanishes, leaving you adrift in the sundered terrain of the Elemental Chaos.

Level: 12
Category: Travel
Time: 1 hour
Duration: Special
Component Cost: 1,000 gp
Market Price: 2,600 gp
Key Skill: Arcana (no check)

Use this ritual in the world. When you perform this ritual, you transport yourself and up to eight allies to a random spot in the Elemental Chaos. You have no control over where you appear, but your immediate environs aren't hazardous. Once in the Elemental Chaos, you can travel as normal within the plane. You remain in the Elemental Chaos until you leave by another means.

Fey Passage

You open a path marked by standing stones, allowing you and your allies to step into the Feywild.

Level: 6
Category: Travel
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Instantaneous
Component Cost: 140 gp (see below)
Market Price: 360 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Nature (no check)

Use this ritual at a fey crossing (see page 34). When you perform this ritual, you transport yourself and up to eight allies from the world to a corresponding location in the Feywild, or from the Feywild to a corresponding location in the world. The fey crossing need not be active for Fey Passage to work.

You remain in the Feywild until you leave by another means or you perform this ritual again at a fey crossing.

Special: Eladrin have a special connection to the Feywild. Consequently, an eladrin who has mastered this ritual or performs it from a scroll does not pay the component cost.

Far Sending

You cast your senses beyond planar boundaries to deliver a message to a distant creature.

Level: 16
Category: Exploration
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Instantaneous
Component Cost: 800 gp
Market Price: 4,200 gp
Key Skill: Arcana (no check)

Far Sending functions like Sending (Player's Handbook, page 312), except you do not make an Arcana check to determine its range. Far Sending can deliver messages anywhere, regardless of distance or location.

Plane Shift

Light flares around your vessel as it begins to cross the space separating planes, carrying you off to a new location.

Level: 18
Category: Travel
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Instantaneous
Component Cost: 1,000 gp, plus a vehicle with a navigation focus (page 159).
Market Price: 17,000 gp
Key Skill: Arcana

You move a vehicle (including the vehicle's pilot, crew, and load) that has the navigation focus trait from one plane to another (see "Vehicles," page 159).

At the ritual's conclusion, you name a location you have previously visited. The location must be a fixed place, and it must be in the same location it was when you last visited it. Once the location is named, make an Arcana check. The check determines the distance between your vehicle and your destination when you arrive on the plane.

| Arcana Check Result | Destination Location |
|---|---|
| 19 or lower | 100 miles from the destination |
| 20-29 | 50 miles from the destination |
| 30-39 | 10 miles from the destination |
| 40 or higher | Arrive at destination |

Instead of choosing a specific location, you can also choose a plane as a general destination. In this case, the vehicle appears in a random location on that plane (no Arcana check necessary). It's not necessary for you to have visited the destination plane to use the ritual in this manner.

Focus: A vehicle that has the navigational focus trait$.

Rope Trick

You drop a silver rope that passes through the floor and into a safe chamber where you can rest.

Level: 12
Category: Exploration
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: 7 hours
Component Cost: 1,000 gp, plus a focus worth 2,000 gp
Market Price: 2,500 gp
Key Skill: Arcana

When you perform Rope Trick, the ritual's focus (see below) passes through a portal and into a temporary demiplane. The portal entrance occupies 1 square. A creature can climb down the rope into a demiplane that is 2 squares high, 8 squares long, and 8 squares wide.

The entrance to the demiplane appears as a subtle shimmer and has solid transparency (see "Transparency," page 17). A successful Perception check (DC 15 + half your level) allows a creature outside the portal to detect the entrance. The portal can be locked with the Arcane Lock ritual (see the "Arcane Lock, Knock, and Portals" sidebar, page 149), and unless you choose to lock the portal, the demiplane remains accessible from the outside.

Once the ritual ends, the demiplane disappears, and any creatures or objects in the demiplane appear in the nearest unoccupied space to the demiplane's former entrance. The ritual's focus appears where the demiplane's entrance was. The ritual caster can choose to end the ritual at any time.

Focus: A silver rope worth at least 2,000 gp.

Scramble Portal

You alter the configuration of a teleportation circle or other portal so others cannot travel through it.

Level: 14
Category: Warding
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Special
Component Cost: 1,600 gp
Market Price: 4,000 gp
Key Skill: Arcana

Scramble Portal allows you to alter the magic of a permanent portal, making it malfunction. For the ritual's duration, the portal sends creatures passing through it to a random destination (DM's discretion).

At the completion of the ritual, make a Arcana check. The result determines how long the portal remains scrambled.

| Arcana Check Result | Duration |
|---|---|
| 24 or lower | 1 hour |
| 25-34 | 8 hours |
| 35-44 | 1 day |
| 45+ | 7 days |

Shadow Passage

Where shadows lie thick in the world, you can push aside the veil and step into the Shadowfell.

Level: 8
Category: Travel
Time: 10 minutes
Duration: Instantaneous
Component Cost: 135 gp
Market Price: 680 gp
Key Skill: Arcana or Religion (no check)

Use this ritual at a shadow crossing (see page 50). When you perform this ritual, you shift yourself and up to eight allies from the world to a corresponding location in the Shadowfell, or from the Shadowfell to a corresponding location in the world. The shadow crossing need not be active for Shadow Passage to work.

You remain in the Shadowfell until you leave by another means or you perform this ritual again at a shadow crossing.

Special: Shadar-kai have a special connection to the Shadowfell. Consequently, a shadar-kai who has mastered this ritual or performs it from a scroll does not pay the component cost.

MAGIC ITEMS

From weapons and armor to wondrous items, planar equipment is important for adventurers preparing to face the challenges of the planes. Some items can help adventurers contend with the hazards of strange and perilous terrain, while others offer staggering power that can rival the most powerful immortals and elementals. Whether an item comes from a marketplace in Sigil or from the depths of the Abyss, any piece can potentially give an adventurer the edge he or she needs to survive the travails of the planes.

Armor

Magic armor that is found or purchased in the planes tends to be exotic in appearance and oriented toward surviving encounters with dangerous planar creatures.

Weapons

Planar weapons are often crafted to have an appearance representative of their origin. Demonic weapons might be forged from red-black iron, while weapons from Celestia are frequently made of celestial steel, a bright metal that never dulls. Weapons crafted in the Nine Hells are made from Baatorian greensteel, a noxious metal that has a greasy finish and is renown for its fire- and acid-based enchantments.

Demonslayer Weapon — Level 9+

Inscribed with holy prayers and runes, this powerful weapon is the bane of all demonkind.

Lvl 9 +2 4,200 gp — Lvl 24 +5 525,000 gp
Lvl 14 +3 21,000 gp — Lvl 29 +6 2,625,000 gp
Lvl 19 +4 105,000 gp

Weapon: Any
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus, or +1d12 damage per plus against demons.
Power (At-Will): Free Action. Use this power when you hit a creature that has the demon keyword with this weapon. The demon does not benefit from variable resistance until the start of your next turn.
Power (Daily): Minor Action. Your next attack with this weapon against a demon, if made before the end of your next turn, gains a +5 power bonus to the attack roll.

Elementalbane Weapon — Level 9+

Forged of celestial steel and created to slay archons, this weapon excels at destroying natives of the Elemental Chaos.

Lvl 9 +2 2,600 gp — Lvl 24 +5 325,000 gp
Lvl 14 +3 13,000 gp — Lvl 29 +6 1,625,000 gp
Lvl 19 +4 65,000 gp

Weapon: Any melee
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 damage per plus, or +1d12 damage against elementals
Power (Daily): Standard Action. Celestial light blazes from this weapon as you make an attack: Close burst 2; Strength + this weapon's enhancement bonus vs. Reflex; 1[W] damage, and if the target is an elemental, it is blinded (save ends).
Level 24 or 29: Increase damage to 2[W].

Githyanki Silver Weapon — Level 9+

The rune-engraved weapon assaults a creature's mind and has the power to banish it to another plane.

Lvl 9 +2 4,200 gp — Lvl 24 +5 525,000 gp
Lvl 14 +3 21,000 gp — Lvl 29 +6 2,625,000 gp
Lvl 19 +4 105,000 gp

Weapon: Heavy Blade
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d8 psychic damage per plus
Power (At-Will ✦ Psychic): Free Action. All damage dealt by this weapon is psychic damage. Another free action returns the damage to normal.
Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): Free Action. Use this power when you hit with this weapon. The target is banished to a demiplane (save ends). It disappears from sight, cannot take actions, and cannot be targeted. On a save, the target reappears in the space it last occupied. If that space is occupied, the target returns to the nearest unoccupied space of its choosing.

Shadowstrike Weapon — Level 13+

This weapon casts a long and dangerous shadow.

Lvl 13 +3 17,000 gp — Lvl 23 +5 425,000 gp
Lvl 18 +4 85,000 gp — Lvl 28 +6 2,125,000 gp

Weapon: Light Blade, Spear
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus
Property: Attacks that use this weapon ignore concealment from dim light or darkness.
Power (Daily): Minor Action. Until the end of your next turn, this weapon's reach increases by 1 square and you have combat advantage against your target.

Wyrdwarped Weapon — Level 12+

This weapon thrums with hidden power that can teleport your enemy.

Lvl 12 +3 13,000 gp — Lvl 22 +5 325,000 gp
Lvl 17 +4 65,000 gp — Lvl 27 +6 1,625,000 gp

Weapon: Any ranged
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus
Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): Free Action. Use this power when you hit with this weapon. Teleport the target of your attack a number of squares equal to the weapon's enhancement bonus.

Planesplitter Weapon — Level 19+

The edge of this weapon is so sharp that it seems to cut through the unseen forces separating the planes.

Lvl 19 +4 105,000 gp Lvl 29 +6 2,625,000 gp
Lvl 24 +5 525,000 gp
Weapon: Axe, Heavy Blade
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d12 damage per plus
Property: While wielding this weapon, you can perform the Planar Portal ritual (Player's Handbook, page 311).
Power (Encounter): Free Action. Use this power when you make a melee attack using this weapon. The weapon's reach increases by 2 squares.
Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): Minor Action. You create a dimensional rift connecting two squares within 10 squares of each other that lasts until the end of your next turn. A creature that enters one of the squares can move to the other square as if it were adjacent to that square. A creature cannot pass through the rift if either square is occupied by another creature.

Holy Symbols

Many of the deities worshiped in the world live within the planes. As such, the planes contain a bountiful number of devotees, many of which craft and sell magic holy symbols.

HOLY SYMBOLS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 13 | Symbol of security +3 | 17,000 |
| 18 | Symbol of security +4 | 85,000 |

| 29 | Gith orb of illithid's bane +6 | 2,625,000 |

Gith Orb of Illithid's Bane — Level 14+

This silvery orb emits tendrils of psychic interference, piercing the minds of those who wield mental powers.

Lvl 14 +3 21,000 gp Lvl 24 +5 525,000 gp
Lvl 19 +4 105,000 gp Lvl 29 +6 2,625,000 gp
Implement (Orb)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 psychic damage per plus
Power (Daily ✦ Psychic): Immediate Reaction. Use this power when an enemy within 10 squares uses a power that has the psychic keyword. The enemy takes 10 psychic damage, and all enemies adjacent to the target take 5 psychic damage.
Level 24 or 29: The enemy takes 15 psychic damage, and adjacent enemies take 10 psychic damage.

Orb of the Planes — Level 23+

This multicolored orb provides knowledge of the planes and allows its user to thwart those who frequently travel through the planes.

Lvl 23 +5 425,000 gp Lvl 28 +6 2,125,000 gp
Implement (Orb)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus
Property: You gain a +5 item bonus to Arcana checks made to detect magic when attempting to perceive a portal. You can use this orb as a focus for the Analyze Portal or Planar Portal rituals instead of paying the component cost.
Power (Encounter ✦ Teleportation): Immediate Interrupt. Use this power when an enemy within 10 squares of you uses a power that has the teleportation keyword. That power fails and you can teleport 10 squares.

Orb of Translocation Interference — Level 13+

This insubstantial orb taps into the space between the planes, altering the course of teleportation.

Lvl 13 +3 17,000 gp | Lvl 23 +5 425,000 gp
Lvl 18 +4 85,000 gp | Lvl 28 +6 2,125,000 gp
Implement (Orb)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus
Power (Encounter): Free Action. Use this power when an enemy within 10 squares of you uses a power that has the teleportation keyword. Choose the space where the enemy appears. The location must be within the power's normal range.

Rods

Warlocks deal with planar and otherworldly creatures through their pacts. These creatures sometimes produce potent rods to aid their mortal servants.

RODS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 3 | Rod of time distortion +1 | 680 |
| 8 | Rod of time distortion +2 | 3,400 |

| 30 | Rod of star's descent +6 | 3,125,000 |
| 30 | Rod of sylvan trickery +6 | 3,125,000 |

Rod of Shadow's Caress — Level 15+

This rod summons tentacles of shadowy energy to impede your foes.

Lvl 15 +3 25,000 gp | Lvl 25 +5 625,000 gp
Lvl 20 +4 125,000 gp | Lvl 30 +6 3,125,000 gp
Implement (Rod)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 necrotic damage per plus
Power (Daily ✦ Conjuration, Zone): Standard Action. You evoke the essence of the Shadowfell in an area burst 1 within 10 squares. The burst creates a zone of grasping tentacles. Any enemy that starts its turn within the zone is slowed until the start of its next turn. In the Shadowfell, the power has an area burst 2 within 10 squares. A minor action sustains the zone.

Rod of Star's Descent — Level 20+

This rod tears a hole into the Far Realm, allowing maddening light to slip out and instill blinding insanity in your foes.

Lvl 20 +4 125,000 gp | Lvl 30 +6 3,125,000 gp
Lvl 25 +5 625,000 gp
Implement (Rod)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 radiant damage per plus
Power (Daily ✦ Conjuration): Standard Action. You create a rift to the Far Realm that causes maddening light to spill out in an area burst 3 within 10 squares. Any enemy in the burst is blinded until the end of its next turn.

Rod of Sylvan Trickery — Level 15+

You can use this rod to distort space, disorienting your enemy as you relocate the creature on the battlefield.

Lvl 15 +3 25,000 gp | Lvl 25 +5 625,000 gp
Lvl 20 +4 125,000 gp | Lvl 30 +6 3,125,000 gp
Implement (Rod)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus
Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): Free Action. Use this power when you place your Warlock's Curse on a creature. While that creature is under your curse, teleport the target 3 squares when you hit it with a power that has the arcane keyword and uses this implement. The effect lasts until the end of the encounter. If you are in the Feywild, you can teleport the target 6 squares instead of 3 squares.

Rod of Time Distortion — Level 3+

This crystal rod allows you to distort time as you cast a spell, depriving an enemy of the opportunity to retaliate.

Lvl 3 +1 680 gp | Lvl 18 +4 85,000 gp
Lvl 8 +2 3,400 gp | Lvl 23 +5 425,000 gp
Lvl 13 +3 17,000 gp | Lvl 28 +6 2,125,000 gp
Implement (Orb)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus
Power (Encounter): Free Action. Use this power when you make a ranged attack using this implement. The attack does not provoke an opportunity attack.

Staffs

Staffs crafted within the planes often incorporate fantastic materials and unusual shapes.

STAFFS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 14 | Staff of portals +3 | 21,000 |
| 19 | Staff of portals +4 | 105,000 |
| 24 | Staff of portals +5 | 525,000 |
| 29 | Staff of portals +6 | 2,625,000 |

Staff of Portals — Level 14+

Topping this black staff is a crystal sphere that enhances your powers of teleportation.

Lvl 14 +3 21,000 gp Lvl 24 +5 525,000 gp
Lvl 19 +4 105,000 gp Lvl 29 +6 2,625,000 gp
Implement (Staff)
Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls
Critical: +1d6 damage per plus, and teleport the target 1 square per plus.
Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): Free Action. Use this power after you use a power that has the teleportation keyword. You and all allies within 2 squares of you can teleport 5 squares.

Arms Slot Items

Gauntlets, bracers, and shields exist across the planes, each crafted with unique enchantments representative of their origin.

ARMS SLOT ITEMS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 16 | Gauntlets of the blood war | 45,000 |
| 26 | Gauntlets of the blood war | 1,125,000 |

Gauntlets of the Blood War — Level 16+

These gauntlets are perpetually stained with blood and were originally crafted by elementals to help slay immortals.

Lvl 16 45,000 gp Lvl 26 1,125,000 gp
Item Slot: Arms
Property: You gain a +3 item bonus to damage rolls against creatures that have the immortal origin.
Level 26: +5 item bonus.
Power (Daily): Free Action. Use this power when you hit a creature with the immortal origin. The creature takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).
Level 26: Ongoing 15 damage (save ends).

Feet Slot Items

Mobility is key to navigating the planes, so planar artisans create items to help escape dimensional denizens and evade hazardous terrains.

FEET SLOT ITEMS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 8 | Boots of grounding | 3,400 |
| 18 | Planar stasis boots | 85,000 |
| 18 | Planestrider boots | 85,000 |

Boots of Grounding — Level 8

These boots are unnaturally heavy, but they keep you grounded against magical movement.

Item Slot: Feet 3,400 gp
Power (Encounter): Immediate Interrupt. Use this power when an attack would force you to teleport. You do not teleport.

Planar Stasis Boots — Level 18

These supple boots make you feel confident of your ability to stay in one place when confronting magical attacks that displace you.

Item Slot: Feet 85,000 gp
Property: You cannot be teleported against your will.
Power (Encounter): Immediate Interrupt. Use this power when you would be pulled, pushed, or slid. You are moved 2 fewer squares.

Planestrider Boots — Level 18

These boots allow you to teleport around corners and to places you might not see from your current point of view.

Item Slot: Feet 85,000 gp
Property: When you use a power to teleport, you can instead teleport twice as the same action. The total distance you travel with both teleports cannot exceed the distance you could have traveled with the original teleport. You could, for example, teleport to a corner, establish a new line of sight, and teleport to a square not visible from your starting location, so long as the maximum number of squares teleported does not exceed the teleport power's allotted movement.
Power (Encounter ✦ Teleportation): Move Action. Teleport 10 squares.

Head Slot Items

Magical headgear is useful for detecting unseen features of the planes and adapting to harsh planar environments.

HEAD SLOT ITEMS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 21 | Ioun stone of adaptation | 225,000 |
| 22 | Circlet of portals | 325,000 |

Circlet of Portals — Level 22

This brilliant band of celestial steel allows you to better perceive the unseen paths through the planes.

Item Slot: Head 325,000 gp
Property: You know the location of all portals within 1 mile.

Ioun Stone of Adaptation — Level 21

This clear crystal floats in the air above your head, providing you with sustenance and durability against certain adverse effects.

Item Slot: Head 225,000 gp
Property: You do not need to eat or drink. Also, you and your equipment suffer no ill effects from ambient temperatures between -50 and 140 degrees Fahrenheit or from precipitation.
Power (Encounter): Free Action. Use this power when you are affected by ongoing damage. The ongoing damage ends.

Neck Slot Items

Defense is often the best offense when contending with the horrors that dwell in realms beyond the world. For that reason, many planar travelers wear potent amulets and cloaks.

NECK SLOT ITEMS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 14 | Mantle of faith +3 | 21,000 |
| 19 | Mantle of faith +4 | 105,000 |

| 25 | Brimstone cloak +5 | 625,000 |
| 28 | Greenstone amulet +6 | 2,125,000 |
| 29 | Mantle of faith +6 | 2,625,000 |
| 30 | Brimstone cloak +6 | 3,125,000 |

Brimstone Cloak — Level 20+

This cloak smells faintly of sulfur and helps resist both fire and poison.

Lvl 20 +4 125,000 gp Lvl 30 +6 3,125,000 gp
Lvl 25 +5 625,000 gp
Item Slot: Neck
Enhancement: Fortitude, Reflex, and Will
Property: Gain resist 10 fire and resist 10 poison.
Level 25 or 30: Resist 15 fire and resist 15 poison.
Power (Daily ✦ Fire): Immediate Reaction. Use this power when you are hit by a melee attack. The attacker takes ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).
Level 25 or 30: Ongoing 15 fire damage (save ends).

Greenstone Amulet — Level 28

Extracted from burning realms within the Nine Hells, greenstone is valued by archdevils for its bestowed resistance to psychic effects and scrying.

Lvl 28 +6 2,125,000 gp
Item Slot: Neck
Enhancement: Fortitude, Reflex, and Will
Property: Gain resist 15 psychic.
Property: Rituals that have the scrying category that are directed at you or allies within 10 squares of you fail.
Power (Daily): Immediate Interrupt. Use this power when you would be hit by an attack that has the charm keyword. Make a saving throw. On a save, the attack misses you, and you ignore any miss effects the attack has.

Mantle of Faith — Level 14+

Woven of celestial thread, these vestments carry the boon of divine protection.

Lvl 14 +3 21,000 gp Lvl 24 +5 525,000 gp
Lvl 19 +4 105,000 gp Lvl 29 +6 2,625,000 gp
Item Slot: Neck
Enhancement: Fortitude, Reflex, and Will
Power (Daily ✦ Healing): Immediate Reaction. Use this power when you take damage from an attack. Regain hit points equal to the damage taken up to twice your healing surge value.

Rings

Rings of the planes have fabulous powers and properties to match their exotic materials.

RINGS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 20 | Ring of dimensional escape | 125,000 |
| 28 | Ring of elemental mastery | 2,125,000 |

Ring of Dimensional Escape — Level 20

You might escape death, but only if you have friends nearby.

Item Slot: Ring 125,000 gp
Property: Add 1 square to the maximum distance of any teleport you make.
Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): No Action. Use this power when an attack drops you to 0 hit points or fewer. Teleport 20 squares.
If you've reached at least one milestone today, you also stabilize. You don't make death saving throws unless you take more damage.

Ring of Elemental Mastery — Level 28

Forged from elemental air, earth, fire, and water, this ring gives its wearer the durability to withstand the harshest climates and to bypass the toughest resistances.

Item Slot: Ring 2,125,000 gp
Property: You do not need to breathe. Also, you and your equipment suffer no ill effects from precipitation, high pressure, and ambient temperatures between -50 and 140 degrees Fahrenheit.
Power (Encounter): Minor Action. Choose one of the following damage types: acid, cold, fire, or lightning. Until the end of the encounter, your attacks ignore 5 resistance of that type.
If you've reached at least one milestone today, your attacks ignore resistance of the chosen type.

Waist Slot Items

Waist items provide the durability necessary to survive travel within the planes.

WAIST SLOT ITEMS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 10 | Cincture of the githzerai | 5,000 |

Cincture of the Githzerai — Level 10

This rope cord is woven to enhance the ability of the mind to lend strength to the body.

Item Slot: Waist 5,000 gp
Power (Daily): Immediate Interrupt. Use this power when an attack would hit your Fortitude defense. Use your Will defense in place of your Fortitude defense against the attack.

Wondrous Items

The diverse assortment of wondrous items related to the planes can provide utilitarian benefits to aid virtually any planar traveler.

WONDROUS ITEMS

| Lvl | Name | Price (gp) |
|---|---|---|
| 8 | Lodestone of the planes | 3,400 |
| 13 | Sextant of the planes | 17,000 |
| 16 | Folding Astral skiff | 45,000 |
| 21 | Manual of the planes | 225,000 |
| 23 | Instant portal | 425,000 |
| 30 | Cubic portal | 3,125,000 |

Cubic Portal — Level 30

This fist-sized cube is cut from solid carnelian, and each face contains a stylized glyph that corresponds to a specific planar location.

Wondrous Item 3,125,000 gp

Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): Minor Action. Depressing one side of the cubic portal opens a portal in an unoccupied square up to 3 squares away from you. The portal remains open until the end of your next turn and leads to a permanent teleportation circle in another location. Any creature entering the square occupied by the portal is teleported to that destination.

Each side of the cube opens a portal to a different permanent teleportation circle, which is determined at the cubic portal's creation. The portals are misty, restricting vision to 5 squares into the destination. Until the portal closes, creatures can move freely between portal and teleportation circle.

Sustain Minor. The portal remains open until the end of your next turn.

Instant Portal — Level 23

Shattering this glass marble against a hard surface releases the short-lived portal within.

Wondrous Item 425,000 gp

Power (Consumable ✦ Teleportation): Minor Action. You create a portal in an adjacent square. The portal leads to a destination determined when the item was created. The portal remains open for 5 rounds, closing at the end of your turn on the fifth round.

The portal is misty, restricting vision to 5 squares into the destination. Until the portal closes, creatures can move freely between the portal and the location to which its connected.

Loadstone of the Planes — Level 8

This arrow-shaped piece of magnetite bound in electrum whirls in the air, directing you to a portal you're looking for.

Wondrous Item 3,400 gp

Power (Daily): Special. Use this power during a short or an extended rest only. You learn the direction and rough distance to the nearest portal connected to a plane of your choice.

Manual of the Planes — Level 21

The pages of this tome display complex diagrams of planar destinations and provide insight into the portals connecting various locations within the planes.

Wondrous Item 225,000 gp

Property: You can use the Analyze Portal ritual as if you have the Ritual Caster feat and are of the appropriate level. The ritual's component cost is halved, and it takes half the time to complete the ritual. You gain a +4 item bonus to Arcana checks to perform the ritual.

Power (Daily): Standard Action. Change the destination of an open portal to any other destination, as long as you know the sigil sequence of the new destination. The portal resets to its normal destination after 1 minute.

Sextant of the Planes — Level 13

This small brass sphere unfolds to reveal a collection of crystal lenses, levers, and dials that provide guidance to nearby portals.

Wondrous Item 17,000 gp

Property: You can use the Plane Shift ritual as if you have the Ritual Caster feat and are of the appropriate level. When you perform the Plane Shift ritual, the component cost is halved, and it takes half the time to complete the ritual. You gain a +4 item bonus on the ritual's Arcana check.

Powers (Daily): Special. Use this power only during a short or an extended rest. You learn the direction and distance to a fixed location that you have previously visited.

Folding Astral Skiff — Level 16

This small metallic cube expands into a full-sized astral skiff.

Wondrous Item 45,000 gp

Power (Daily): Standard Action. The cube unfolds into a full-sized astral skiff (see "Vehicles" below). The cube unfolds only if there is enough unoccupied space to contain the skiff.

Power (At-Will): Standard Action. The astral skiff collapses into a cube. You cannot use this power while creatures or objects (not including objects normally contained in the skiff) occupy the astral skiff.

Vehicles

Traveling in the planes can be an endeavor, but fortunately for adventurers, a number of planar vessels exist to help expedite their travels. The vehicles here use the vehicle rules described in Adventurer's Vault.

Astral Skiff

Gargantuan vehicle
HP 250 Space 2 squares by 4 squares Cost 13,000 gp
AC 4; Fortitude 20, Reflex 2
Speed fly 12 (hover), overland flight 15

Pilot
The pilot must stand at a control wheel, typically at the rear of the astral skiff.

Crew
In addition to the pilot, an astral skiff requires a crew of three, all of whom use a standard action each round to control the skiff. Reduce the skiff's fly speed by 4 squares for each missing crew member. At fly speed 0, the astral skiff sails out of control.

Load
Ten Medium creatures; one ton of cargo.

Out of Control
An out-of-control astral skiff moves forward at half speed (not including any modifiers for its astral sails).

Astral Attunement
The astral skiff functions only in the Astral Sea.

Fragile Propulsion
For every 25 damage the astral skiff takes, its speed is reduced by 2 squares. At fly speed 0, the ship comes to a stop.

Planar Dromond

Gargantuan vehicle
HP 500 Space 4 squares by 10 squares Cost 1,125,000 gp
AC 3; Fortitude 20, Reflex 2
Speed swim 5

Pilot
The pilot must stand at a control wheel, typically at the rear of the dromond.

Crew
In addition to the pilot, a planar dromond requires a crew of fifteen, all of whom use a standard action each round to control the vessel. Reduce the dromond's swim speed by 2 squares for every 5 missing crew members. At swim speed 0, the dromond sails out of control.

Load
Fifty Medium creatures; two hundred tons of cargo.

Out of Control
An out-of-control planar dromond moves forward at half speed (not including any modifiers for its sails).

Sails
The planar dromond takes a penalty or bonus to its swim speed from –4 to +4 depending on the strength and direction of the wind.

Runekeel (Navigation Focus)
This ship is built on a runekeel, which is the navigation focus for the Plane Shift ritual. When traveling to other planes using that ritual, a planar dromond must move from one large body of water (or other liquid) to another.

Spelljammer

Gargantuan Vehicle
HP 500 Space 4 squares by 8 squares Cost 3,125,000 gp
AC 3; Fortitude 20, Reflex 2
Speed fly 12 (hover), overland flight 15

Pilot
The pilot must sit at the spelljammer helm, typically at the rear of the spelljammer.

Crew
In addition to the pilot, a spelljammer requires a crew of five, all of whom use a standard action each round to help control the vessel. Reduce the spelljammer's fly speed by 4 squares for each missing crew member. At fly speed 0, the spelljammer is unable to travel and flies out of control.

Load
Thirty Medium creatures; forty tons of cargo.

Out of Control
An out-of-control spelljammer moves forward at half speed (not including any modifiers for its sails). Each round, it has 75% chance of descending. It descends 5 squares for the first 10 rounds it's out of control. After 10 rounds, it descends 10 squares per round. An out-of-control spelljammer that hits the ground after descending more than 20 squares is destroyed.

Sails
The spelljammer takes a penalty or bonus to its fly speed from –4 to +4 depending on the strength and direction of the wind.

Spelljammer Helm (Navigation Focus)
This vehicle is equipped with a spelljamming helm, which is the navigation focus for the Plane Shift ritual.

Introduction

Armor and shield, blade and bow, stealth and cunning, tactics and command—all of these are the tools of a warrior. One warrior might favor some of these assets over others, depending on training and inclination. All legendary warriors develop martial power to such an extent that their abilities are the equal of magical abilities. Such warriors are always looking for an edge or a technique that exemplifies their manner of fighting.

That's what you'll find in this book.

It's a manual of mighty deeds and wily tricks. In its pages are new ways to build a martial character, along with new options to fill out your role as a fighter, a ranger, a rogue, or a warlord. Members of nonmartial classes might find an appropriate multiclass feat in these pages, but everything else is for martial characters. It is intended to expand your martial horizons in the game.

Using This Book

As you can see by the table of contents, Martial Power is organized by class. Whether you have a character of a certain class or you want to make a character of that class, all you have to do is consult the proper chapter for new builds, class features, powers, and paragon paths. The final chapter of the book contains nearly two hundred new feats to hone your martial talents and ten new epic destinies for martial characters.

Use the Martial Power™ supplement to start playing a new character with a new build, to pick powers that better define your existing character, or to evolve your character with specific feats, such as those that have racial and class prerequisites. The paragon paths introduced here might allow you to fully express the style you always intended your character to have.

Reimagining Your Character

It happens. You've played your martial character a while, and suddenly Martial Power shows up, offering many new possibilities—options you might have picked if you had known about them earlier.

Don't despair; you have a few choices. Retraining rules (see page 28 of the Player's Handbook®) make tapping into Martial Power easy. If retraining won't do the trick quickly enough, talk to your DM and your fellow players about reworking your character along the lines Martial Power provides. Chances are you can overhaul your PC to match your desires without doing any harm to the campaign. Your DM might even have a way to make the change a part of the story. If doing that ultimately proves too difficult, a dramatic exit for the older character could make way for a new one.

CHAPTER 1

Fighter

GONZALO FLORES

"Battle line? Formation? Listen—I came here to kill whatever comes at us, not to march in a parade. I'll keep you alive by makin' the bad guys dead. Got me?"

A FIGHTER can use training and talent to be a good defender. Doing so is the typical soldier's path. But not all fighters follow that path. Maybe you channel your indignation and bloodlust such that you defy your adversaries despite blows that land solidly. Or maybe you take up two weapons and focus on audacious assaults. In these ways, a good offense makes for solid defense.

Specialized techniques aren't the sole purview of unorthodox fighters, however. Combat systems are as numerous as weapons and the individual warriors who use them. Concentration on a weapon or a style can make your path clear, since certain exploits lend themselves to particular ways of fighting.

Whether you're a scale-clad, sword-and-board trooper; a tattooed, axe-wielding savage; a dual-wielding warrior who moves the battle line from moment to moment; or another sort of fighter, this chapter is for you. It contains the following material.

- New Fighter Builds: The battlerager and the tempest present different styles of combat that protect your allies while laying your enemies low.
- New Class Features: Two alternative choices give you the opportunity to focus your fighter even more sharply on one of the new builds.
- New Fighter Powers: Bring fear of your weapon prowess to your foes in new ways, including exploits that make your basic attacks and charges more dangerous.
- New Paragon Paths: Your particular road to glory can be represented by one of a dozen new paragon paths, each with its own flair.

NEW FIGHTER BUILDS

To supplement the fighter builds described in the Player's Handbook, this chapter presents two additional groups of fighters who use different styles of melee combat: the battlerager and the tempest.

Battlerager Fighter

You're an unpredictable warrior who trusts the adrenaline rush of battle to pull you through as much as heavy armor does. Few aspects of life give you the charge that being in the heat of battle does, and you build up a fury when your enemies manage to hurt you. You thrive on taking it to those foes by wielding highly damaging weapons such as axes, maces, hammers, and picks. Strength is your focus, allowing you to make powerful attacks. You rely on Constitution to give weight to your attacks and to keep you in the fight. Like any other soldier, you count on brutal instinct to help you win the day, so Wisdom is important to you as well. The Battlerager Vigor class feature is designed to complement this build.

Suggested Feat: Power Attack (Human feat: Durable)

Suggested Skills: Athletics, Endurance, Intimidate

Suggested At-Will Powers: brash strike, crushing surge

Suggested Encounter Power: *bell ringer

Suggested Daily Power: *knee breaker

*New option presented in this book

Tempest Fighter

Rather than a shield or a big weapon, you have specialized in fighting using a weapon in each hand. You see it as the best of both worlds—given the right training, you can deliver good damage and make up for the lack of a shield with deft parrying. Strength remains any soldier's bread and butter, and good battlefield awareness—Wisdom—is a must. You also rely on speed, maneuverability, and agility—Dexterity—to get your dirty work done. Constitution is a tertiary ability for you, granting useful staying power against foes not so easily fooled by your fancy footwork and feints. The Tempest Technique class feature is designed to complement this build.

Suggested Feat: Two-Weapon Fighting (Human feat: Human Perseverance)

Suggested Skills: Athletics, Intimidate, Streetwise

Suggested At-Will Powers: dual strike, footwork lure

Suggested Encounter Power: *funneling flurry

Suggested Daily Power: *tempest dance

*New option presented in this book

NEW CLASS FEATURES

These fighter class features are available to any fighter who wishes to explore a different area of expertise. You can select one of the following features in place of the Fighter Weapon Talent class feature.

Battlerager Vigor

Each time an enemy hits you with a melee or a close attack, you gain temporary hit points equal to your Constitution modifier (after the attack is resolved).

When you gain temporary hit points by hitting with an attack that has the invigorating keyword, those temporary hit points stack with any other temporary hit points you already have.

When wearing light armor or chainmail, you gain a +1 bonus to damage rolls with melee and close weapon attacks whenever you have temporary hit points. This bonus increases to +2 if you're wielding an axe, a hammer, a mace, or a pick.

BRIAN HAGAN

Tempest Technique

When you wield two melee weapons, you gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls with weapons that have the off-hand property.

You gain Two-Weapon Defense as a bonus feat, even if you don't meet the prerequisites.

When wearing light armor or chainmail, you gain a +1 bonus to damage rolls with melee and close weapon attacks when you are wielding two weapons. This bonus increases to +2 with weapons that have the off-hand property.

NEW FIGHTER POWERS

The tempest fighter and the battlerager fighter center on these powers. Fighters of any stripe can find powers here to their liking, however.

New Keywords

Some of the powers in this chapter use these new keywords.

Invigorating: If you are trained in the Endurance skill, you gain temporary hit points equal to your Constitution modifier when you hit with a power that has this keyword. No invigorating power grants temporary hit points more than once per turn, even if you hit more than once with the power or use more than one power with the invigorating keyword in a round.

Rattling: If you are trained in Intimidate and you deal damage with an attack that has this keyword, the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of your next turn. A creature immune to fear is not subject to this penalty.

Level 1 At-Will Exploits

Brash Strike Fighter Attack 1

With a battle cry, you throw your whole body behind your attack.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength + 2 vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Increase damage to 2[W] + Strength modifier at 21st level.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Effect: You grant combat advantage to the target until the start of your next turn.

Crushing Surge Fighter Attack 1

The feel of your weapon crunching against the enemy puts your heart back in the fight.

At-Will ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Increase damage to 2[W] + Strength modifier at 21st level.

Dual Strike Fighter Attack 1

You lash out quickly and follow up faster, delivering two small wounds.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] damage per attack.
Increase damage to 2[W] per attack at 21st level.

Footwork Lure Fighter Attack 1

You press the attack, engaging your enemy before falling back and drawing him after you.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. You can shift 1 square and slide the target into the space you left.

Level 1 Encounter Exploits

Bell Ringer Fighter Attack 1

You smash your weapon into your enemy, jarring his vitals.

Encounter ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target is dazed until the end of your next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Build and Attitude

How does your fighter character's build affect his or her personality? It's easy to imagine a guardian fighter as a disciplined soldier, focused on tactics that keep his companions safe. A battlerager fighter, though, might be more like a rampaging juggernaut, rushing at the foe with little thought for anyone's safety. Tempest fighters and great weapon fighters might fall between those two extremes.

Distracting Spate — Fighter Attack 1

Your flurry of feints and strikes leaves your foe's defenses unsteady.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target grants combat advantage to you until the end of your next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding two melee weapons, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Funneling Flurry — Fighter Attack 1

With snakelike strikes, you force two of your enemies to move where you want them.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Targets: Two creatures
Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), one attack per target
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 1 square.

Insightful Strike — Fighter Attack 1

Your opponent is showing weakness, and your shrewdness allows you to exploit it.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If the target is bloodied, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Lunging Strike — Fighter Attack 1

You lunge at a foe that thought it was beyond your reach.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon + 1 reach
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength - 1 vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.

DRAGONBORN FIGHTERS

With their naturally high Strength, dragonborn make excellent great weapon fighters or battleragers, putting that physical power to good use with two-handed swords or axes. Like Harann (described in the Player's Handbook), many dragonborn fighters strive to achieve mastery of a weapon as they seek the perfection of their spirits. The inner dragon paragon path (page 29) represents a dragonborn fighter who taps into the power of the dragon within.

Shield Bash — Fighter Attack 1

You knock your adversary off balance with your shield and follow up with a strike.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Standard Action Melee 1
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength + 2 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target 1 square and knock it prone.
Special: If you are a dwarf, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

LEVEL 1 DAILY EXPLOITS

Flanking Assault — Fighter Attack 1

The presence of so many enemies overwhelms your foe, giving you the opportunity to land a vicious attack.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature you're flanking
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage. For each ally adjacent to the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Miss: Half damage.

Harrier's Ploy — Fighter Attack 1

Your forceful attack promises your foe a pursuit that can end only when one of you is victorious.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, if the target moves, you can shift a number of squares equal to your Dexterity modifier as an immediate reaction.

DWARF FIGHTERS

Although they're not as strong as dragonborn, dwarves combine high Constitution and high Wisdom to make excellent fighters. Like most dwarves, dwarf fighters favor axes and hammers—partly for cultural reasons and partly because those weapons let them put their Constitution to good use for extra damage. Dwarves have a strong tradition of guardian fighters, and the dwarven defender paragon path (page 27) is the pinnacle of that tradition.

Knee Breaker — Fighter Attack 1

By smashing into your opponent's legs, you make even the thought of moving painful for him.

Daily ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). If the target is already slowed, it is instead immobilized (save ends).
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is not slowed or immobilized.

Lasting Threat — Fighter Attack 1

Following up your challenge with a solid attack, you force your enemy to engage you.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is marked until the end of the encounter or until you are knocked unconscious. No mark can supersede this one.

Tempest Dance — Fighter Attack 1

You lunge from enemy to enemy, giving each a taste of your weapon as you pass.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. If you have combat advantage against the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Effect: You can shift 1 square and repeat the attack against a second target. You can then shift 1 square and repeat the attack against a third target.

Level 2 Utility Exploits

Create Opening — Fighter Utility 2

You draw your enemy's attention, allowing an ally to slip away.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Effect: The target is marked until the end of your next turn. The target can then make a melee basic attack against you as a free action, with a -2 penalty to the attack roll. One ally adjacent to the target can shift its speed as a free action.

BRIAN HAGAN

Defensive Stance — Fighter Utility 2

Dropping into a cautious stance, you maneuver around your opponent's attacks to get into position.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, you are slowed and gain a +2 power bonus to AC. Whenever an enemy misses you with a melee attack, you can shift 1 square as an immediate reaction. You can end this stance as a free action.

Pass Forward — Fighter Utility 2

With perfect timing, you slip by your foe without dropping your guard.

At-Will ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Effect: You pick an adjacent enemy and move up to your speed. As long as you end this movement in a square adjacent to that enemy, your movement does not provoke opportunity attacks from that enemy.

Shielded Sides — Fighter Utility 2

You whirl with your shield, concentrating on closing any holes in your defenses.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you gain a +2 power bonus to AC and Reflex and do not grant combat advantage to creatures flanking you.

Shrewd Repositioning — Fighter Utility 2

An enemy's attack lands, but you spot a way to better your tactics.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: You are hit by an attack
Effect: You can shift a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Level 3 Encounter Exploits

Advance Lunge — Fighter Attack 3

You spring forward to make a quick attack.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift 1 square.
Weapon: If you're wielding a light blade or a spear, you can either shift 2 squares before the attack or shift 1 square before and 1 square after.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If you have combat advantage against the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Blinding Smash — Fighter Attack 3

A sharp blow leaves your enemy seeing only stars.

Encounter ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target is blinded until the end of your next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Parry and Riposte — Fighter Attack 3

You parry an attack and quickly counter with your own, throwing your foe off balance.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy misses you or an ally with a melee attack
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target grants combat advantage to you and your allies until the end of your next turn.

Probing Attack — Fighter Attack 3

With a careful strike, you find a weak spot in your enemy's defenses.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you gain a +4 power bonus to attack rolls against the target until the end of your next turn.
Special: When making an opportunity attack, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Rhino Strike — Fighter Attack 3

Rushing into the thick of battle, you smash your foes with your eager attack.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must charge and use this power in place of a melee basic attack. If you're using a shield, the movement during your charge does not provoke opportunity attacks.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Shield Slam — Fighter Attack 3

You follow up a successful attack by slamming your shield into the enemy, knocking him aside.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Free Action Melee 1
Trigger: You hit an enemy with a melee attack
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength + 2 vs. Fortitude
Hit: You push the target 1 square and knock it prone.

Level 5 Daily Exploits

Agonizing Assault — Fighter Attack 5

Your attack hits your adversary in a sensitive area, causing it to reel in pain.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is dazed and immobilized (save ends both).
Weapon: If you're wielding a flail, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is not dazed or immobilized.

Bedeviling Assault — Fighter Attack 5

While your ally distracts your opponent, you land yet another blow.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, once per round when an ally hits the target with a melee attack, you can make a melee basic attack with combat advantage against the target as a free action.

Cometfall Charge — Fighter Attack 5

You leap through the air toward your foe, landing with a resounding crunch.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Athletics.
Requirement: You must charge and use this power in place of a melee basic attack.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier + Constitution modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Hounding Longarm — Fighter Attack 5

With a sharp jab, you shove your enemy backward, continuing to guard against him with your polearm.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a reach weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target 1 square.
Special: If you are an eladrin, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, each time the target shifts or makes an attack that doesn't include you as a target, you can shift 1 square and make a melee basic attack against the target as an immediate interrupt.

Pinning Smash — Fighter Attack 5

You pummel your opponent, knocking him to his knees. You then hold him down.

Daily ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is immobilized until you are not adjacent to it.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn.

Subtle Cut — Fighter Attack 5

You deftly maneuver to precisely slash your foe, drawing its blood and slowing it with suffering.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: The target is slowed and takes ongoing damage equal to 10 + your Dexterity modifier (save ends both).
Miss: The target takes ongoing damage equal to your Dexterity modifier (save ends).
Effect: Before and after the attack, you can shift 1 square.

Level 6 Utility Exploits

Agile Approach — Fighter Utility 6

You make a quick shift to a better position.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Effect: You can shift 2 squares and must end adjacent to an enemy. If you aren't wearing heavy armor, you can shift 3 squares.

Rock Steady — Fighter Utility 6

You sink your center of gravity into the ground below you and grit your teeth. You are going nowhere.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, you cannot be knocked prone, and if you are subject to a pull, a push, or a slide, you can reduce the forced movement by 1 square.

Settling the Score — Fighter Utility 6

When the attack hits you, you decide then and there to take your enemy out.

Daily ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: An enemy hits you with an attack
Effect: You gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls against the triggering enemy until the end of the encounter.

Strong Focus — Fighter Utility 6

Concentration improves your ability to accomplish feats of strength.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you gain a power bonus to Athletics checks and Strength ability checks equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Vigilant Protector — Fighter Utility 6

You sweep your shield out to give your allies protection.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Effect: Until the stance ends, you take a –1 penalty to AC and Reflex, but each ally gains a +2 power bonus to AC and Reflex while adjacent to you.
Special: If you are a dragonborn, your adjacent allies instead gain a +3 power bonus to AC and Reflex.

Level 7 Encounter Exploits

Hampering Flurry — Fighter Attack 7

Using both weapons, you attack your opponent's legs and hinder him with painful wounds.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage per attack, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn. If both attacks hit, the second attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Not So Fast — Fighter Attack 7

Your adversary tries to slip away, but you sneak your weapon inside and keep him right where you want him.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee 1
Trigger: An adjacent enemy moves away from you
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is slowed until the end of its next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding a flail or a pick, the target is also immobilized until the end of its next turn.

Savage Parry — Fighter Attack 7

With predatory speed, you violently parry, extorting pain as the penalty for your foe's impudent attack.

Encounter ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy hits an ally with a melee attack
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: Strength modifier damage, and the ally takes only half damage from the triggering attack.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, your attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Stay Down — Fighter Attack 7

You're not above hitting someone who's down.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If the target is prone, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier, and the target can't stand up until the end of your next turn.

Trip Up — Fighter Attack 7

You tangle your enemy's feet with your weapon.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Free Action Melee weapon
Trigger: You hit an enemy with a melee basic attack
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding a polearm or a spear, you can knock the target prone instead of slowing it.

Twofold Torment — Fighter Attack 7

Your carefully aimed slashes send two foes reeling away in agony.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Targets: Two creatures
Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), one attack per target
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target a number of squares equal to 1 + your Dexterity modifier. If you have combat advantage against the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Eladrin Fighters

Eladrin value the skill of swordplay almost as much as the arcane arts, and an eladrin fighter armed with a slim rapier can be a deadly enemy. With their innately high Dexterity, eladrin fighters favor heavy blades, light blades, and, to a lesser extent, spears. Many eladrin fighters learn a scattering of arcane powers with multiclass feats; thunder wave is a popular choice because of its ability to mark multiple targets.

Level 9 Daily Exploits

Fighter's Recovery — Fighter Attack 9

As you swing, you use your momentum to steady and center yourself, gaining vigor for the fight to come.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: If you have used all your encounter attack powers, you regain the use of a fighter encounter attack power you have used during this encounter.

Jackal Strike — Fighter Attack 9

Sensing your opponent's flagging strength, you move in for the kill.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Free Action Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy marked by you becomes bloodied
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Pestering Wound — Fighter Attack 9

The injury caused by your attack tears open when your foe tries to maneuver.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and if the target moves before the end of your next turn, it takes extra damage equal to your Strength modifier.
Weapon: If you're wielding a pick, the extra damage instead equals your Strength modifier + your Constitution modifier.

Piquing Dare — Fighter Attack 9

With a precise and provoking blow, you mark your foe and defy him to ignore you on pain of further attack.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage. If you have combat advantage against the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Effect: The target is marked (save ends). If the target does not attack you on its turn while it is marked by this power, you can either make a melee basic attack against it or shift 1 square closer to it as a free action.

Stop Thrust — Fighter Attack 9

As the enemy moves to attack, you respond by rapidly advancing and striking.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy enters a square within 2 squares of you
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift 2 squares.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is immobilized until the start of your next turn.
Special: If the target moved as part of a charge, it can attack you instead of the original target of its charge.

Terrifying Impact — Fighter Attack 9

Giving an exultant battle cry, you pulverize an opponent and put the fear of impending doom in nearby foes.

Daily ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the primary attack deals extra damage equal to our Constitution modifier.
Effect: Make a secondary attack, which has the fear keyword.
Secondary Target: Each enemy within 3 squares of the primary target
Secondary Attack: Constitution vs. Will
Hit: You push the target 1 square.

Elf Fighters

Like eladrin, elf fighters favor heavy blades and light blades to make the best use of their Dexterity. Their high Wisdom also helps them maintain control over their opponents. Many elf fighters learn one or two ranger powers in order to gain effective ranged attacks.

Hunker Down — Fighter Utility 10

You drop into a defensive posture, raising your shield to protect yourself.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Effect: Until the stance ends, you are slowed, but you gain cover against all attacks. You can end this stance as a free action.

Menacing Stance — Fighter Utility 10

You seem ready to spring at any moment, forcing marked foes to devote more attention to you.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, whenever an enemy marked by you makes an attack that doesn't include you as a target, that enemy grants combat advantage to your allies until the start of its next turn.

Shooter's Nemesis — Fighter Utility 10

The fact that your enemy is too cowardly to close to melee swells your confidence.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: You are hit by a ranged attack
Effect: You spend a healing surge and regain additional hit points equal to twice your Wisdom modifier.

Strength from Pain — Fighter Utility 10

The pain of your wounds opens the floodgates to your inner strength.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be bloodied.
Effect: You gain a +4 power bonus to melee damage rolls, Athletics checks, and Endurance checks until the end of the encounter or until you are no longer bloodied.
Special: If you are a dragonborn, you instead gain a +5 power bonus.

Level 13 Encounter Exploits

Appalling Crunch — Fighter Attack 13

Nearby enemies are so aghast at your remorseless attack that they see you as the most dangerous foe on the field.

Encounter ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and enemies adjacent to the target are marked until the end of your next turn.

Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature granting combat advantage to you
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Weapon: If you're wielding a heavy blade or a light blade, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Special: If you are a halfling, you don't need combat advantage against the target.

Brutal Rebuke — Fighter Attack 13

By attacking your comrade, your adversary has called down your righteous ire.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC. If the target attacked you or an ally since the end of your last turn, you gain a +2 bonus to the attack roll.
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Weapon: If you're wielding a mace or a pick, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Special: When making an opportunity attack, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Crumpling Slam — Fighter Attack 13

With a bellow and a mighty wallop, you hurl your foe backward and off her feet.

Encounter ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target 2 squares and knock it prone.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Dance of Blades — Fighter Attack 13

You weave between two foes, driving them this way and that with a pair of attacks.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares.
If you have combat advantage against the target, the primary attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Effect: You can shift 3 squares and make a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC (off-hand weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares.
If you have combat advantage against the secondary target, the secondary attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Scattering Swing — Fighter Attack 13

You whip your weapon in a wide arc, and those enemies you don't send staggering must jump out of the way.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 1 square.
Miss: You push the target 1 square.

Gods and Fighters

Bahamut and Kord are popular deities among fighters because of their influence over matters of war, while many fighters turn to Avandra as the god of adventure. Fighters who believe in the virtues of conquest often worship Bane, even if they're not actually evil. Beyond these four gods, all the deities in the pantheon count some fighters among their worshipers. Fighters who view their martial skill as an art form, including many elf and eladrin fighters, worship Corellon. Erathis is a popular civic god, often revered by soldiers. As a god of knowledge, Ioun holds appeal for fighters who study the history of warfare and strategy. Some battlerager fighters seek to mimic the fury of nature that Melora represents. Moradin is commonly revered by dwarves and any fighter who seeks to protect a community. Pelor is popular among good-aligned fighters, while the Raven Queen is a common patron for grim, bitter soldiers and mercenaries. Sehanine's doctrine of seeking one's own destiny appeals to many fighters as well.

LUCIO PARRILLO

Level 15 Daily Exploits

Effect: You can shift 1 square and repeat the attack against any enemy you haven't already hit with the attack.

Quicksilver Stance — Fighter Attack 15

Like liquid metal, you flow wherever the gravity of battle carries you.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, you can shift 1 square (or 2 squares if you aren't wearing heavy armor) and make a melee basic attack as a move action. If you have combat advantage against the target of the attack and hit, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Fighters in the World

The rank-and-file soldiery of the local barony, the band of mercenaries who sell their services to the duke, the bandits who raid caravans traveling the King's Road, the savages who plunder the outlying farms—these aren't fighters. But fighters do emerge from among these sorts of people. Your fighter character might have served in the military, trained for the knighthood, or fought among bandits or raiders, but you rose from those ranks to become something greater than your colleagues. You're not just a soldier; you're a hero, and that forever sets you above the common folk of the world.

Slayer's Lunge — Fighter Attack 15

Scenting blood, you speed forward to finish your foe.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee 1
Trigger: An enemy within 5 squares of you becomes bloodied
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: Before the attack, you can move your speed.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is marked (save ends). If the target is already marked by you when you use this power, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Special: If you are an elf, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Level 16 Utility Exploits

Skirmisher Pounce — Fighter Attack 17

You leap forward, skewering one foe and using your momentum to harry another.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you can shift 2 squares and make a secondary attack.
If you have combat advantage against the primary target, the primary attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
If you have combat advantage against the secondary target, the secondary attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Tap and Counterstrike — Fighter Attack 17

You tap your foe, holding back your full strength to keep its attention fixed squarely on you.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. If the target makes an attack that does not include you before the start of your next turn, you can shift 1 square and make a secondary attack against the target with your off-hand weapon as an immediate interrupt.

Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a polearm or a spear.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is marked (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is marked until the end of your next turn.
Effect: If the target takes a move action before the end of your next turn and is within your melee reach, you can make a secondary attack against the target as an immediate interrupt.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Secondary Damage: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and cancel the target's move action.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Protective Sweep — Fighter Attack 19

You swing your weapon around with care, and then take up a defensive posture.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each creature in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Weapon: If you're wielding a flail or a heavy blade, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Effect: You gain a +4 power bonus to AC until the start of your next turn.

Relentless Assailant — Fighter Attack 19

You get a boost out of pummeling your opponent.

Daily ✦ Healing, Invigorating, Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you can spend a healing surge.

Smash and Grab — Fighter Attack 19

Your hammering blow distracts your enemy long enough for you to obtain a crushing hold.

Daily ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must have a hand free.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you grab the target. Each time you sustain the grab, the target takes 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Level 22 Utility Exploits

Howl of Defiance — Fighter Utility 22

You respond to pain with a lionhearted shout and wild-eyed watchfulness.

Daily ✦ Fear, Martial
Immediate Reaction Close burst 5
Trigger: An enemy damages you with a melee attack
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Effect: The target is marked until the end of the encounter, until you are knocked unconscious, or until another mark supersedes this one. Until this mark ends, the target grants combat advantage to you.

Inspired Resurgence — Fighter Utility 22

Flush with success, you take a deep breath and relocate for your next attack.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Martial
Free Action Personal
Trigger: An enemy marked by you is reduced to 0 hit points
Effect: You can spend a healing surge and shift 3 squares.

Steadfast Stance — Fighter Utility 22

Standing resolutely, you let nothing cause you to falter.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, when an attack causes you to take an effect that a save can end, you can make a saving throw against that effect as an immediate reaction.

Fighters and Combat

One might assume that characters who use powers called brute strike and ruthless slaughter revel in combat, delighting in the violence and mayhem they spread, but that doesn't have to be true of your fighter character. For many of the iconic fighters of literature, war and combat are a burden they hope to be able to lay down someday. These heroes find no joy in killing, just a weariness that grows greater as the cycle of violence expands to swallow more and more of their friends and loved ones. How does your fighter feel about facing combat encounters? The need for violence is plain to see, but do you hope for an end to such violent times? Or are you numb to it—at least until the death of someone you care about awakens you to the grim reality?

Unyielding — Fighter Utility 22

Pain just goads you to greater heights of heroism.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: You are hit by an attack
Effect: You spend two healing surges and restore your hit points to their maximum value.
Special: If you are a dragonborn, you also gain a +1 power bonus to attack rolls and all defenses until the end of your next turn.

Victor's Stance — Fighter Utility 22

You gain a surge of confidence and vigor each time a foe falls before you.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, each time you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points, you can use a free action to spend a healing surge, make a saving throw, or both. You gain a bonus to the saving throw equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Level 23 Encounter Exploits

You thrash your opponent, leaving him barely able to move.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a two-handed weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is slowed and weakened until the end of your next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier, and you knock the target prone.

Harrowing Hammer — Fighter Attack 23

Your weapon crashes down on your adversary, forcing nearby enemies to acknowledge the threat you pose.

Encounter ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a two-handed weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage, and each enemy adjacent to the target is marked until the start of your next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Meticulous Stab — Fighter Attack 23

Your precision allows you to strike at a tiny hole in your foe's armor.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Weapon: If you're wielding a spear or a light blade, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee 1
Trigger: An enemy adjacent to you hits an ally with a melee attack
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you can shift 2 squares and must end adjacent to the target.
Effect: The ally takes only half damage from the triggering attack.

Weaponmaster's Lure — Fighter Attack 23

You make a passing attack, throwing your foe off balance. With a shove, you send him stumbling away as you switch positions with him.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage per attack. If one attack hits, you can swap places with the target. If both attacks hit, you can swap places with the target and slide it 3 squares. If you have combat advantage against the target, each attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Ballista Charge — Fighter Attack 25

Like a bolt fired from a ballista, you hurtle forward, transfixing your foe.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends). Make a secondary attack against the target.
Weapon: If you're wielding a spear, the target is also dazed (save ends).
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you knock the target prone.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Earthquake Smash — Fighter Attack 25

With a thunderous blow, you beat your adversary to the ground and send shock waves through the earth. Those waves toss other enemies aside.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is knocked prone and dazed until the end of your next turn. Make a secondary attack.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a mace, the primary attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Secondary Target: Each enemy within 2 squares of the primary target
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: Strength modifier damage, and you knock the secondary target prone.

Fighter's Resurgence — Fighter Attack 25

You brutalize your enemy and take heart from your prowess.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength + 2 vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: If you have used all your encounter attack powers, you regain the use of a fighter encounter attack power you have used during this encounter.

Marking Barrage — Fighter Attack 25

With a volley of precise attacks, you wound nearby adversaries, showing them that this fight will end badly for them if they fail to take you down quickly.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage. If you have combat advantage against the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The target is marked until the end of the encounter, until you are knocked unconscious, or until another mark supersedes this one.

Halfling Fighters

Small but nimble, halfling fighters make up in agility what they might lack in strength. When peaceful halfling communities face danger they can't avoid or deflect, they rely on skilled warriors who use hit-and-run tactics, quick wits, and quicker blades to drive off foes. The halfling bounder paragon path (page 28) is the consummate example of the halfling fighter's tradition.

Tiefling Fighters

Tiefling is the only race in the Player's Handbook that doesn't gain a +2 bonus to one of the ability scores most commonly used by fighters. Even so, tiefling fighters manage to put their innate powers and proclivities to good use as fighters. The tiefling warfiend paragon path (page 35) represents the highest achievements of an infernal tradition dating from ancient Bael Turath, but even tiefling fighters who don't adopt that path channel their infernal wrath to good effect on the field of battle.

BRIAN HAGAN

Ruthless Slaughter Fighter Attack 25

Without pity, you butcher a foe already at a disadvantage, provoking your other enemies.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon

Attack: Strength + 2 vs. AC
Hit: 6[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: Each enemy within 3 squares of you, other than the target, is marked until the end of your next turn. If the attack reduced the target to 0 hit points, those enemies are instead marked until the end of the encounter, until you are knocked unconscious, or until another mark supersedes this one.

Transfixing Provocation Fighter Attack 25

Your remorseless and skilled attack wounds flesh and confidence, giving you a lasting edge against your enemy.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 6[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The target is marked until the end of the encounter, until you are knocked unconscious, or until another mark supersedes this one. Until this mark ends, the target grants combat advantage to you.

SIGNATURE WEAPON

Great fighters are often known by the weapons they wield. Your fighter character might use many different weapons over the course of his or her adventuring career, but there's no reason any of those weapons has to be just a mundane +3 flaming greatsword. From the first weapon you use at the start of the campaign to the mighty +6 artifact that deals the death blow to the campaign's ultimate villain, each weapon can be the stuff of legends.

Special weapons are often distinguished by their makers. A blade crafted in the infernal forges of Bael Turath, a spear hardened with white dragon breath by the smiths of Arkhosia, or a hammer crafted by an exarch of Moradin in the vaults of Celestia are weapons worthy of a hero. A weapon that you made yourself might be the greatest of all.

Other weapons are noteworthy because other heroes—or villains—wielded them in the past. Did your sword belong to an eladrin general of Cendriane? Was your axe used to hew the head of the mighty fire titan Kurthmaug from his shoulders? Was your flail the favored weapon of a gnoll chieftain you killed?

Finally, a weapon's construction or appearance can make it distinctive. Perhaps your sword is crafted from a single piece of strange metal, carved rather than forged, but still terribly effective. Your spear might be tipped with the tooth or claw of an ancient dragon. Or the haft of your mace might be the bone of a giant, bound with silver bands engraved with Dwarven script.

Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. If you have combat advantage against the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Last Stand

Brandis stood in the doorway and waited. A slow breath did nothing to calm his pounding heart, and he emptied his lungs with a whispered prayer to the Raven Queen: "Not today, Dark Lady. Please."

He listened to the pounding of the demon's hooves drawing near and to the frantic rhythm of his companions' feet as they fled behind him. If he could buy them a little time, maybe they could get to safety. Maybe Verna wouldn't die.

The demon rounded the corner and bellowed in triumph. Its roar assaulted his ears, shook the stone beneath his feet, and blasted at his face, but Brandis held his ground. Lowering its head, the demon charged.

With a roar of his own, Brandis ran to meet the onrushing demon. He let his fury and his despair carry him forward like a crashing wave of steel. He threw himself down under the demon's curving horn, then with all his strength brought his blade over his head to slash across its neck. Acrid blood sprayed over him, but the demon didn't fall. Howling, it swatted at Brandis with a massive fist, sending him staggering backward.

"At least I know I got your attention," Brandis muttered, gripping his sword more tightly. He couldn't hear his friends anymore, just the pounding of blood in his ears.

Level 29 Daily Exploits

Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Note: The giantslayer, a paragon path open to fighters as well as rangers, is described on page 62.

Avenging Slayer

"Justice is hard to come by. I'm here to make sure you pay for your crimes!"

Prerequisite: Fighter

Beyond a few safe havens, the world is an unforgiving land filled with cruelty, terror, and profound evil. The blameless are slaughtered and the works of civilization are torn down, sometimes in a bid for conquest, but just as often out of sheer brutality. Destructive monsters regularly leave behind survivors, and a few of these take up the sword or the axe. These brave souls seek not to put past wrongs right, but to prevent others from suffering as they have, and to slake a thirst for vengeance. In this way, heroism is often forged in darkness.

At some point in your life, your course was set, your path laid before you. Maybe your career as a grim hero began the moment you or those close to you fell victim to a fate you were powerless to prevent–your life forever changed by one act of depravity. Perhaps instead, as you have adventured, you've witnessed too many appalling acts, seen too many innocents buried, or found wickedness in too many shadows. Whatever the case, you now see yourself as the only one who can stand between the helpless few and the predatory hordes. You know no respite exists for those who would protect the weak. Even so, you willingly take on that task.

As an avenging slayer, your brutal efficiency makes you a menacing figure no enemy can safely ignore. You strike fear into your enemies to protect your allies and those who have less power than you. You punish corruption with merciless retribution, defining yourself as a righteous executioner.

Avenging Slayer Path Features

Slayer's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain combat advantage against an enemy marked by you until the end of your next turn.

Bloodied Edge (11th level): When you have combat advantage against a bloodied enemy, you gain a bonus to weapon damage rolls equal to your Charisma modifier.

Brutal Justice (16th level): When you reduce a target marked by you to 0 hit points, you gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

Avenging Slayer Exploits

Miss: Half damage, and no ongoing damage or penalty to attack rolls.

Dreadnought

"You can't slow me down, much less stop me."

Prerequisite: Fighter

World-shaking battles were fought between the tieflings of Bael Turath and the dragonborn of Arkhosia. The deeds and exploits of those conflicts resound still in epic story and song. One such anthem is Lament of the Dreadnought, a somber song that recounts the final march of Jagannash the Unstoppable, a great dragonborn hero.

A doughty warrior famed for his ability to fight on no matter the injuries he sustained, Jagannash accumulated a number of legends. He withstood the full fury of an angry blue dragon, shrugged off the lashes of a pit fiend's whip, and even killed a tiefling warlock who had hurled him through Hell. The Lament, though, speaks of his final battle and all he achieved in the last offensive against the tiefling empire. Jagannash felled a full legion of devils, strangled their succubus sorceress commander with his bare hands, and hammered his way through the walls of a fortress. He was climbing the tower that housed the tiefling war room when the earth rebelled and swallowed the citadel and all within it. It is whispered that Jagannash fights there still, despite the centuries. Such is his resilience.

It is from Jagannash's example that other fighters who follow a similar creed take inspiration. The mind-body practices of these warriors are kept and taught by a few masters, dragonborn and otherwise. Some even develop these talents without formal training.

As a dreadnought, you are an inexorable force of destruction. You turn aside weapons with nothing more than your force of will. Fire cannot touch you; lightning cannot blind you. The core of your might grows from your ability to detach your mind from your body, to disassociate yourself from the pain of your wounds and press onward to keep fighting when others would succumb. You attain this state through discipline and a commitment. All who attempt to stand against you are bound to fall.

Dreadnought Path Features

Dreadnought Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to make an attack, you gain resist 10 to all damage until the start of your next turn.

Unfailing Resources (11th level): Your maximum hit point value increases by 10.

As a free action, you can take 10 damage to save automatically against an effect that a save can end. You must have at least 10 hit points to use this ability, and you can't reduce this damage by any means.

Critical Hardening (16th): When you score a critical hit with a weapon, you gain resist 10 to all damage until the end of your next turn.

Effect: You gain resist 5 to all damage until the start of your next turn.

Dread Reaper

"All things die, friend. It's my job to make sure you do, too."

Prerequisite: Fighter

Countless fighting styles issue from dedicated masters—unimpeachable figures who devote their lives to perfecting combat maneuvers that are carried onto the battlefield by their disciples. But not all techniques evolve from the teachings of these paragons of the warrior's art. Some methods come from origins far less noble. The path of the dread reaper is one such shadowy road.

According to legend, the first dread reaper was Gulkanon, a human paladin of the Raven Queen, stripped of his station and power for offending his god. Even without the connection to the deity he had long revered, Gulkanon was unwilling surrender his place as her champion. He turned to a new avenue of military study, building upon the techniques of savage and fell races in the world—orcs, goblins, ogres, and trolls. He took the crude strokes of these brutish creatures and refined them, developing a range of exploits that focused his strength into a vehicle of appalling carnage. As he grew more confident in his newfound skills, he took the title "dread reaper." He set out to send souls to his estranged patron in hopes of rekindling the bond that had been broken. Whether he succeeded is lost to time, but his legacy remains.

Some dread reapers serve the Raven Queen, and small cults of such warriors can be found who are willing to train promising candidates. Others who have this training, however, lack the will or discipline to find true favor with the god. A few stretch her tenets to accommodate their own excesses. The Raven Queen's vigilant servants have been known to hunt and slay the worst of those offenders.

Whether you had an affinity for death-dealing or found inspiration in the actions of another, you turned to the techniques of the dread reaper. The training offers you a special array of fighting maneuvers that emphasize your already impressive proficiency with two-handed weapons. Your training transformed you from a competent warrior to a terrifying force of destruction. Rather than minding your defenses, you favor wreaking havoc in combat. Enemies can't help but notice your destructive potential and ignore you at their peril. You can perform astonishing attacks, sweeping through your foes and laying them open with your steel.

Dread Reaper Path Features

Reaper's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to make an attack with a two-handed weapon, each enemy adjacent to you takes damage equal to your Strength modifier.

Impending Slaughter (11th level): If your opportunity attack bloodies an enemy marked by you, you can knock the enemy prone.

Reaping Cleave (16th level): When you hit with a melee basic attack using a two-handed weapon, an enemy adjacent to you takes damage equal to your Strength modifier. When you hit with the cleave power, all enemies adjacent to you take damage equal to your Strength modifier.

Dread Reaper Exploits

Reaping Lunge — Dread Reaper Attack 11

Standard Action Melee weapon + 1 reach
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. Until the start of your next turn, if the target makes an attack that doesn't include you as a target, you can shift 1 square and make a melee basic attack against the target as an immediate interrupt.
Weapon: If you're wielding a two-handed weapon, the attack and the melee basic attack both deal extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Reaper's Warning — Dread Reaper Utility 12

Sweeping your weapon in a threatening arc, you force your foes to reassess their tactics.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 2
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Effect: The target is marked until the end of the encounter, until you are knocked unconscious, or until another mark supersedes this one.

Blood Harvest — Dread Reaper Attack 20

Your series of vicious swipes leaves your enemies bleeding and in a bad spot.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends). If the target moves on its turn, it cannot make a saving throw against the ongoing damage.
Weapon: If you're wielding a two-handed weapon, the target instead takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and no ongoing damage.

Dwarven Defender

"The wrath of Hell can't move me, but I can hammer you into place!"

Prerequisites: Dwarf, fighter

Your people defied the titans and giants. Unity has sustained them, and tenaciousness has upheld them; traditions preserving these values serve them well. They stand unmoved and unconquered, like the mountains, against orcs and goblins and dragons.

Dwarf soldiers are unmatched in their fighting prowess and loyalty to one another. War stories hold that a single dwarf foot soldier is the match of any two warriors of another race and the same skill. Two such soldiers are worth five similarly skilled enemies. When the enemy forces are composed of little more than savages, dwarven armies break them like stone channels water.

All the institutions of dwarven society have soldiers loyal to the cause. Doughty fighters serve king or lord, guild or business, deity or church, or a simple creed. A few serve the almighty coin, selling their time and axes for wealth. Time-honored fighting techniques teach a dwarf warrior to use his or her racial abilities to the fullest and to use fine weapons and heavy armor. When the dogs of war are loosed, dwarf soldiers hold the line.

You are a master of dwarven fighting arts, relying on loyal allies as much as your own courage and resilience. Your expertise lies in defensive maneuvers and battle-line tactics. You know how to take advantage of holes in enemy lines. Allies come to rely on you as the center of the squad. They take heart in your steadfastness and your ability to break the defenses of your enemies.

Dwarven Defender Features

Defensive Action (11th level): Whenever you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain a +2 bonus to your AC and Fortitude until the end of your next turn.

Stalwart Defender (11th level): Whenever you are adjacent to at least one ally, you and adjacent allies gain a +1 bonus to AC, and all adjacent allies can reduce the distance they are moved by any pull, push, or slide by 1 square.

Roots of the Earth (16th level): The Stand Your Ground racial trait can reduce the distance you are moved by 5 squares.

Dwarven Defender Exploits

Press Forward — Dwarven Defender Attack 11

Knocking your enemies back, you step into the gap.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 1 square. You can then shift 1 square into the space that the target occupied.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a pick, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Forge-Fire Heart — Dwarven Defender Utility 12

By looking to your own defense, you instill adjacent allies with courage.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you gain a +4 power bonus to all defenses, and any ally adjacent to you gains a +2 power bonus to Will.

Keystone Collapse — Dwarven Defender Attack 20

Your strike hammers your foe and causes him to flail about, toppling nearby adversaries in the confusion.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push enemies adjacent to the target 1 square and knock them prone.
Weapon: If you're wielding an axe, a hammer, or a pick, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier.
Miss: Half damage, and you push enemies adjacent to the target 1 square.

Halfling Bounder

"Let my size fool you, and that'll be your last mistake."

Prerequisites: Halfling, fighter

The world is wide and wild, and the nomadic halflings are small folk. Deftness and quick wits have allowed them to survive nonetheless. As they have done so, they have come to rely on wily and daring warriors to protect them. Even settled halflings maintain a soldierly class to see to their interests among other, and larger, civilized folk.

The fighting tradition of the halfling bounder favors halfling traits. Bounders are practiced in hit-and-run strategies and pack tactics. They spring about the battlefield, avoiding the attacks of their bigger enemies, striking from unexpected angles, and making harrying assaults. Bounders willingly lay down their lives to allow those they care for to survive and escape danger.

Most wandering halfling clans have a number of bounders who serve as scouts. These warriors help keep the traveling band carefree—they put down dangers before the threat becomes dire. Able and willing halflings can easily learn the techniques of the bounder. More than a few put this expertise to use outside halfling communities, satisfying their natural curiosity while protecting friends and common folk.

You are one such champion of the halfling people. A flashing blade in hand, you leap about, laughing as bumbling, oversized fools trip over themselves trying to stop you. You've learned to use your small size to see the battle from a different angle, enabling you to easily spot openings others miss, hounding your enemies and taking every advantage the battle offers. If your skill comes up short for some reason, your luck more than makes up for it.

STEVE BELLEDIN

Halfling Bounder Features

Shifty Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to shift a number of squares equal to your Dexterity modifier, instead of taking an extra action.

Chance Retaliation (11th level): If you use your second chance racial power and the result of the second roll is a miss, you can make a melee basic attack against the attacker as a free action.

Move the Battle (16th level): Whenever you make an attack because of the Combat Challenge class feature and hit, you can slide the target 1 square and then shift 1 square.

Halfling Bounder Powers

Too Close for Comfort Halfling Bounder Attack 11

You and your biting blade stay on your enemy's heels.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. Until the end of your next turn, if the target moves, you can move up to your speed as a free action, ending your movement adjacent to the target.

Switching Leap Halfling Bounder Utility 12

You throw your body in front of an incoming attack, knocking your ally out of the way.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee 1
Trigger: An adjacent ally is hit by a melee attack
Target: The triggering ally
Effect: You slide the target 2 squares and can shift into the space the target occupied. You become the target of the triggering attack.

Quicksilver Lunge Halfling Bounder Attack 20

Spotting a weak point, you quickly lunge and strike.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Inner Dragon

"The fury of the dragon seethes in my blood!"

Prerequisites: Dragonborn, fighter

Dragonborn issue from the same spiritual line as mighty dragons. Since the earliest days, dragonborn have nurtured their raw fury into a fighting spirit and a proud martial tradition. The empire of Arkhosia formed from these roots, and it expanded at times based as much on the power of its military force as on its civilizing influence.

In Arkhosia, dragonborn served dragons in numerous capacities, from vizier to archmage, oracle to valet. The most important roles performed by dragonborn, however, were as agents in a dangerous world or as defenders of the homeland. Soldierly ways passed through the generations, as did the ability to tap one's inner draconic nature.

Particular dragonborn masters hone body, mind, and spirit through martial practice to perfectly tap into the inner dragon. Some come to this knowledge on their own; others gain it from teachers eager to train younger dragonborn in ancient traditions. Only a few master the techniques well enough to become legendary heroes or villains.

BRIAN HAGAN

Whatever your personal history, the untamed blood of dragons flows in your veins. Your veneration of your warrior ancestors has manifested as a supernatural tie to this heritage. You hear the call of the dragon within. Its ferocity courses through you. Woe to those who harm you, for the shedding of your blood rouses the ire of your draconic heart.

Inner Dragon Features

Breath Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action while you are bloodied, you can use your dragon breath racial power as a free action, even if you've already used it during this encounter.

Dragonborn Fury (11th level): While you are bloodied, your racial bonus to attack rolls is +2, instead of +1.

Eternal Breath (16th level): Whenever you hit a target with dragon breath, the target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends). The ongoing damage is the same damage type as your dragon breath.

Inner Dragon Exploits

Dragon Blast Inner Dragon Attack 11

As a wound opens, your boiling blood blinds nearby enemies.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Close blast 3
Trigger: An attack damages you
Target: Each creature in blast
Attack: Constitution + 4 vs. Reflex
Increase to Constitution + 6 vs. Reflex at 21st level.
Hit: 2d6 + Constitution modifier damage, and the target is blinded until the end of your next turn.

Ancestral Manifestation Inner Dragon Utility 12

Drawing vitality from your draconic legacy, you channel the blood rage of your ancestors.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must not be bloodied.
Effect: Your hit points fall to your bloodied value, and you gain temporary hit points equal to the hit points you lost by using this power. Until you have no temporary hit points, you gain resistance to all damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

Dragonbreath Strike Inner Dragon Attack 20

Each time you swing your weapon, you release a blast of your dragon breath.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, when you deal damage with a melee attack against an adjacent enemy, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Constitution modifier. The extra damage is the same damage type as your dragon breath.

Knight Protector

"Nerath might have fallen, but the need for just warriors who abide by a code of honor remains still."

Prerequisite: Fighter

In this age of darkness, covered by the shadow of fallen empires, never has there been a greater need for those who champion the causes of the innocent. Not since the fall of Nerath has a coherent force of warriors been guided by honor and justice in all that they do. Bold knights who fought for King Elidyr of Nerath are long lost, and the honor code to which they adhered is a curiosity of history to most. However, some see the need for such nobility today, and they try to live up to the standards set by righteous soldiers long dead. These modern fighters name themselves the knight protectors.

Some of those who call themselves knights could equal Nerath's storied fighters in might and zeal. Without a code, though, who can say with certainty if the new knights can match bygone honor? Without a fellowship, how can like-minded individuals work toward similar ends and police their own? Indeed, a number of those who claim to be knights—and even a few who call themselves knight protectors—are anything but counterparts to the admirable warriors of old. Far too many use their self-claimed title for profligate or brutal gain.

A loose confederation of knight protectors acts as an organization for those who claim this path. Its members are pledged to look out for one another and to keep the principles of the order. Courage, industriousness, respect, courtesy, and the glory of battle are all guiding principles. Those who fail to uphold these standards quickly find themselves at odds with other knight protectors.

Taking up the sword and cloak of a knight protector, you see it as your task to emulate the knights of old. A warrior and something of a leader, you abide by the knight protector code for personal glory and out of respect for the past. In life, you strive to be noble, honest, and fair. When you and your comrades come under attack, you are at the forefront, testing and displaying your courage. Even if smaller minds mock you as an idealist, you know you fight with dignity and purpose.

Knight Protector Path Features

Protector's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, one ally within 5 squares of you gains a +4 bonus to AC until the end of your next turn.

Devoted Protector (11th level): When an enemy marked by you attacks an ally adjacent to you, you can slide the ally 1 square as an immediate interrupt.

Knight's Focus (16th level): When you can make an attack because of the Combat Challenge class feature or an opportunity attack, you can instead grant adjacent allies a +2 bonus to AC until the start of your next turn as an immediate interrupt.

Knight Protector Exploits

Protector's Strike — Knight Protector Attack 11

You smite your chosen opponent, wreaking vengeance for its attack on an ally.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature marked by you
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage. If the target attacked any of your allies since the end of your last turn, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Knightly Bulwark — Knight Protector Utility 12

At your beckoning, an ally uses you as a shield against danger.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One ally in burst you can see
Effect: The target can shift into a square adjacent to you as a free action and gains a +2 power bonus to AC until the start of your next turn.

Blood Justice — Knight Protector Attack 20

Your foe sends an ally staggering, and you instantly drive that enemy back with a devastating smite.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee weapon
Trigger: An adjacent enemy bloodies an ally with a melee attack
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 1 square. You can shift into the space it occupied.
Miss: Half damage, and no slide.
Effect: The ally gains a +2 power bonus to AC until the start of your next turn.

Polearm Master

"Victory is easier to achieve when your reach is longer."

Prerequisite: Fighter

The versatile polearm is easier to manufacture than a sword, and often easier to use effectively. In its simplest form, the polearm is a longspear—a short blade on the end of a long shaft. Since reach is an advantage, even the humble longspear is an effective weapon in unpracticed hands. In the hands of a master, its deadliness can be unparalleled.

More complex polearms offer even greater rewards on the battlefield and off. They combine the best aspects of spear and blade or axe, allowing the user control and damage unmatched by other weapons. It's little wonder that whole units of soldiers use polearms in war, and that city watches use these weapons to protect citizens, as well as keep them in line.

Because polearms are so common and easily crafted, learning to use one is part of most basic military instruction. Advanced skill isn't so easy to obtain, but the trials of regular combat serve as well as, if not better than, the training ground. The ability to use a polearm against a variety of foes can seldom be learned through the rigors of soldierly education.

ADAM GILLESPIE

Through your adventures, you have mastered the polearm. You prefer a weapon that extends your options and your reach, understanding that it's better to keep monsters at a distance. With such a weapon at your disposal, you not only deal wounding blows to your adversaries and cut wide arcs through multiple foes, you also better protect your allies by commanding more of your surroundings.

Polearm Master Features

Lunging Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to increase the reach of your reach weapons by 1 square until the start of your next turn, instead of taking an extra action.

Forceful Reach (11th level): If you use a reach weapon to deliver a weapon power that pushes, pulls, or slides a target, you increase the distance of the forced movement by 1 square.

Longarm Grasp (16th level): If you're wielding a reach weapon, whenever an enemy within 2 squares of you and marked by you shifts or makes an attack that doesn't include you as a target, you can make a melee basic attack against that enemy as an immediate interrupt.

Polearm Master Exploits

Leveraging Strike — Polearm Master Attack 11

You use your weapon to move your target where you want.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a two-handed reach weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Miss: Half damage, and no slide.

Reaching Stance — Polearm Master Utility 12

You take a wide stance that allows you to lunge at careless foes.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance, Weapon
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be wielding a two-handed reach weapon.
Effect: Until the stance ends, you can make opportunity attacks against enemies within your weapon's reach.

Polearm Sweep — Polearm Master Attack 20

Whirling your weapon, you strike all foes within your reach.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 2
Requirement: You must be wielding a two-handed reach weapon.
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Ravager

"For Kord!"

Prerequisites: Fighter, Battlerager Vigor class feature

A ravager is the quintessential battlerager, a savage and fearless fighter. Such a warrior thrives on rage and bloodlust, literally chewing on a shield's rim or weapon's haft to diffuse wild energy when a promised clash is too long in coming. When combat is joined, a ravager rushes headlong into the fray, leaving a trail of bleeding foes and twitching corpses behind.

You scoff at disciplined practice, romantic devotion to a code, and effete arms such as rapiers. A dedicated killer, you rely on the force of your weapon and the rush that battle gives you. Some might describe you as an uncultured lout, but you laugh at them as well. When they cower before the horrors of the night and the wild places, you stand fast, ready to whet your weapon on your enemies.

Being a ravager means that every skirmish is a chance for blood and glory. It's an opportunity to win fame, the favor of the gods, and maybe more than one form of immortality. You throw yourself into every fight as if it were your last, leaping fearlessly among your foes where you can wreak the most havoc. With your reckless bravery, you bring fame and honor to yourself, your people, your ancestors, and the gods who watch over you. And if the gods can't be bothered—to Hell with them too.

RON SPEARS

Ravager Path Features

Ravaging Action (11th): You can spend an action point to make a melee basic attack against each adjacent enemy, instead of taking an extra action. You gain a bonus to each damage roll equal to your Constitution modifier.

Strive to Slay (11th): Each time you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points, you gain a +2 bonus to the next melee attack roll you make before the end of your next turn.

Marauding Fury (16th): Once per round, when you miss with a melee attack while you are bloodied, you can make a melee basic attack against the same target as a free action.

Ravager Exploits

Driven Before You — Ravager Attack 11

The savagery of your attack makes your enemies recoil.

Encounter ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push each enemy within 3 squares of you, other than the target, 1 square.

Blood-Soaked Fury — Ravager Utility 12

You pause, wipe the blood from your lips, and rush headlong back into the fight.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Stance
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: An enemy bloodies you with a melee attack
Effect: Until the stance ends, you take a –2 penalty to all defenses, but you gain a +2 power bonus to melee attack rolls. Whenever you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points, you regain hit points equal to your Constitution modifier.

Marked Savagery — Ravager Attack 20

Your vicious attack opens a gaping wound, and your focus on the enemy prevents him from tending to it.

Daily ✦ Invigorating, Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and ongoing 15 damage (save ends). Until the target is not marked by you, it takes a –2 penalty to saving throws against the ongoing damage.

Shield Adept

"The shield in my left hand speaks of my survival. With my sword, it whispers of your defeat."

Prerequisite: Fighter

Storied history follows the shield, a warrior's best friend and an implement of honor and identity in a fighter's panoply. A stout shield can turn aside mundane swords and arrows, as well as monstrous venom sprays and dragon fire. Only a steadfast ally is better for covering the flank while you're taking it to the enemy. Nothing is better to protect that ally.

Throughout time, the use of the shield has defined military tactics. In phalanx formations, common among many folk, one soldier stands alongside another, each relying on a comrade's shield for added protection. During a charge, a shield aids in pushing the enemy back or even down. Warriors in a unit of skilled shield bearers can place their shields together in an overarching arrangement, completely protecting all within the shield shell from outside attack. This is said to have originally been a dwarven trick, a "boulder formation."

The Arkhosian warrior-philosopher Khomagar said, "The shield is the law of the battlefield, protecting the soldier as lordly and righteous edicts protect the empire." Phalanx fighters from many cultures suffer dishonor or worse for losing their shields in battle, since such a loss weakens the unit as a whole. Numerous peoples maintain a tradition of bringing dead warriors home on their shields, and burying a shield with its owner. Especially among dwarves, a broken shield is seen as a symbol of loss or corruption.

The shield is even more important to a small-unit fighter who relies upon it to protect his or her few allies. To the wise soldier who fulfills such duties, a shield is as much a weapon as a defensive item.

You know these facts well. Through your countless skirmishes, you have mastered the use of your one-handed weapon and shield. Such is your skill that those who pay too much attention to one of your armaments inevitably suffer punishment from the other.

Shield Adept Features

Covering Action (11th level): While using a shield, you can spend an action point to gain superior cover against ranged and area attacks until the end of your next turn, instead of gaining an extra action.

Shield Bearer's Payback (11th level): Each time an enemy adjacent to you attacks an ally with a melee attack, you gain a cumulative +2 bonus to your next melee damage roll.

Shielded Stamina (16th level): While using a shield, you add its shield bonus to your Fortitude defense.

Shield Adept Exploits

Sudden Shield Bash — Shield Adept Attack 11

Your foe chooses to ignore you, receiving a solid blow from your shield as thanks.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Interrupt Melee 1
Trigger: An adjacent enemy marked by you shifts or makes an attack that doesn't include you as a target
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength + 4 vs. Fortitude
Increase to Strength + 6 vs. Fortitude at 21st level.
Hit: The target is stunned until the end of your next turn.

Shield Wall — Shield Adept Utility 12

Readying your shield, you prepare to defend yourself and nearby allies from incoming fire.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Effect: Until the stance ends, you and allies adjacent to you gain cover against ranged and area attacks.

Reverberating Shield — Shield Adept Attack 20

You turn and shove your shield into your foe's attack, causing a numbing vibration.

Daily ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Melee 1
Trigger: An adjacent enemy misses you or an ally with a melee attack
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: The target is dazed and weakened (save ends both).

ADAM GILLESPIE

Shock Trooper

"Move fast, people! And hit them hard!"

Prerequisite: Fighter

Nerath was a just nation, it is said, but it would be a lie to say that it was built solely through negotiation, the spread of knowledge, and cultural influence. No, as any historian can tell you, Nerath rose on the splintered shields and shattered blades of its soldiers. When an object of conquest doesn't bend, it must be made to bow.

That was the job of Nerath's legions. Those armies consisted primarily of highly trained heavy infantry supplemented by heavy cavalry—the famed knight protectors. Nerath's military traditions were derived from older sources. In what any dragonborn would claim to be fine dragonborn style, a special auxiliary force of devastating light infantry led many of Nerath's assaults. These were the empire's shock troopers. Military historians liken them to similar troops among other cultures and peoples, especially elves and dragonborn.

The typical shock trooper wore chainmail over leather, and carried a longsword and short sword, or dual short swords. The trooper was trained to break the line of an enemy force, moving quickly to kill and wound as many enemy soldiers as possible. If a trooper broke through the enemy line, the job then became direct assault on enemy command positions.

Although Nerath no longer exists as an empire, more than a few of its traditions linger. Numerous fighters and schools of soldiery carry on shock trooper traditions. This is to say nothing of the similar soldiers among other peoples, such as dwarf assault fighters. Any warrior who wants training in this brutal and mobile assault style can readily find it.

You are part of this sudden strike tradition of fighting. Unlike those warriors who form battle lines, you move among your enemies, defying them to strike you down and forcing them to pursue you. Your daring onslaughts confuse and astonish your adversaries. Even so, your guard is never down, especially in your favorite place: the center of a throng of foes.

Shock Trooper Path Features

Footwork Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain a +2 bonus to AC and Reflex until the end of your next turn. If a melee attack misses you while this bonus applies, you can shift 1 square as a free action.

Deadly Soldier (11th level): When you wield an off-hand weapon, increase the weapon's damage die by one size.

Quicker Death (16th level): Once per round, when you have combat advantage against a target, you can add your Dexterity modifier to a melee damage roll against that target.

Shock Trooper Exploits

Shocking Twister — Shock Trooper Attack 11

Slipping around your enemy, you deliver a series of exact stabs, leaving the foe reeling from three wounds.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength + 2 vs. AC (main weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. Make a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC (off-hand weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you can shift 1 square. Make a tertiary attack against the target.
Tertiary Attack: Strength vs. AC (main or off-hand weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, you can shift 1 square, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Assault Footwork — Shock Trooper Utility 12

With the poise of a seasoned sailor on a storm-tossed deck, you hold your weapons ready to parry, while remaining coiled to dodge.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, once during each of your turns when you miss with a melee attack, you can either shift 1 square or gain a +1 power bonus to AC until the end of your next turn.

Shocking Skewer — Shock Trooper Attack 20

You grab your foe and yank her toward you, driving your waiting blade in the opposite direction.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding an off-hand weapon and have a hand free.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength + 5 vs. Fortitude
Hit: You grab the target. Make a secondary attack against it.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

Tiefling Warfiend

"My rage might be justified, but it still burns within the heart of a devil."

Prerequisites: Tiefling, fighter

The mixing of devils and mortals created the tieflings, infusing them forever with tainted fiendish blood. But in that corruption is power. Like any power, it can be tapped for good or ill.

Long have tieflings used the devilish energy burning in their spirits. In its most basic form, this infernal might allows the tiefling to channel anger and a desire for vengeance into attacks more vehement than normal. In ages past, however, tiefling warriors learned to channel their negative emotions into tools for war.

Fallen Bael Turath had whole cadres of mighty fighters who could funnel fiendish fury into their military maneuvers. Despite the loss of the empire, some of these devilish fighters survived. Their fighting customs were passed on, lasting through the centuries. Today, a few tiefling soldiers offer training that allows would-be warfiends to control the devil inside. Others, who must do without such guidance, find that the inner fiend is best directed into violence lest it pollute other aspects of life.

ADAM GILLESPIE

So many of your kind fear the taint lurking in their soul, but you realize it is merely a tool at your disposal. Without needing to embrace evil, you nurtured your infernal aspect and mastered it. You've coupled deadly skill at arms with the dread power of your heritage, helping you to defend your allies and to make your foes pay for daring to stand against you. Now the corruption within you serves your aims, coating your weapon in baleful fire and allowing you to consume the fleeting energy of dying foes.

Tiefling Warfiend Features

Infernal Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you regain the use of the infernal wrath racial power if you have used it during this encounter.

Hellfire Retribution (11th level): Whenever an enemy marked by you makes an attack that doesn't include you as a target, that enemy takes fire damage equal to 3 + your Constitution modifier.

Burning Opportunism (16th level): Whenever you make an attack because of the Combat Challenge class feature or an opportunity attack, you deal fire damage equal to 3 + your Constitution modifier if you hit.

Tiefling Warfiend Exploits

Hellfire Reprisal Tiefling Warfiend Attack 11

As you strike, your anger at your foe's attack on an ally manifests as baleful fire on your weapon.

Encounter ✦ Fire, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If the target has hit an ally with an attack during this encounter, the attack deals fire damage equal to 3 + your Constitution modifier.

Infernal Resurgence Tiefling Warfiend Utility 12

You revitalize yourself with the shreds of a defeated foe's spirit.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You reduce an enemy to 0 hit points
Effect: You regain hit points as if you had spent a healing surge.

Burning Wrath Smite Tiefling Warfiend Attack 20

You pour all your hate and anger into a single attack, leaving your stricken opponent aflame.

Daily ✦ Fire, Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).

CHAPTER 2

Ranger

"Keeping a pet lets me bring the wild with me wherever I go. I like it. Keeps me warm inside. Oh, and the wild packs one hell of a bite."

RANGERS ARE people of the wild frontier. They are bold wanderers who face the dangers that keep common folk living within walled cities and traveling along well-used roads. Every ranger is also a killer who uses terrain, keen senses, and hunt-honed strikes to end threats quickly. Where rangers differ is in their execution.

Blade and bow are typical ranger tools, but a few rangers forge a deeper alliance with the wilderness. Such a ranger calls a beast as a friend and a weapon. The affinity for a beast might grow from one of many roots. Legend speaks of those raised among wild animals, as well as of those with a supernatural affinity for wild creatures. For enigmatic reasons, Melora blesses a few with such a connection to animals. More often, however, a young would-be ranger befriends a beast or raises it from pup to warrior.

This chapter presents and supports such rangers. It also provides other sorts of rangers with ways to shape their capabilities. In it, you'll find the following:

- New Ranger Build: The beastmaster ranger build lets you bring to life the fantasy archetype of hero and pet as a fighting unit.
- New Class Feature: Every beastmaster needs, well, a beast to master, and that's what the Beast Mastery class feature is all about. You can choose a beast companion from one of eight categories designed to fit the style of your character.
- New Ranger Powers: With a specialized build such as the beastmaster, a whole new assortment of exploits is required. Rangers who favor the blade or the bow have new power options in this chapter, too.
- New Paragon Paths: Focus your training in one of a dozen ways, even shoring up quirky ranger techniques such as throwing or using a crossbow. Focus on slaying a particular sort of enemy, absorb the magic of the lands you walk, or run with the pack.

NEW RANGER BUILD

To supplement the ranger builds described in the Player's Handbook, this chapter presents one new ranger build: the beastmaster.

Beastmaster Ranger

A deadly hunter, you specialize in double-teaming your enemies with the aid of a beast companion. Your beast is an extension of you, and thereby it is an invaluable member of your group. No other is needed to help you flank your quarry. Melee combat with the aid of your beast is your focus, so you favor Strength. You count on Dexterity for your AC and occasional ranged attacks, so your secondary focus is on that ability score. Wisdom, your tertiary ability score, makes you better at the Perception skill and gives you an edge with many ranger powers. The Beast Mastery class feature is designed to complement this build.

Suggested Feat: Lethal Hunter (Human feat: Improved Initiative)

Suggested Skills: Athletics, Heal, Nature, Perception, Stealth

Suggested At-Will Powers: circling strike, predator strike

Suggested Encounter Power: *synchronized strike

Suggested Daily Power: *partnered savaging

*New option presented in this book

NEW CLASS FEATURE

The Beast Mastery class feature is available to any ranger who wishes to gain a loyal beast companion. To select this class feature, you must give up the Prime Shot class feature, and you do not select either the Archer Fighting Style or the Two-Blade Fighting Style.

Beast Mastery: You gain a beast companion, chosen from one of these categories: bear, boar, cat, lizard, raptor, serpent, spider, or wolf. These categories do not describe specific animals, but rather groups of similarly themed creatures in the D&D world. You decide the creature's relevant details—its species, physical details, and so forth—making sure they are appropriate for its category and the campaign.

For example, if your character hails from a swampy region, your lizard companion might be a crocodile. The lizard companion of a ranger from a different region might be a giant monitor lizard or a drake. A beast companion's species doesn't affect its game statistics, which are based on its category and level.

You and your beast companion work so well together that the creature is almost an extension of you. Using your actions in combat, you control your beast companion by issuing it commands (see "Commanding a Beast Companion," page 41).

Beast Mastery also alters your Hunter's Quarry class feature. When you use Hunter's Quarry, your quarry can be either the enemy nearest to you that you can see or the enemy nearest to your beast companion that you can see. You or your beast companion can deal the extra damage from Hunter's Quarry, but only one of you can deal this extra damage per round.

Your beast companion is considered a creature and an ally and can be affected by powers. A cleric can heal it with healing word, a warlord can give it a melee basic attack with commander's strike, and so forth. You and your beast companion are treated as separate creatures.

You can have only one beast companion at a time. You can dismiss your beast companion at any time, but gaining a new one isn't a simple task (see "Gaining a New Companion," page 42). The link between a ranger and his or her beast companion is not one of master and servant but of two close friends.

As part of the training you underwent that allowed you to form a close bond with a beast, you learned the Raise Beast Companion ritual, which allows you to raise your companion from the dead, even if you are otherwise unable to master and perform rituals. (This ritual is described on page 41.)

Beast Companion Statistics

A beast companion's category determines most of its game statistics, although all beast companions share a few characteristics.

Level: Your beast companion's level is always equal to yours. The beast's defenses, hit points, and attack bonus improve with level.

Ability Scores: Your beast companion's category determines its ability scores, which go up with level. Add 1 to two of your beast companion's ability scores at 4th, 8th, 14th, 18th, 24th, and 28th level. All of your beast companion's ability scores improve by 1 at 11th and 21st level.

Healing Surges: Your beast companion has two healing surges. The beast's healing surge value is equal to a quarter of its maximum hit points, as normal.

Vision: Your beast companion has low-light vision.

Beast Categories

Choose one of the following categories for your beast companion. Once you choose a category, such as wolf, you can then describe the beast's appearance, such as timber wolf, mastiff, or hyena.

Bear

Brown bears and similar creatures fall into this category. Bears are tougher and deadlier than other beast companions, but they are a little slower.

BEAR STATISTICS
Ability Scores: Strength 16, Constitution 14, Dexterity 12, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 12, Charisma 6
Size: Medium
Speed: 5 squares
Defenses: AC 12 + level, Fortitude 14 + level, Reflex 10 + level, Will 12 + level
Hit Points: 16 + 10 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 2
Damage: 1d12
Melee Basic Attack: Claw; level + 2 vs. AC; 1d12 + Strength modifier damage.
Trained Skills: Athletics, Endurance

Boar

Boars are tough, resilient, and ferocious companions.

BOAR STATISTICS
Ability Scores: Strength 16, Constitution 16, Dexterity 14, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 12, Charisma 6
Size: Medium
Speed: 6 squares, 8 squares when charging
Defenses: AC 14 + level, Fortitude 12 + level, Reflex 10 + level, Will 12 + level
Hit Points: 14 + 8 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 4
Damage: 1d8
Melee Basic Attack: Gore; level + 4 vs. AC; 1d8 + Strength modifier damage.
Charge: When charging, a boar gains a +2 bonus to its damage roll.
Trained Skill: Endurance

Cat

Cats include lions, tigers, cougars, and similar predators. Their natural agility and stealth allow them to excel on scouting missions.

CAT STATISTICS

Ability Scores: Strength 14, Constitution 12, Dexterity 16, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 14, Charisma 6
Size: Medium
Speed: 7 squares
Defenses: AC 14 + level, Fortitude 11 + level, Reflex 13 + level, Will 12 + level
Hit Points: 14 + 8 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 4
Damage: 1d8
Melee Basic Attack: Claw; level + 4 vs. AC; 1d8 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Trained Skills: Athletics, Stealth

Lizard

The lizard category includes crocodiles and drakes. These thick-skinned beasts are tough combatants.

LIZARD STATISTICS

Ability Scores: Strength 16, Constitution 14, Dexterity 16, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 12, Charisma 6
Size: Medium
Speed: 6 squares
Defenses: AC 15 + level, Fortitude 12 + level, Reflex 12 + level, Will 10 + level
Hit Points: 14 + 8 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 4
Damage: 1d8
Melee Basic Attack: Bite or claw; level + 4 vs. AC; 1d8 + Strength modifier damage.
Opportunity Attacks: A lizard gains a +2 bonus to the attack roll when making an opportunity attack.
Trained Skills: Athletics, Endurance

Raptor

The raptor category includes eagles, falcons, hawks, and other birds of prey. They are mobile and agile but not as ferocious as other beast companions.

RAPTOR STATISTICS

Ability Scores: Strength 12, Constitution 12, Dexterity 18, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 12, Charisma 6
Size: Small
Speed: 2 squares, fly 7 squares (hover)
Defenses: AC 14 + level, Fortitude 10 + level, Reflex 14 + level, Will 12 + level
Hit Points: 12 + 6 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 5
Damage: 1d6
Melee Basic Attack: Claw; level + 5 vs. AC; 1d6 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Trained Skill: Perception

Serpent

The serpent category includes massive constrictors and other hunting snakes. These beasts are common in tropical environments.

SERPENT STATISTICS

Ability Scores: Strength 14, Constitution 14, Dexterity 16, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 12, Charisma 6
Size: Medium
Speed: 5 squares, swim 5 squares
Defenses: AC 14 + level, Fortitude 12 + level, Reflex 13 + level, Will 12 + level
Hit Points: 14 + 8 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 4
Damage: 1d8
Melee Basic Attack: Bite; level + 4 vs. AC; 1d8 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Opportunity Attacks: A serpent gains a bonus to opportunity attack damage rolls equal to its Strength modifier.
Trained Skill: Stealth

Gaining a Beast Companion

How did you acquire your beast companion? What accounts for the special bond you share? You might consider one of these possibilities, or invent a background story of your own:

- You rescued the animal from a cruel trap or a menagerie and nursed it back to health.
- You captured the beast when it was young and trained it rigorously as it grew.
- You retreated into the wilderness, fasting and praying to Melora, until she found you worthy and sent you a companion.
- You performed a secret ritual to bind your spirit with your companion's.
- You were raised as part of a pack of these animals, and your companion is almost like a brother or sister to you.
- When you were nearly killed in a wilderness ambush, the animal found you and cared for you.
- The animal attacked you in the wilderness, and you wrestled with it until it agreed to become your companion.

Spider

In the Underdark and in primeval forests, goblins and many fey creatures train hunting spiders.

SPIDER STATISTICS

Ability Scores: Strength 14, Constitution 12, Dexterity 16, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 12, Charisma 6
Size: Medium
Speed: 6 squares, climb 6 squares (spider climb)
Defenses: AC 14 + level, Fortitude 11 + level, Reflex 12 + level, Will 12 + level
Hit Points: 14 + 8 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 4
Damage: 1d8
Melee Basic Attack: Bite; level + 4 vs. AC; 1d8 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Trained Skills: Athletics, Stealth

Wolf

The wolf category includes predatory canines and dog-like creatures, from mastiffs to timber wolves to jackals.

WOLF STATISTICS

Ability Scores: Strength 14, Constitution 14, Dexterity 14, Intelligence 6, Wisdom 14, Charisma 6
Size: Medium
Speed: 7 squares
Defenses: AC 14 + level, Fortitude 12 + level, Reflex 12 + level, Will 13 + level
Hit Points: 14 + 8 per level
Attack Bonus: Level + 4
Damage: 1d8
Melee Basic Attack: Bite; level + 4 vs. AC; 1d8 + Strength modifier damage.
Combat Advantage: When a wolf has combat advantage against a target, the wolf gains a bonus to damage rolls against the target equal to the wolf's Wisdom modifier.
Trained Skills: Endurance, Perception

Gods and Rangers

Melora, the god of the wilderness, is revered by many rangers, as are Kord and the Raven Queen, who both hold some influence over the field of battle where rangers demonstrate their prowess. As a patron of adventurers and travelers, Avandra is revered by many rangers as well.

A significant number of rangers don't worship any gods, or revere them while also offering sacrifices to and striving to live their lives in harmony with the primal spirits of nature. Some of these rangers believe that the gods are interlopers in the world, which properly belongs to these primal spirits. Some of them even multiclass into primal classes such as druid or barbarian (described in Player's Handbook 2), calling on nature spirits to enhance their martial prowess.

Raise Beast Companion

You call out to your beast companion. Though death separates you, the ties of faith and friendship between you can cross any gulf.

Level: 1
Category: Restoration
Time: 4 hours
Duration: Instantaneous
Component Cost: 50 gp
Market Price: None
Key Skill: Nature (no check)

This ritual allows you to restore life to your slain beast companion. This ritual works only for rangers who have the Beast Mastery class feature.

The ritual functions as the Raise Dead ritual, with the following exceptions:

- You need not have any part of your beast companion's corpse.
- The death penalty lasts until you have reached three milestones.
- A paragon tier beast companion costs 500 gp to raise, and an epic tier beast companion costs 5,000 gp to raise.

Commanding a Beast Companion

Your beast companion doesn't usually take its own actions during combat. It acts on your turn as you direct it, using the options below. To command your beast companion, you take the action specified for a command, and the beast must be able to see or hear you. If you don't command your beast companion, it remains where it is, as long as you are conscious and present in the encounter. If you are unconscious or aren't present, your beast companion can act independently (see "Beast Companion Independent Actions" below).

Attack (Standard Action): Your beast companion makes a melee basic attack against an enemy of your choice.

Defend (Standard Action): Your beast companion or both of you go on total defense. If you are adjacent to each other, the bonus to defenses is +3 rather than +2.

Move (Move Action): Your beast companion or both of you take a move action. The move actions need not be the same.

Opportunity Attack (Immediate Interrupt): When a creature provokes an opportunity attack from your beast companion, you spend an immediate interrupt to command the beast to make the attack.

Other Action: For any other action, you spend the required action and your beast companion completes it. For example, picking up an object requires a minor action, so you can spend a minor action to order your beast companion to grab a bag of coins in its jaws.

If your beast companion is incapable of completing an action, your action is wasted and the beast does nothing. Your beast companion cannot use your powers, and the DM is the final judge on whether a beast is capable of completing an action.

Beast Companion Independent Actions

In situations where you can't command your beast companion, it can act independently. For example, if you're unconscious or dead or if you aren't present in an encounter, your beast companion doesn't necessarily sit around waiting for you to show up, unless that's what you want it to do.

A beast companion acting independently can take a standard action, a move action, and a minor action on each of its turns, as a character can. You choose the beast's actions, with one restriction: If your character is present in the encounter but incapable of commanding the beast, it must move as far as it can toward you each round on its turn, choosing the safest route possible. Once adjacent to you, the beast companion can act in any manner you wish.

Beast Companions and Healing

Your beast companion can spend healing surges as any character can, and it can receive the benefits of healing abilities, such as a cleric's healing word.

Second Wind: When you use your second wind, your beast companion can use second wind as well.

Other Healing: When you are adjacent to your beast companion, you can spend a minor action and one of your healing surges to heal the beast companion as if it had spent a healing surge.

Death and Dying: A beast companion follows the same rules as a character for death and dying (Player's Handbook, page 295). If your beast companion dies, you can use the Raise Beast Companion ritual to restore it to life.

Gaining a New Companion

If you wish to switch to a new beast companion, you can use the retraining rules in the Player's Handbook (page 28) to select a different beast when you level up. Instead of changing a feat, a power, or a skill selection when you retrain, you can change your beast companion selection.

You keep your current beast companion until you have the opportunity to spend a few hours seeking its replacement in an environment where the new beast can be found. If your beast companion dies and you choose to replace it rather than raise it, you follow the same rules.

The DM can choose to run a short adventure that involves you finding a companion, perhaps rescuing it from captivity or overcoming a foe together. Otherwise, the DM can allow you to create the story of how you found your new companion.

New Ranger Powers

A ranger exists at a nexus of disparate capabilities, all embodying the bold tracker and fearless hunter. As a beastmaster ranger, you have exploits that allow you to expertly guide and work with your beast companion. In many ways, the beast is like a weapon under your skilled control. Such specialty means that you favor powers that other rangers can't even use, and you often eschew exploits other rangers prefer. Those other rangers are far from forgotten. Even if you aren't a beastmaster ranger, you'll still find powers in this chapter that are to your taste.

Some powers in this chapter use the new beast keyword, while others use a special range or damage notation.

Beast

A power that has this keyword can be used only while your beast companion is conscious and present in an encounter.

Range

The following range designations appear in some powers.

Melee beast 1: The attack's target must be adjacent to your beast companion.

Melee weapon (beast 1): The attack's target must be within the reach of the weapon you're wielding and must be adjacent to your beast companion.

Close burst (beast): The burst originates from your beast companion.

Beast Attacks and Damage Notation

Powers that rely on your beast companion to attack use the beast's attack bonus and use [B] to denote the beast's damage die. A number before [B] tells you the number of times you roll the die. For example, a wolf companion's damage die is 1d8. If you use partnered savaging, which deals 2[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage, a wolf companion would deal 2d8 + its Strength modifier damage.

Level 1 At-Will Exploits

Circling Strike Ranger Attack 1

Using the distraction your attack provides, your beast companion finds a better position.

At-Will ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Increase damage to 2[W] + Strength modifier at 21st level.
Effect: Before or after the attack, your beast companion can shift 1 square.

Predator Strike Ranger Attack 1

Your enemy focuses its attention on you, allowing your beast to attack.

At-Will ✦ Beast, Martial
Standard Action Melee beast 1
Target: One creature adjacent to you
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 1[B] + beast's Strength modifier + your Wisdom modifier damage.
Increase damage to 2[B] + beast's Strength modifier + your Wisdom modifier at 21st level.

Level 1 Encounter Exploits

Enclose the Prey Ranger Attack 1

Your beast companion circles your quarry, gaining a better position just before you strike.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature designated as your quarry
Effect: Before the attack, both you and your beast companion can shift 2 squares.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Beast: If your companion is a cat, a spider, or a wolf, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Hunting-Partner Strike Ranger Attack 1

Working with an ally allows you that extra edge.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If you're flanking the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Off-Hand Strike Ranger Attack 1

A weapon in your off-hand allows for a quick attack.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (off-hand weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage (off-hand weapon).

Rapid Volley Ranger Attack 1

With amazing speed, you unleash a pair of arrows at your enemies.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC, one attack per target. If you target one creature, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage roll. If you target two creatures, you take a -2 penalty to both attack rolls.
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Singular Shot Ranger Attack 1

You single out a foe for a deadly attack.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If no creatures are adjacent to the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Synchronized Strike Ranger Attack 1

You command your beast companion to tear into your opponent, opening a gap for you to exploit.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 1[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage.
Effect: You make a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a boar, a lizard, a raptor, or a snake, the secondary attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

ADAM GILLESPIE

Level 1 Daily Exploits

Boar Assault Ranger Attack 1

Each successful attack against your foe increases your tenacity.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged), and you gain temporary hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Until the target is reduced to 0 hit points, you gain temporary hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier each time you hit the target.

Eladrin Rangers

Because of their naturally high Dexterity, eladrin are fine archer rangers, and the mobility provided by their fey step power serves them well in that role. As a race, they also have a long tradition of melee-focused rangers, who wield twin longswords in a deadly keening dance of steel. The pinnacle of this tradition is the blade banshee paragon path (page 59). Eladrin beastmaster rangers naturally choose beast companions of fey origin and learn to teleport side by side with their companions (see the Feyborn Companion feat, page 136).

Driving the Quarry Ranger Attack 1

You fiercely assault your quarry, and your beast companion compels that same foe forward.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: If the target is your quarry, you slide it 2 squares and slide your beast companion 2 squares, ending its movement adjacent to the target. If the target is your quarry and is also bloodied, you instead slide the beast 4 squares.
Beast: If your companion is a cat, a raptor, a spider, or a wolf, you can slide it to any square adjacent to the target.

Hunt's End Ranger Attack 1

You carefully focus to make your attack spell your target's end.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One bloodied creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged). If the target is your quarry, the attack can score a critical hit on a roll of 19–20.
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged).
Miss: Half damage.

Off-Hand Parry — Ranger Attack 1

You ready your off-hand weapon to deflect incoming attacks.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon)
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage (main weapon).
Effect: You gain a power bonus to AC equal to your Wisdom modifier until the end of your next turn or until you attack with your off-hand weapon.

Partnered Savaging — Ranger Attack 1

Your beast companion brutalizes the enemy as you slip in for a quick strike.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial
Standard Action Melee beast 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 2[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: If the target is your quarry, you can shift 3 squares and make a basic attack against it.

Level 2 Utility Exploits

Ferret an Opening — Ranger Utility 2

With a keen eye, you use one moment of advantage to create another.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be flanking an enemy.
Effect: You gain combat advantage against the flanked enemy until the end of your next turn.

Fox Shift — Ranger Utility 2

Distracted by your ally, your foe can't respond effectively to your sly maneuvering.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You hit a target with a melee attack and the target is marked by an ally
Effect: You can shift 1 square, and you gain a +2 power bonus to all defenses against your target's attacks until the end of your next turn.

Elf Rangers

Elf heroes combine high Dexterity and high Wisdom to become excellent archer rangers. Their high speed and Wild Step ability grant them excellent mobility, making them hard to outrun or pin down, and their keen senses help them thrive in the wild. The sylvan archer paragon path (page 68) reflects the spiritual union of an elf ranger and a bow. The Elven Beast Mastery feat (page 135) allows an elf beastmaster ranger to share both mobility and accuracy with a beast companion.

Hearten the Beast — Ranger Utility 2

With an encouraging shout, you give your beast companion the desire to fight harder.

At-Will ✦ Beast, Martial
Standard Action Close burst 20
Target: Your beast companion in burst
Effect: The target makes a saving throw.
Beast: If the target is a bear or a boar, it gains a bonus to the saving throw equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Hunter's Privilege — Ranger Utility 2

Your keen senses and uncanny instincts give you an edge over your quarry.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
No Action Personal
Trigger: You make an initiative check at the beginning of an encounter and your check result is higher than any other combatant's
Effect: Until the stance ends, you add 3 to the extra damage you deal with Hunter's Quarry.

Pack Alertness — Ranger Utility 2

Through subtle communications, you and your beast companion act almost as if you share senses.

At-Will ✦ Beast, Martial
Minor Action Close burst 10
Targets: You and your beast companion in burst
Effect: The targets each make a Perception check and share the better result. Also, if your beast companion becomes aware of a target, you do as well, and vice versa.
Beast: If your companion is a cat, a raptor, or a wolf, the targets gain a +2 bonus to the Perception checks.

Level 3 Encounter Exploits

Beast Latch — Ranger Attack 3

Your attack diverts your foe's attention long enough for your beast companion to take hold, hampering your foe and allowing the beast to easily follow.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a cat, a raptor, a spider, or a snake, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Effect: If the target moves during its next turn, your beast companion can shift to any square adjacent to the target's new location as a free action. If the target is your quarry, it is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Leonine Surge — Ranger Attack 3

Like a hunting lion, you throw yourself at your enemy in an attempt to land two blows and put your victim down.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC, two attacks
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage per attack. If both attacks hit, the target is knocked prone and takes extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier. If both attacks miss, you grant combat advantage to all enemies until the start of your next turn.

Paired Predators — Ranger Attack 3

Coupling attacks, you and your beast efficiently take it to your enemies.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: Your beast companion can make a melee basic attack against a target within its reach as a free action.
Beast: If your companion is a boar, a lizard, or a wolf, the attacks deal extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Ruffling Sting — Ranger Attack 3

With a scorpion-like jab, you unsettle your opponent enough to gain a momentary advantage.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (off-hand weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage (off-hand weapon). Until the end of your turn, the target grants combat advantage to you for your next melee attack against it.

Scattering Volley — Ranger Attack 3

Your hail of shots causes your foes to dive for cover, clearing a path for your allies.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC, one attack per target. If you target one creature, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage roll. If you target two creatures, you take a -2 penalty to both attack rolls.
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you slide the target 1 square.

ADAM GILLESPIE

Thwarting Shot — Ranger Attack 3

Your cutting projectile discombobulates your adversary for a moment.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is slowed and takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

Level 5 Daily Exploits

Adaptive Assault — Ranger Attack 5

Your quick attacks might have different results.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons or a ranged weapon.
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee; main weapon and off-hand weapon) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged) per attack. If both attacks hit the same target, the target either takes ongoing 5 damage or is dazed (save ends either).
Miss: Half damage per attack.

Bloodied Frenzy — Ranger Attack 5

Injury, whether yours or your beast companion's, provokes an instant assault from the beast that leaves your adversary momentarily hobbled.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial
Immediate Reaction Melee beast 1
Trigger: An enemy bloodies you or your beast companion
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: Before the attack, your beast companion can shift 5 squares.
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 2[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.

Close-Combat Shot — Ranger Attack 5

You punish your enemy for closing with you.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Ranged weapon
Trigger: An enemy enters a square adjacent to you
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Special: Using this power doesn't provoke an opportunity attack from the target.

Lacerating Maul — Ranger Attack 5

Opening your quarry up with a decisive attack, you allow your beast companion to tear a wound. The scent of blood eggs the beast on.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a boar, or a lizard, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: If the target is your quarry and your beast companion is adjacent to it, the target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends). Until the ongoing damage ends, the target grants combat advantage to the beast.

Spitting-Cobra Stance — Ranger Attack 5

You stand ready to launch a quick attack against any foe that menaces you.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance, Weapon
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, you can make a ranged basic attack as an opportunity action against any enemy within 5 squares of you that moves closer to you.

Hunter's Quarry

Stripped to its core, your Hunter's Quarry class feature is nothing more than a way to designate a single target and let you do massive amounts of damage to that target. It represents your focus on that target and your single-minded dedication to getting rid of that foe. But what do you do when you use Hunter's Quarry?

Take a moment, a focusing breath, and study your foe—the way it moves, its speed, its patterns. When you understand how it moves, you can predict where it will be when your sword or arrow reaches it.

Search out its weaknesses: Where does its armor not protect it? Where are the scales of its hide not as thick? How might an eye or a mouth offer access to its vulnerable organs?

Put yourself in its place. What does it see? How does it defend itself? Who does it attack, and why? What surprises it? Hunter and prey are one, linked in the cycles of nature.

Find your range. Learn exactly how far you must pull back the string, how much to angle your bow, exactly how to line up your shot against this particular target. Feel it in your muscles, force them to remember, and duplicate the perfect shot time after time.

Tag the Prey — Ranger Attack 5

Your keen hunter's instinct picks out this foe from the rest.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC. This attack ignores the target's cover but not superior cover.
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you designate the target as your quarry until the end of your next turn. If the target was already your quarry, the attack deals 1[W] extra damage.
Miss: Half damage, and you do not designate the target as your quarry.

Level 6 Utility Exploits

Battle Runner — Ranger Utility 6

You move with astonishing speed, making it hard for your foes to track your movement.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, you can run a number of squares equal to your speed + 4, instead of your speed + 2, and you do not grant combat advantage from running.

Boundless Energy — Ranger Utility 6

You call upon your inner strength to persevere.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You roll an Endurance check and dislike the result
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Endurance.
Effect: Reroll the Endurance check. You decide whether to make the reroll before the DM announces the result.

Defensive Posture — Ranger Utility 6

Puffing up defensively, your beast rolls with a blow.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 20
Trigger: Your beast companion is hit by an attack within 20 squares of you
Target: Your beast companion in burst
Effect: The target gains a +4 power bonus to the defense targeted by the attack.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a spider, or a snake, the bonus lasts until the start of your next turn.

Invigorate the Beast — Ranger Utility 6

Your urging pushes your beast companion onward, despite fatigue and injury.

Daily ✦ Beast, Healing, Martial
Minor Action Melee 1
Target: Your beast companion
Effect: The target regains hit points as if it had spent a healing surge.
Beast: If your companion is a boar or a lizard, it regains additional hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Serpentine Dodge — Ranger Utility 6

You snake past your enemies, weaving so that they have a hard time making a follow-up attack against you.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Requirement: You must be within 2 squares of at least two enemies.
Effect: You can shift a number of squares equal to 1 + your Wisdom modifier. Until the end of your next turn, you gain a power bonus to all defenses equal to the number of enemies you were adjacent to at any time during this shift.

Level 7 Encounter Exploits

Beast Rush — Ranger Attack 7

You designate an enemy to your beast companion, and the beast moves toward that enemy as you strike.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the primary attack, your beast companion can shift a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Primary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 1[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage.
Beast: If your companion is a boar, a cat, a raptor, or a wolf, the primary attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Effect: You make a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Biting Volley — Ranger Attack 7

Two lucky shots find chinks in your target's armor.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex, two attacks. Each attack can score a critical hit on a roll of 18-20.
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage per attack.

Harried Quarry — Ranger Attack 7

Your attack, coupled with the threat of your beast companion, throws your quarry off balance.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: If the target is your quarry, it grants combat advantage to you and your allies until the end of your next turn.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a lizard, a spider, or a snake, your attacks against the target deal extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier until the end of your next turn.

Hunter's Shot — Ranger Attack 7

You draw a bead on your chosen opponent and take the shot.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC. If the target is your quarry, the attack hits if the attack roll hits the target's AC or Reflex.
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Jackal Ploy — Ranger Attack 7

Twin strikes harass your enemy, opening a gap for an ally's attack as you slip away.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex (main weapon and off-hand weapon). Make two attack rolls—one with each weapon—and use the higher result.
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target grants combat advantage to an ally of your choice until the start of your next turn. You can then shift a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Twofold Flinch — Ranger Attack 7

You feint with both weapons, taking your adversary aback.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: The target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls against you until the start of your next turn. If both attacks hit, the penalty is -4.

Level 9 Daily Exploits

Caging Strike — Ranger Attack 9

You box your foe in with one weapon and then open a wound with the other.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends). If the target is your quarry, it instead takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and no ongoing damage.

Jarring Salvo — Ranger Attack 9

Each shot that hits your enemy knocks it backward.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude, three attacks
Hit: 1[W] damage per attack, and you push the target 1 square.
Miss: Half damage per attack, and no push.

Menacing Cry — Ranger Attack 9

Your beast companion issues a piercing cry, chilling the blood of nearby enemies.

Daily✦ Beast, Fear, Martial
Standard Action Close burst 2 (beast)
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. Will
Hit: 1d8 + beast's Wisdom modifier psychic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a cat, a raptor, or a wolf, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is not immobilized.

Melee or Ranged?

More than perhaps any other class, the different builds of the ranger play very differently. The two-blade ranger is a melee-focused character who is similar in many ways to a rogue, relying on high mobility and devastating melee attacks to face foes in direct combat without the high defenses or hit points of a defender class. The archer ranger is more like a warlock, attacking from a relatively safe distance while circling around the thick of melee to get the best shots. The beastmaster build is a different approach to building a melee-focused ranger, one that stands out from other classes of any role as something unique.

JIM PAVELEC

Passing Ambush — Ranger Attack 9

You appear as if from nowhere, skewer your adversary, and then fade away.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature that is surprised or unaware of your presence
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier + Wisdom modifier damage (melee) or 3[W] + Dexterity modifier + Wisdom modifier damage (ranged), and you can shift 2 squares. If you were hidden from the target when you made the attack, you remain hidden if you have any cover or concealment.
Miss: Half damage, and you can shift 1 square. If you were hidden from the target when you made the attack, you can make a Stealth check with a +2 bonus to remain hidden if you have any cover or concealment.

Ranger's Recovery — Ranger Attack 9

After taking a moment to make a measuring strike and move into a better position, you're ready for action again.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged).
Effect: Before or after the attack, you can shift half your speed. If you have used all your encounter attack powers, you regain the use of a ranger encounter attack power you have used during this encounter. Or if you hit your quarry with this attack, you can instead choose to deal 2[W] extra damage.

Level 10 Utility Exploits

Companion Emplacement — Ranger Utility 10

You move into position, and you order your beast companion to warily do the same.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial
Move Action Close burst 20
Targets: You and your beast companion in burst
Effect: You can move your speed, and your beast companion can shift its speed.
Beast: If your companion is a raptor or a wolf, you can move 1 extra square, and it can shift 1 extra square.

Hunting Party — Ranger Utility 10

You're not about to give up with a simple miss.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, each time you miss your quarry with an attack, you can choose an ally within 5 squares of the quarry. If that ally hits the quarry before the start of your next turn, the ally's attack deals extra damage equal to your Hunter's Quarry damage.

Prime Shift — Ranger Utility 10

Always in motion, you dart in for the shot before spinning away.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, you can shift a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier as a move action whenever you hit an enemy with a ranged attack that has the bonus from the Prime Shot class feature.

Quick Recovery — Ranger Utility 10

Your quick command allows your beast companion to recover from an ill effect.

At-Will ✦ Beast, Martial
Immediate Reaction Close burst 20
Trigger: Your beast companion receives an effect that a save can end within 20 squares of you
Target: Your beast companion in burst
Effect: The target makes a saving throw against the effect, with a bonus to the saving throw equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Shed the Mark — Ranger Utility 10

Your enemies can't keep track of your fast movements.

At-Will ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Requirement: You must be marked.
Effect: The marked condition ends, and you can shift 1 square.

Level 13 Encounter Exploits

Bloodlust Strike — Ranger Attack 13

You aim for where the blood already flows.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One bloodied creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier + Wisdom modifier damage (melee) or 3[W] + Dexterity modifier + Wisdom modifier damage (ranged).

Pulling back on your bow with great effort, you unleash a pair of arrows that slam your foes into the ground.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude, one attack per target. If you target one creature, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage roll. If you target two creatures, you take a -2 penalty to both attack rolls.
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you knock the target prone.

Herd the Prey — Ranger Attack 13

Nipping at an adversary, your beast forces that foe toward your waiting weapon.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee beast 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage, and your beast companion can shift 2 squares toward you and then pull the target 2 squares. The target grants combat advantage to you until the end of your next turn.
Beast: If your companion is a lizard, a snake, a spider, or a wolf, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Knockdown Pounce — Ranger Attack 13

Your beast companion hurls itself at your quarry as you make a forceful attack. The combination sends your foe sprawling.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature designated as your quarry
Effect: Before the attack, your beast companion can shift its speed.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target 1 square and knock it prone.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a boar, a cat, or a raptor, you instead push the target 2 squares.

Off-Hand Diversion — Ranger Attack 13

Your quick off-hand strike leaves your foe open to attacks.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (off-hand weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage (off-hand weapon), and the target grants combat advantage to you and your allies until the start of your next turn.

Level 15 Daily Exploits

Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage, and the target is pushed 1 square and dazed (save ends).
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a cat, a snake, or a wolf, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Miss: Half damage, the target is pushed 1 square, and the target is not dazed.

Gnawing Assault — Ranger Attack 19

Your beast companion clamps down on a foe and rends its flesh.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial
Standard Action Melee beast 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 2[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of its next turn.
Effect: If the target was already immobilized and your beast companion began the turn adjacent to it, the target takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).

Threefold Assault — Ranger Attack 19

In a wild onslaught, you unleash three attacks with escalating potential.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Targets: One, two, or three creatures
Attack: Strength vs. AC, three attacks (at least one attack with each weapon)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage per attack. If you hit a target twice, you push it a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier. If you hit a target three times, it is also dazed until the end of your next turn.
Miss: Half damage per attack.
Special: If you use this power as a ranged attack, it doesn't provoke opportunity attacks.

Level 22 Utility Exploits

Adamant Recovery — Ranger Utility 22

You stay up despite all odds, showing what you're really made of.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial
Immediate Interrupt Personal
Trigger: You are reduced to 0 hit points or fewer
Effect: You spend a healing surge and can shift 1 square.

Hunt the Herd — Ranger Utility 22

You make prey out of all nearby foes.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you designate each target as your quarry and can deal your Hunter's Quarry damage against each one you hit.

Preternatural Senses — Ranger Utility 22

Employing all your senses, you are aware of the unseen and the silent.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Perception.
Effect: Until the stance ends, you gain blindsight 5 and a +5 power bonus to Perception checks.

Selfless Sacrifice — Ranger Utility 22

You or your beast companion steps in front of an incoming attack meant for the other.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 1
Trigger: You or your adjacent beast companion is damaged by an attack
Targets: You and your beast companion in burst
Effect: The target damaged by the triggering attack takes only half of the damage, and the other target takes the remainder. (If both targets were damaged by the triggering attack, one target can take half of the other's damage.) The target taking the remainder of the other's damage gains temporary hit points equal to your level.

Wild Dash — Ranger Utility 22

Your beast companion rushes forward to intercept a threat, or perhaps to flee an attacker.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: Your beast companion is hit by an attack or an enemy enters a square within 5 squares of you
Effect: Your beast companion can shift its speed.

Level 23 Encounter Exploits

Chase Down — Ranger Attack 23

You knock your adversary to one side, and your beast companion pursues.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares. Your beast companion can shift 4 squares and must end adjacent to the target.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a cat, a raptor, a spider, or a wolf, it can instead shift its speed.

Dazing Volley — Ranger Attack 23

You shoot quickly enough to get off one shot with accuracy or two with haste. Either way, you leave struck foes in momentary shock.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC, one attack per target. If you target one creature, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage roll. If you target two creatures, you take a -2 penalty to both attack rolls.
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Hobbling Shot — Ranger Attack 23

The enemy wobbles from your shot and can move only poorly for a moment.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is slowed until the start of your next turn. If the target is your quarry, it is instead immobilized until the start of your next turn.

Nonchalant Collapse — Ranger Attack 23

With your off-hand weapon, you casually send a foe to the floor.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude (off-hand weapon)
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you knock the target prone.

Overwhelming Fury — Ranger Attack 23

You throw yourself at the enemy, distracting it while your beast companion moves to strike.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target grants combat advantage to your beast companion until the end of your next turn.
Effect: Your beast companion makes a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 3[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage.
Beast: If your companion is a boar, a lizard, or a snake, the secondary attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Level 25 Daily Exploits

Ambusher's Reaping — Ranger Attack 25

You leap from the shadows, cut down two foes, and then disappear from view.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Targets: One or two creatures that are surprised or that you are hidden from Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged), one attack per target
Hit: 5[W] + Strength modifier + Wisdom modifier damage (melee) or 5[W] + Dexterity modifier + Wisdom modifier damage (ranged), and you can shift your speed. If you are hidden from the target when you make the attack, you remain hidden if you have any cover or concealment.
Miss: Half damage, and you can shift 1 square. You can make a Stealth check with a +2 bonus to remain hidden if you have any cover or concealment.

Primal Rampage — Ranger Attack 25

In a blur, you and your beast companion leap forward, knocking your foe down.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Requirement: You and your beast companion must charge and use this power in place of a melee basic attack.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 2[B] damage, and the target is knocked prone.
Beast: If your companion is a boar, a cat, a raptor, a lizard, or a spider, the primary attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Effect: Your beast companion can shift 1 square, and you make a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.

Pursuit of the Wild Hunt — Ranger Attack 25

You nail your adversary and your beast companion follows the scent of faltering prey.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, before you take any actions on each of your turns, you can take a free action to command your beast companion to shift its speed to a space closer or adjacent to the target. In addition, the target provokes an opportunity attack from your beast companion whenever the target shifts or makes an attack that doesn't include the beast as a target.

Ranger's Resurgence — Ranger Attack 25

With the grace of immortals, you move where you will and strike hard, leaving yourself prepared to make another assault.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged).
Effect: Before or after the attack, you can shift your speed. If you have expended all your encounter attack powers, you regain the use of a ranger encounter attack power you have used during this encounter. Or if you hit your quarry with this attack, you can instead choose to deal 4[W] extra damage.

True-Eye Shot — Ranger Attack 25

You can sometimes hit any target you can see.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged sight
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity - 2 vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Level 27 Encounter Exploits

Beastly Vise — Ranger Attack 27

Your attack leaves your foe with no idea how to escape its position between you and your beast.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage. If you and your beast companion are both flanking the target, the target is immobilized until the start of your next turn.
Beast: If your companion is a boar, a cat, a raptor, a spider, or a wolf, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Catch and Drop — Ranger Attack 27

A quick strike from your beast companion sends your opponent stumbling to the ground, and you have no qualms about hitting a downed foe.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage, and the target is knocked prone.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a lizard, or a snake, it slides the target 1 square.
Effect: You make a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Unstable Gash — Ranger Attack 27

You leave a wound ready to tear open at the slightest strain.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If the target attacks or moves more than 1 square before the start of your next turn, it takes 4[W] extra damage.

Night Watch

Varis settled into place on the thick branch, and his panther, Shara, settled beside him. Together they watched the road below, claws and fingers clutching bark. Only their eyes moved, scanning the forest, catching every movement—every autumn leaf drifting to the ground, every squirrel scurrying across the forest floor or among the branches around them.

As the sun's last light drained from the sky and Varis's friends drifted to sleep beneath him, he closed his eyes and drank in the forest's sounds: the lonely call of an owl, the chirping of crickets and tiny tree frogs, the distant rustling of a bear in the fallen leaves. He could hear the bear snuffling as it rooted through the leaves for food.

He felt Shara stiffen ever so slightly, and he opened his eyes. The moon bathed the trees in silver light, enough for his elf eyes to see. He glanced at Shara and followed her gaze, then saw what had alarmed her: a dark shape flitting between the shadows of the trees, stalking toward the camp. He saw a second one, then a third, then beyond them a great many more, creeping in perfect silence, trusting in the cover of the dark.

Shara's breath was almost a growl, and he lifted a finger to silence her. Whether it was his movement or the panther's sound, the nearest creature below held up a hand and froze. Varis could just make out beady goblin eyes searching the forest. It was too late. Roaring as one, Varis and Shara leaped from the tree, and the goblin was dead before their feet touched the ground.

Level 29 Daily Exploits

Five-Missile Dance Ranger Attack 29

Moving warily, you launch five projectiles at your opponents, each shot more capable than the last of felling a target.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Targets: One, two, three, four, or five creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC, five attacks
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage per attack. If you hit a target at least twice, you push it 1 square. If you hit a target at least four times, you also knock it prone. If you hit a target five times, it is also immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage per attack.
Effect: You can shift 1 square after each attack.

Huntmaster's Bloodbath Ranger Attack 29

Your horrific attack strikes a vital center, rapidly spilling your adversary's life force.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude (melee) or Dexterity vs. Fortitude (ranged)
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage or 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and ongoing 20 damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 10 damage (save ends).

Huntmaster's Mauling Ranger Attack 29

You slice the flesh, and your beast companion tears it open.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Your beast companion makes a secondary attack against the target. If the primary attack bloodied the target, the beast gains combat advantage for the secondary attack.
Secondary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 5[B] + beast's Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Beast: If your companion is a bear, a snake, or a wolf, the secondary attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Suffering's End Ranger Attack 29

Intending to slay your foe one way or another, you strike with deadly force.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One bloodied creature
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 8[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: 5[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Twin-Strike Tornado Ranger Attack 29

You move and strike with such speed that your wounded foes are the only proof you moved at all.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 2
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Rangers of Many Races

Their high Strength makes dragonborn excellent two-blade or beastmaster rangers. Dragonborn rangers commonly have drake beast companions.

Dwarf rangers aren't particularly common, but their high Wisdom and their natural tenacity lead some dwarf heroes to become rangers. Most dwarf rangers choose the two-blade fighting style and wield twin axes, picks, or hammers.

Halfling rangers are rare. Because their size prevents them from using longbows, most halfling rangers choose beast mastery rather than a fighting style, with a preference for raptor companions.

Not many tiefling heroes become rangers, but those who do generally favor wielding two sharp blades in melee combat. A few tiefling rangers learn ancient infernal secrets to imbue their attacks with hellfire—see the hellborn shadow paragon path (page 63).

See also "Eladrin Rangers" and "Elf Rangers," page 44.

JIM PAVELEC

Note: The borderlands marshal, a paragon path described on page 119, is open to a character who is both a ranger and a warlord (having multiclassed into the second class).

Avalanche Hurler

"Go ahead, keep making fun of me. I don't need a bow to hit you from down here."

Prerequisite: Ranger

The first avalanche hurlers were dwarf slaves in the ancient realms of the giants. Tempered by suffering and endless labor, and without access to soldierly methods, these dwarves tailored their ways of fighting to their work tools. They developed martial techniques that allowed them to be flexible in combat. A rebel needs ranged capability to kill in ambushes and slay retreating adversaries. Skill in melee is required to stand up to larger and quicker foes.

Revolutionary dwarves took up their hammers and axes. They threw these tools into the faces of their oppressors. Then, hammering and hewing from underfoot, the first avalanche hurlers brought their outsized masters down and escaped to the wilderness. They settled in underground halls they cut for themselves, places too small for their enemies to invade. Dwarves then made war on giants in Moradin's name.

Dwarf clans have maintained the avalanche hurler fighting style across the generations. They preserve their earliest original combat style, but they never held it so sacred that they failed to give it to allies among all sorts of folk. Further, the avalanche hurler might have been originally recorded in dwarven folklore, but other races developed similar military methods independently.

As an ever resourceful avalanche hurler, you are effective both in close combat and at range. Rather than mastering one ranger fighting style, you embrace both, using thrown melee weapons as your chosen instruments of death. What you lose in range and damage, you make up for with your versatility, being able to make attacks against adjacent enemies and then send your weapons flying against those beyond your reach.

Avalanche Hurler Path Features

Throwing Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can make a ranged basic attack with a light thrown weapon or a heavy thrown weapon as a free action. This ranged attack does not provoke opportunity attacks. You can then take an extra action.

Throwing Master (11th level): When you use a light thrown weapon or a heavy thrown weapon as a ranged weapon, increase the weapon's damage die by one size.

Uncanny Thrower (16th level): You take no penalty to attack rolls when using a light thrown weapon or a heavy thrown weapon against a target at long range.

Avalanche Hurler Exploits

Landslide Strike Avalanche Hurler Attack 11

You hurtle forward, lashing out with your weapons at the end of your advance.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Targets: One or two creatures
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift 2 squares.
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee; main weapon and off-hand weapon) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged), one attack per target
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier + Dexterity modifier damage.

Quick-Draw Trick Avalanche Hurler Utility 12

You draw and stow your weapons with dazzling speed.

At Will ✦ Martial
Free Action Personal
Effect: You draw or stow one or two weapons.

Eruption of Steel Avalanche Hurler Attack 20

After attacking with each of your weapons, you pause just long enough to find new targets for your furious assault.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee; main weapon and off-hand weapon) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged), two attacks
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier + Dexterity modifier damage per attack.
Miss: Half damage per attack.
Effect: Make a secondary attack.
Secondary Targets: One or two creatures other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee; main weapon and off-hand weapon) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged), one attack per target
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Blade Banshee

"That hum is the sound of your death approaching."

Prerequisites: Eladrin, ranger

The Feywild sings with eldritch energy. It is infused with magic from its twilight sky to its sparkling depths. Fey creatures, its children, are bathed in its supernatural flow. Even the simplest among them have powers beyond those of worldly mortals, bestowing simple tasks with an otherworldly enchantment.

Eladrin are among the heritors of the Feywild's nature. As humans and other races tamed portions of the world, so too did the eladrin subdue parts of the Feywild according to their fey temperament. They evolved a complex society, rich in crafts and traditions that also sing in concordance with the Feywild. As followers of mores inspired in elder days by the god Corellon, eladrin treat life and all its aspects as an art. Everything they do, wonderful or wicked, reflects this ideal.

Like their counterparts in the world, eladrin have had to fight and die to defend their way of life. Each eladrin learns to wield the longsword, the traditional weapon of the eladrin people. They have martial disciplines that teach an eladrin to channel the innate magic in his or her spirit, as well as that stored within the elements.

A blade from the Feywild or crafted by eladrin hands has a special beauty. The metal vibrates with bizarre potential. Some eladrin learn to make steel shaped into such a blade sing its heart's song. That song is a fey cry that portends loss of life, and those who wield it are known across the cosmos as blade banshees.

Over the years, you've developed a terrifying synergy with your blades. You understand the secret heart of fey-crafted steel. Its unmistakable, dread voice announces your displeasure. As you fight, your blades buzz and keen, unleashing rending vibrations against your foes. But when your soul is bent to friendship or mercy, your swords hum with your own gentleness, briefly bringing a bit of peace to others before shrieking into battle once again.

Blade Banshee Path Features

Banshee's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action while wielding two melee weapons, any enemy adjacent to you takes thunder damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Bladed Disruption (11th level): While you're wielding two melee weapons, any creature you hit with more than one of your melee attacks during your turn takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls until the start of your next turn.

Shrieking Blades (16th level): While you're wielding two melee weapons, your melee attacks deal extra thunder damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Blade Banshee Exploits

Steel Scream Blade Banshee Attack 11

You clash your blades together, unleashing a mind-numbing screech.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Thunder, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Requirement: You must be wielding a longsword and another melee weapon.
Target: Each creature in burst
Attack: Strength vs. Will
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier thunder damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Soothing Reverberation Blade Banshee Utility 12

With a soft sweep, your blades purr, reaching out to the minds of nearby allies and revitalizing them.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Close burst 3
Requirement: You must be wielding a longsword and another melee weapon.
Target: Each ally in burst
Effect: Each target can spend a healing surge either to regain hit points or to negate being dazed or stunned.

Mind-Bending Blades Blade Banshee Attack 20

You use your blades to set up a fey harmonic pattern, allowing you to control your target until you unleash the sound in a disruptive wail.

Daily ✦ Charm, Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a longsword and another melee weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is dominated (save ends). As a standard action, you can end the dominated effect and deal 5d6 thunder damage to the target and each creature adjacent to it.

Blade Dancer

"Clashing blades create the rhythm for our final dance."

Prerequisite: Ranger

Halflings have long used music and a sense of fun to enliven physical labor and various dull tasks. When the race was young, they created dancelike movements that mimicked martial skills—and translated into deadliness in melee. Halflings learned that bladed weapons lent themselves easily to such a refined use. As their battle dances evolved, halflings began to consider the nimble use of a pair of bladed weapons a refinement of the style.

Halflings came to call skilled practitioners of this dual-weapon method blade dancers. The mingling of itinerant halflings with other peoples eventually made the blade dance famous. The blade-dancer way spread far and wide, and other folk adapted it to new weapon types. Today, numerous people know and teach the essentials of the method. The strictest masters require the student to show proficiency in combat as well as a love of life and wandering like that of halflings.

Halfling or not, you have put your body through a grueling regimen to attain mastery of the blade dance. Twin blades twirl about you like deadly veils. Intricate footwork allows you to dance in and out of danger with ease. Your weapons, like good dance partners, know where you want them to go almost before you do. One day, you and your weapons might dance your way into legend.

JASON A. ENGLE

Blade Dancer Path Features

Dual-Blade Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to make one melee basic attack with your primary weapon and another one with your off-hand weapon, instead of taking an extra action. You gain a bonus to the damage rolls equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Dancing Defense (11th level): If you're wielding two melee weapons and hit with at least two melee attacks on your turn, you gain a +2 bonus to AC and Reflex until the start of your next turn.

Cutting Steps (16th level): While wielding two melee weapons, you gain a +1 bonus to melee damage rolls and AC.

Blade Dancer Exploits

Cross-Body Parry — Blade Dancer Attack 11

As your foe swings, you quickly cross your blades to parry, then scissor those blades brutally into your attacker.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy makes a melee attack against you
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] damage per attack. If both attacks hit, the target is weakened until the end of your next turn.
Weapon: If you're wielding two light blades, two heavy blades, or a heavy blade and a light blade, each attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Misleading Bladework — Blade Dancer Utility 12

Whirling your blades, you dance in and out of your enemies' reach, knocking weapons aside and leaving foes off balance.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Move Action Personal
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Effect: You shift a number of squares equal to your Dexterity modifier. Throughout the shift, each adjacent enemy takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls and grants combat advantage to your allies until the start of your next turn.

Blade Dance — Blade Dancer Attack 20

For a moment, you transform into a deadly storm of blades.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You can shift 3 squares and repeat the attack against a second target. You can then shift 3 squares and repeat the attack against a third target.
Weapon: If you're wielding two light blades, two heavy blades, or a heavy blade and a light blade, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Feral Spirit

"He doesn't like you. I don't like you either. Watch yourself—we both bite."

Prerequisites: Ranger, Beast Mastery class feature

To most mortals, an animal is a pet or a tool, a companion or a means to an end. Such creatures provide food, labor, protection, and even company. Only in rare cases does the relationship between master and beast transcend these mundane trappings. Every beastmaster is an exception to this generality, learning to become one formidable unit with an animal that is at once a friend, a guardian, and a weapon. Beastmasters know that, after the bond is formed, the capabilities and fate of master and beast are linked.

Beastmasters among many races have nurtured the mystical connection between master and pet. They cultivated communication that transcends speech and approaches telepathy. As such a beastmaster grew in power, the magic of the world infused the relationship. It bound the animal and mortal closer together, driven to do so by the devotion, ritual connection, and common cause the two shared. Contact among peoples spread this technique, which some claim originated with elves.

Elf or not, you've managed to foster such a transcendent relationship with your beast companion. Although each of you is fiercely independent and deadly, you share emotions and thoughts. Each knows when the other is in need. You work in unison to fell your foes, and even your allies swear you act to support each other more quickly than any communication could possibly allow. In time, you might grow so close as to seem like one incredible being sharing two bodies (see the Beastlord epic destiny, page 151).

STEPHEN TAPPIN

Feral Spirit Path Features

Fearsome Partnership (11th level): While you are within 10 squares of your beast companion, it gains a +2 bonus to damage rolls.

Feral Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, your beast companion also gains a +4 bonus to attack rolls until the start of your next turn.

Spirit Link (16th level): When your beast companion uses second wind, you can choose to spend one of your own healing surges rather than one of the beast's healing surges.

Feral Spirit Exploits

Feral Diversion — Feral Spirit Attack 11

Your companion draws a foe's attention, allowing you to slip safely away.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial
Standard Action Melee beast 1
Target: One creature adjacent to you
Effect: Before the attack, your beast companion can shift 3 squares.
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 2[B] + Strength modifier + Dexterity modifier damage, and you can shift 3 squares away from the target as a free action.

Swiftness of Spirit — Feral Spirit Utility 12

At your signal, your beast companion is poised for action.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: Your beast companion in burst
Effect: The target takes a move action or gains a +2 bonus to its next attack roll during this encounter.

Twin-Soul Strike — Feral Spirit Attack 20

Whether attacking together or apart, you coordinate your strike with the attack of your beast companion to maximize devastation.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Your beast companion gains combat advantage against the primary target for the next attack the beast makes against it before the end of your next turn. Then the beast makes a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: The primary target or another creature
Secondary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 2[B] + Strength modifier + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: If the secondary target is different from the primary target, you gain combat advantage against the secondary target for the next attack you make against it before the end of your next turn.

Giantslayer

"Don't like being hit in the shins? Then bring your face down here!"

Prerequisite: Fighter or ranger

When the deities first called upon their mortal followers to take up arms against the primordials, the first giantslayers were among the heroes who joined the angelic legions. Not all who fought giants were deemed slayers, but a tough corps of warriors faced giants successfully time and again, thus earning the moniker their descendants use with pride to this day. They developed a battle style that proved effective against creatures larger than human size, as numerous monstrous beings are.

The giantslayer is, then, an intrepid warrior prepared to face enormous foes. Although plenty of other martial paths have more mundane applications, only the gutsy and the venturesome bother to train as giantslayers. Skill in a broad range of weaponry makes taking out big foes easier. Ranged attacks can hit the eyes or other hard-to-reach areas; melee weapons can be used to take out the legs, cutting a gigantic creature down to manageable size. Such a warrior is ever resourceful.

A giantslayer must also acknowledge that gruesome death is a possible end to his or her vocation. This fact, combined with the sheer audacity required for the job, means that most giantslayers are larger-than-life figures. Those who claim the title of giantslayer have a reputation for fighting hard and playing hard. Those who share the calling respect each other. Legitimate slayers police the ranks for charlatans, following up on rumors of fake giantslayers.

When it comes to being a giantslayer, you are the genuine article. Maybe you learned the trade from a mentor. Although some military organizations incorporate such techniques, no formalized tradition of giant slaying exists. The lessons learned on your past adventures might have been all the instruction you need. Fast, tough, and courageous, you know what it takes to cut down big opponents—even if that means going for a ride on one.

Giantslayer Path Features

Giant-Slaying Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls and AC until the start of your next turn. Against Large or larger enemies, the bonus to AC is +4.

Through the Fingers (11th level): If a creature grabs you, you can make a melee basic attack against it as an opportunity action. If this attack hits, you can make an escape attempt as a free action, with a bonus to the Acrobatics or the Athletics check equal to the damage dealt by the basic attack.

Small Target (16th level): You gain a +4 bonus to AC against opportunity attacks from Large or larger enemies and a +2 bonus to AC against opportunity attacks from Medium and smaller enemies.

Giantslayer Exploits

Little Bait — Giantslayer Attack 11

Your vexing attack enrages your enemy, causing him to forget all targets other than you for a critical moment.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex (melee) or Dexterity vs. Reflex (ranged)
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged), and the target is dazed and takes a –5 penalty to attack rolls against your allies until the end of your next turn. If the target is Large or larger, it also takes a –2 penalty to AC until the end of your next turn.

Ride the Giant Down — Giantslayer Utility 12

You scramble onto the creature's back, distracting it and gaining a better position to bring it down.

Daily ✦ Martial
Move Action Melee 1
Target: One Large or larger creature
Effect: You move into the target's space, provoking opportunity attacks as normal. Until you leave the target's space, the target grants combat advantage to you and your allies and takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls, and you grant combat advantage to other enemies. Any attack that damages you also deals half the attack's damage to the target. When the target moves, you move with it, staying in the same portion of the target's space.
If the target hits you with a melee attack, it can slide you to a square adjacent to its space unless you succeed on a saving throw.
Special: If you're trained in Athletics, you don't grant combat advantage to other enemies because of being in the target's space, and you can make a saving throw to negate any pull, push, or slide that would move you out of the target's space.

Giantslayer's Strike — Giantslayer Attack 20

The precision and force of your attack shocks your gigantic foe.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged), and the target is dazed (save ends). If the target is Large or larger, the attack deals 1[W] extra damage, and instead of being dazed, the target is stunned (save ends).

Hellborn Shadow

"My ancestors gave much to learn the secrets of the Nine Hells. Why shouldn't I benefit from their sacrifice?"

Prerequisites: Tiefling, ranger

Although you're a being of this world, you're cursed to carry the mark of an infernal pact made by your mortal ancestors. The weight of that heritage rests heavy on your soul. Yours has been the life of one apart—a life marred by the prejudice of others and of battle against foul creatures spawned from darkness.

You have long seen similar darkness within yourself, hiding it to avoid the hate of bigots or revealing it to evoke horror in your enemies. You have sought the ancient secrets of your people. You have overcome evil dreams and vile impulses to master your inner nature. Finally, you have tapped sinister knowledge of your immortal forebears to aid you in your quests.

It's irrelevant whether you obtained these secrets in catacombs once lost to the ravages of time, within your own being, or from tormenting visions. The point is that you've learned to unleash some of your hidden potential by speaking words of power that few mortals know. With the baleful utterances you have learned, you can unleash pain, fire, and shadow. You can transform yourself momentarily into a form like that of your greatest ancestors and take to the air.

The darkness you have allowed to creep into your being now colors your exploits. Your heroic acts and your reputation, as well as those of your comrades, are tainted by the devilish legacy you have willingly tapped. The finale of your story will ultimately determine if your end justified your means.

Hellborn Shadow Path Features

Hunter's Feast (11th level): Whenever you reduce your quarry to 0 hit points, you gain temporary hit points equal to 1 + your Constitution modifier.

Immolation Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to deal fire damage to your quarry equal to your Hunter's Quarry damage, instead of taking an extra action.

Hellfire Caress (16th level): Whenever you hit your quarry with a melee or a ranged attack, the target loses fire resistance and immunity until the end of your next turn.

Hellborn Shadow Exploits

Shadowbite Strike Hellborn Shadow Attack 11

Just before you loose your attack, you whisper a word of power to make your enemy more vulnerable to your attacks and to cover yourself in a thin veil of darkness.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Strength vs. AC (main weapon and off-hand weapon), two attacks
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier + Charisma modifier damage per attack, and the target gains vulnerable 5 to your attacks until the end of your next turn.
Effect: You gain concealment until the start of your next turn.

Wings of Devilry Hellborn Shadow Utility 12

You surge aloft on tattered, leathery wings. When you land, they dissolve into foul-smelling smoke.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Effect: You fly a number of squares equal to your speed and must land at the end of this movement. You then gain concealment until the end of your next turn.

Balefire Scourge Hellborn Shadow Attack 20

With a word of power, infernal flames erupt all over your weapons, lending fire and speed to your attacks.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Requirement: You must be wielding two melee weapons.
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target takes ongoing 10 fire damage and loses any fire resistance or immunity (save ends both).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You gain concealment until the end of your next turn.

Horizon Walker

"In time, these eyes will see all realms."

Prerequisite: Ranger

The world is vast, with few mapped places. It begs exploration, instilling wanderlust in brave hearts. Roving it is a test of skill and stamina, an ordeal that rewards the intrepid with amazing sights, exciting encounters, and more. Still, the world is only one place in the broader cosmos. Other planes also beckon to the curious wanderer. The trials and experiences they offer can defy the worldly imagination and force adaptation beyond mortal ken.

Horizon walker is the traditional name for a ceaseless roamer who seeks the unexplored regions of the universe. The appellation applies to members of a loose confederation of warriors who recognize one another as comrades on life's wondrous journey. Such travelers go from place to place, from plane to plane, developing their skills and a mystic connection with the environment. They return changed by their contact with other realms, and with knowledge to better protect the world most mortals know.

Like most horizon walkers, you have traveled the world. You learned about it and protect its inhabitants from otherworldly threats. Then you fearlessly set out into the wider universe, using your skills and the magical nature of your tie to the world to develop similar bonds with the far reaches of creation.

JIM PAVELEC

To this day, you're incapable of staying in one place long. Unseen locales summon you with their mystery. Your destiny whispers to you from an unknown vista. Each step you take moves you closer to it.

Horizon Walker Path Features

Wanderer's Action (11th Level): When you spend an action point to take a move action, you gain an action point after taking that action.

Shadowfell Sight (11th Level): You gain darkvision. If you are in the Shadowfell, you also gain a +5 bonus to Perception checks.

Astral Infusion (16th Level): You gain a bonus to death saving throws and to your healing surge value equal to your Wisdom modifier. If you are on the Astral Sea or in any divine dominion there, you can't die as a result of failing three death saving throws, although damage can still kill you.

Horizon Walker Exploits

Worldly Strike Horizon Walker Attack 11

You put the arcane energy of the earth into your strike, strengthening your blow against otherworldly creatures.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged). If the target has an origin other than natural, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier, and the target is dazed until the start of your next turn.

Fey Strider Horizon Walker Utility 12

The piece of the Feywild you carry in your heart allows you to transcend space for a moment.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Teleportation
Move Action Personal
Effect: You can teleport a number of squares equal to 3 + your Wisdom modifier. If you're in the Feywild, you can teleport an additional 3 squares.
Special: If you have a beast companion and it is adjacent to you, it can teleport with you when you use this power.

Elemental Chaos Smite Horizon Walker Attack 20

Elemental energy swirls within you, and you unleash it as you strike an enemy.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Weapon; Acid, Cold, Fire, Radiant, or Thunder
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC (melee) or Dexterity vs. AC (ranged)
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged). The damage type is your choice of acid, cold, fire, radiant, or thunder, and the target takes ongoing 10 damage of that damage type (save ends). If you're in the Elemental Chaos, the target instead takes ongoing 20 damage of that damage type (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and no ongoing damage.

Pack Runner

"To run with the pack is to be one with the pack."

Prerequisites: Ranger, Beast Mastery class feature, beast companion (wolf)

Humanoids have taken clever beasts as companions since the beginning of time. The most prevalent among such animals are those from the canine family. Like humanoids, canines have a cooperative mentality and an established social order. It's not surprising that nearly every humanoid race that has the option to do so—from humans to goblins, eladrin to gnolls—keeps hounds or doglike beasts as pets.

Myth holds that, just as humanoids have adopted canines, so too have canines adopted humanoids. One such story is the tale of Kurngarl, or Kurn the Hunter. Soon enough after the fall of the tiefling empire that the hatred of that race was still widespread, unnamed human parents bore a tiefling child. The parents left the babe in an enchanted wood to die of exposure. By some twist of destiny—or, certain versions say, by Melora's fickle mercies—wolves found the infant instead. Yunulf, "the Lady of the Wolves," added the human child to her litter, naming him Horned Man.

Kurngarl developed uncanny skills with nature while living with his wolf family, learning from a variety of other animals as well. Eventually, a dwarf explorer named Fargrim found Kurngarl and took the tiefling child to the ancient dwarven hold of Durigirn. The young tiefling then became a citizen of the dwarven hold and roamed the wilderness surrounding it. Even so, he acknowledged no dwarven name in place of the one his wolf mother had given him. That he translated literally into Dwarven, accepting only the nickname Kurn as an alternative.

Kurngarl had many adventures, almost all with his wolf brother Grabor by his side. Kurn and Grabor were renowned as hunters and trackers among the dwarves of Durigirn. They are also mentioned in the legends of other races, enjoying a heroic reputation for battling monsters, especially gnolls and giants. Kurn the Hunter is reputed to have turned the animals of the wilderness against unjust people in civilized areas. As such, he is held as an example by Melora's followers.

Despite differences in your life's history, like Kurn, you have a preternatural connection with a canine beast. You and your companion function as a deadly unit among the larger pack made up of your other allies. For its part, your companion has taken cues from you, developing a level of competence and guile rivaling that of some humanoids. You have taken the wildness of the wolf into your spirit. Those who observe the two of you together find it hard to tell where the line between humanoid and beast is drawn.

Pack Runner Path Features

Runner's Action (11th Level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can shift half your speed as a free action before or after taking the extra action.

Pack Chase (11th Level): If you and your beast companion move at least 2 squares during your turn, you both gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls until the start of your next turn.

Canine's Cunning (16th Level): If you are within 5 squares of your beast companion, you can command it to shift 1 square as a minor action. When you do this, you can also shift 1 square.

Pack Runner Exploits

Pack Runner Assault — Pack Runner Attack 11

Working in unison, you and your wolf companion tear at an enemy from different angles, dividing the foe's attention.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the primary attack, both you and your beast companion can shift 2 squares.
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target grants combat advantage to your beast companion for the secondary attack.
Effect: Your beast companion makes a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[B] + beast's Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Wolfskin — Pack Runner Utility 12

As you take on a canine aspect, your senses grow keener and your footsteps fleeter.

Daily ✦ Beast, Primal
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be within 5 squares of your beast companion.
Effect: You gain a +5 power bonus to Stealth and Perception checks and a +2 power bonus to speed. This effect lasts for 1 hour, until you take a minor action to end it, or until you are knocked unconscious.

Neck-Bite Pounce — Pack Runner Attack 20

Your wolf friend springs at your adversary, bowling the foe over and landing a vicious bite on a vital area.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial
Standard Action Melee beast 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 3[B] + beast's Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is knocked prone and takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).
Miss: No damage, and the target is slowed and takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends both).

Ruthless Punisher

"The most dangerous foes are those who know the difference between right and wrong yet choose to do evil. They also understand what dying really means."

Prerequisite: Ranger

For a mundane hunter or a common would-be hero, ordinary animals and beastlike monsters are worthy prey. Regardless of what such a creature is physically capable of, or the wrongs it's responsible for, it has only raw instinct or brutish cunning to use against its antagonist. Reaction is its only course. The beast lacks the abilities to reason and to plan, which are required for any but the most mindless of evil acts.

Humanoid creatures seldom suffer from this lack, this banality. Even a semblance of human intelligence, combined with the ability to use weapons and other skills, makes an adversary that much more dangerous. From common goblins to demon lords and deities, the most numerous wicked creatures in the cosmos live inside various humanoid frames. The form is similar enough in each instance that knowledge of one is a help against another, no matter how different the seeming. Malevolent or not, few creatures offer the challenge that a humanoid quarry does.

Long ago, whether for vengeance, righteousness, or pure gamesmanship, you chose to specialize in facing and taking out humanoid foes. You excel at tracking and opposing such canny foes, slaying the many who deserve death and retrieving a few for reward, profit, or justice. For you, the understanding of anatomy, the inflicting of pain, and the invoking of fear are weapons as effective as sword or bow.

You've been so successful that you have developed a merciless reputation. The mention of your name inspires terror among those who know they must face you. One day, you're sure, a humanoid adversary of mythic scope will tremble at your approach.

Ruthless Punisher Path Features

Ruthless Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to reroll any attack roll against a humanoid target designated as your quarry, instead of taking an extra action.

Most Dangerous Prey (11th level): Against any humanoid target designated as your quarry, you gain a bonus to damage rolls equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Ongoing Punishment (16th level): You gain a bonus to the ongoing damage you deal equal to your Wisdom modifier. You also gain combat advantage against humanoid enemies that are taking ongoing damage.

Ruthless Punisher Exploits

Crippling Shot — Ruthless Punisher Attack 11

A blow to the vitals causes your victim to stagger and whimper in pain.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex (melee) or Dexterity vs. Reflex (ranged)
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged), and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn. If the target is a humanoid, it is also weakened until the end of your next turn.

Named Dread — Ruthless Punisher Utility 12

Your name is terror among your humanoid foes.

Daily ✦ Fear, Martial
Minor Action Close burst 10
Target: Each humanoid enemy in burst that can hear you
Effect: You speak your name, and the targets take a –2 penalty to attack rolls against you until the end of the encounter. If you're trained in Intimidate, you also gain combat advantage against the targets until the end of your next turn.

Bleed Away — Ruthless Punisher Attack 20

If your adversary fails to give ground under your assault, your wounding blows feed the earth with blood.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex (melee) or Dexterity vs. Reflex (ranged), three attacks
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged) per attack. You slide the target 2 squares and can shift 2 squares after each hit.
Miss: No damage, and you slide the target 1 square and can shift 1 square after each miss.
Effect: The target can negate each slide as a free action, but it then takes ongoing 10 damage per square of forced movement negated.

Sharpshooter

"The faster they come, the sooner I shoot 'em down."

Prerequisite: Ranger

Mastery of a chosen armament is a long-standing tradition among many peoples. Legends are full of examples: the fighter who is one with his sword or the assassin who can't miss with knives. Fables also tell of those who have consummate proficiency with the bow or the crossbow.

Some warriors acquire skill with the bow to avoid close combat. Others do so because ability and purpose lead them that way. Archers work for all sorts of causes, military to mercenary, noble to malevolent. One example is the battlefield archer (Player's Handbook), a tactical shooter that works well in the chaos of small-unit combat.

Unlike other archers, the sharpshooter's purpose is to become legendary for accuracy and skill, as well as for the number and sorts of foes defeated. Quick shooting, accuracy, and deadliness are the sharpshooter's trademarks, along with the ability to use a bow or a crossbow in ways that few others can. Some who would become the ultimate sharpshooter look for other archers to challenge in contests of skill or even in duels to the death.

You have honed your bow or crossbow skills with a desire to become the best of the best. You fire faster than most folk would think possible. When enemies try to move in close and shut you down, you shoot on without compromising defense. Those who watch you work could swear your arrows are alive. One day, you'll be targeting that one enemy whose defeat will make you a legend.

JIM PAVELEC

Sharpshooter Path Features

Rapid-Fire Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can make a ranged basic attack with a bow or a crossbow as a free action before or after taking the extra action.

Opportunity Fire (11th level): You can use a bow or a loaded crossbow to make opportunity attacks. These attacks don't provoke opportunity attacks.

Seeking Arrow (16th level): You don't take the normal penalty to attack rolls for concealment or cover when making a ranged attack against a creature designated as your quarry. You still take the penalty for total concealment or superior cover.

Sharpshooter Exploits

Stab and Shoot — Sharpshooter Attack 11

You drive your arrow into an adjacent enemy, pull it out, load it, and fire it at another foe.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee 1
Requirement: You must be wielding a bow or a crossbow.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your turn. Make a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target in weapon range
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Perfect Aim — Sharpshooter Utility 12

You take the time to line up a deadly shot.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be wielding a ranged weapon.
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, your next ranged attack gains a power bonus to the attack and damage rolls equal to your Wisdom modifier. If you move or take damage before making a ranged attack, the bonus is lost.

Escalating Barrage — Sharpshooter Attack 20

With increasing accuracy and deadliness, you send your shots at multiple foes.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: Make a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Dexterity + 2 vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: Make a tertiary attack.
Tertiary Target: One creature other than the primary and secondary targets
Tertiary Attack: Dexterity + 4 vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Sylvan Archer

"Drawing the bowstring is a spiritual oath. The flight of the arrow is its fulfillment."

Prerequisites: Elf, ranger

Like their eladrin cousins, elves have the time and the will to give everything they do a complex expression. To them, something worth doing at all is worth doing better than well—it's worth total dedication of body, mind, and soul. Any task merits mastering to the extent that the very process of doing it, even in training, is beautiful. Further, to the fey mind, combining seemingly disparate arts and joys into one form creates something more beautiful in the end. This is as true of archery as it is of any other activity.

Ages ago, after they entered the world and became separated from the eladrin, elves found it necessary to survive in the hostile wilds. Grace and awareness became their strengths. The bow became their chosen weapon for hunting and stealthy warfare.

The magic flowing in the fey soul has enabled more than one elf to forge a spiritual tie with the bow. Such archers are practiced at engaging targets in dense forests and areas fraught with cover. The sound of an enemy bowstring being drawn or the hint of movement in the undergrowth is enough to draw a reactive shot faster than any intended attack can come. A master of elven archery easily deals with multiple foes, and in time develops the uncanny ability to make arrows literally track their targets. Elven arrows can be said literally to have an enemy's name on them.

You carry on this glorious tradition. Stalking in untamed and dangerous places armed with only quiver and bow, you have become an exemplar of elven marksmanship. Your finely honed senses are second to none, and your aim is ever true. Among the most formidable of hunters, you have a shooting expertise that transcends the mundane skill of other archers. Your spirit reaches out to inform you of the unseen. If your skill and your amazing deeds carry you farther, elves who come to the way of the bow after you will hold you as the example that guides them.

Sylvan Archer Path Features

Archer's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, your ranged attack rolls take no penalties for cover, superior cover, concealment, or total concealment until the end of your next turn.

Sylvan Senses (11th level): You gain a +2 bonus to Perception checks.

Intuitive Hunter (16th level): When making ranged attacks, you add your Wisdom modifier to the extra damage dealt by your Hunter's Quarry class feature.

Sylvan Archer Exploits

Shaft Splitter — Sylvan Archer Attack 11

As your foe launches his attack, you loose a shot right down his sights.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Ranged weapon
Trigger: An enemy hits you or an ally within 5 squares of you with a ranged attack
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target takes a -5 penalty to the triggering attack roll.

Elf-Eyed Archery — Sylvan Archer Utility 12

You can easily divide your attention between chosen targets.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Ranged sight
Target: One creature
Effect: You designate the target as your quarry, even if it isn't the closest enemy to you. The target doesn't count against your normal limit of one quarry at a time, although you can still deal your Hunter's Quarry damage only once per round.
Special: Using this power doesn't provoke opportunity attacks.

Named Arrow — Sylvan Archer Attack 20

Whispering your foe's name in Elven, you loose your arrow and watch it streak unerringly across the battlefield.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Target: One creature
Effect: If you speak the target's name when you use this power, you designate the target as your quarry and take no penalties to the attack roll for cover, superior cover, concealment, or total concealment.
Attack: Dexterity vs. Will
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). If you spoke the target's name, instead of being dazed, the target is stunned (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed until the end of its next turn. If you spoke the target's name, instead of being dazed, the target is stunned until the end of its next turn.

Wildcat Stalker

"This cat is subtle and fierce, just like its master."

Prerequisites: Ranger, Beast Mastery class feature, beast companion (cat)

Independence, courage, and quickness of mind and body—the cat symbolizes all of these traits. It prefers to watch the world carefully from a good vantage before acting decisively. Normally calm and fastidiously clean, a feline loves to play but fights fearlessly when it must. It is a stealthy hunter that specializes in ambushes and deadly rushes, finishing its prey as quickly as possible. When surrounded by friends, the cat is industrious and protective, sharing what it has.

You see yourself in the cat, or a little of the cat in yourself. You too are a careful and swift hunter, with catlike grace and bravery. Surprise and swift attacks are your specialty, and few compare to you in your self-sufficiency.

Maybe that's why you chose a wild cat as a companion (or perhaps it was the cat that picked you). You have developed your feline qualities, growing in awareness, slyness, and sneakiness. Your beast companion has become a strong warrior at your side, using its predatory skills to bring down your common adversaries as if they were game.

As word of your deeds spreads, your cat's fame grows with yours. It has become an emblem that identifies you among those you meet, affect, and oppose. When your story is done, your cat will stand beside you in mythic chronicles, as if you and it were one.

JIM PAVELEC

Wildcat Stalker Path Features

Neck Seeker (11th Level): You and your beast companion gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls against any bloodied enemy designated as your quarry.

Prowling Action (11th Level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you also gain concealment until the end of your next turn.

Cat's Quarry (16th Level): When you or your beast companion reduces an enemy to 0 hit points (whether or not that enemy is your quarry), you can designate a new quarry as a free action instead of as a minor action.

Wildcat Stalker Exploits

Cat-Eyed Strike Wildcat Stalker Attack 11

Your sharp senses allow you to aim for a gap in your foe's defenses.

Encounter ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon (beast 1)
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex (melee) or Dexterity vs. Reflex (ranged)
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage (melee) or 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage (ranged). If you have combat advantage against the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Lurk Unseen Wildcat Stalker Utility 12

You and your cat move like mist in the grass.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Standard Action Close burst 1
Requirement: You and your beast companion must have concealment.
Targets: You and your beast companion in burst
Effect: Each target has total concealment until the end of your next turn or until the target attacks.

Panther Pounce Wildcat Stalker Attack 20

At your signal, your cat launches at your enemy, tearing with tooth and claw.

Daily ✦ Beast, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee beast 1
Target: One creature designated as your quarry
Attack: Beast's attack bonus vs. AC
Hit: 2[B] + beast's Dexterity modifier damage. If your beast companion was hidden from the target at the start of your turn, the attack deals 3[B] extra damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Before and after the attack, your beast companion can shift its speed, ignoring difficult terrain.

CHAPTER 3

Rogue

"Many learn to break legs; a few learn to break wills. Some master deception, others agility. Me? I've got it all. Just tell me what you need done."

THE WORD "rogue" has many meanings, and those who fall into this class are as varied. Plenty of rogues grow up on the street, honing their talents to become hard-nosed toughs or sharp grifters. Others—foppish nobles or venturesome rakes with more cunning with a blade and the tongue than scruples—come from the opposite end of the social ladder. Many rogues grow up connected to the underworld and absorb those values. Some come from noncriminal backgrounds, developing skills that serve well in risky ventures. A few are or were spies or scouts for other powerful people or creatures.

You could be a rogue who relies on brute force or deception to get your way. Or you might possess great skill and fighting prowess. Perhaps you or your circumstances shaped you into someone who knows how to coerce others through threats, implied or direct.

This chapter supports the rogue builds presented in the Player's Handbook. It's also intended to support other sorts of rogue builds. It contains the following information.

- New Rogue Builds: The aerialist and the cutthroat offer two new ways to fulfill your function, which, of course, is to quickly finish off your enemies.
- New Class Feature: You now have three rogue tactics options to choose from, including the new Ruthless Ruffian.
- New Rogue Powers: Be cruel, be fast, or be both with a new array of exploits that reward one of numerous combat styles. Powers that have the rattling keyword leave your foes shaking in their boots.
- New Paragon Paths: Perfect your sort of skulduggery by choosing one of twelve new roguish paths. Be the lethal shot in the dark, teach your knives to take wing, swashbuckle, or deal death as an agent of the Raven Queen.

VINCENT PROCE

NEW ROGUE BUILDS

This book introduces two rogue builds: the aerialist and the cutthroat. The aerialist is a mobile striker who relies on the Acrobatics skill for an edge in attacks and maneuvers, whereas the cutthroat is a charming killer, using training in Intimidate to rattle foes.

Aerialist Rogue

All rogues are known for their agility and daring, but you take both to the next level. Ducking under a giant's club isn't enough; you leap over it and cartwheel to safety. You're a masterful mover and an expert top-story burglar, using your abilities to tumble into the fray, into high openings, and out of all sorts of tight spots. Dexterity is your primary ability score, because you rely on it for your attacks and acrobatic stunts. Charisma is secondary for you, useful in avoiding opportunity attacks if you employ the Artful Dodger tactic. Strength serves you well as a tertiary ability, helping your Athletics checks in particular.

Suggested Feat: Defensive Mobility (Human feat: Sure Climber)

Suggested Skills: Acrobatics, Athletics, Bluff, Perception, Stealth, Thievery

Suggested At-Will Powers: deft strike, riposte strike

Suggested Encounter Power: *fox's gambit

Suggested Daily Power: *handspring assault

*New option presented in this book

Cutthroat Rogue

Leave smiles and misdirection to the tricksters. Instead, you use your animal magnetism in a more beastly way, oozing menace and implying a willingness to allow those who cross you to linger in pain. A friendly manner is for the weak; you achieve your way through tough words, hard looks, and the ability to back up either. Your attacks use Dexterity, so that should be your highest ability score. Charisma follows as a close second, essential for getting your way by using Intimidate. Strength comes in third; it's useful in delivering brutal attacks if you employ the Ruthless Ruffian tactic.

Suggested Feat: Press the Advantage (Human feat: Backstabber)

Suggested Skills: Bluff, Insight, Intimidate, Stealth, Streetwise, Thievery

Suggested At-Will Powers: disheartening strike,* sly flourish

Suggested Encounter Power: *termination threat

Suggested Daily Power: *checking jab

*New option presented in this book

VINCENT PROCE

NEW CLASS FEATURE

Instead of selecting either Artful Dodger or Brutal Scoundrel as your rogue tactic, you can select Ruthless Ruffian.

Ruthless Ruffian: You are proficient with the club and the mace, and you can use those weapons with Sneak Attack or any rogue power that normally requires a light blade. If you use a club or a mace to deliver an attack that has the rattling keyword, add your Strength modifier to the damage roll.

NEW ROGUE POWERS

A rogue thrives on audacious exploits that keep the enemy guessing. An aerialist rogue, perhaps even more than other sorts of rogues, relies on powers that focus on skill and movement. If you're a cutthroat, you like exploits that focus your dark personality, especially those that have the rattling keyword. Nothing stops any rogue from dabbling in the new powers here. In fact, if you're a rogue worth your salt, one or more of these powers is bound to be just the trick you need to round out your repertoire.

New Keyword

Some powers in this chapter use the new rattling keyword.

Rattling: If you are trained in Intimidate and you deal damage with an attack that has this keyword, the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of your next turn. A creature immune to fear is not subject to this penalty.

Level 1 At-Will Exploits

Disheartening Strike — Rogue Attack 1

The bite of your weapon is deepened by the sting of your ire.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Increase damage to 2[W] + Dexterity modifier at 21st level.

SNEAK ATTACK

Is it just a matter of timing, attacking when your foe's back is turned or defenses down? Is it all about surprise, doing exactly what your enemy least expects? Or is it the surgical precision of your blade, striking right in the most vulnerable places? Sneak Attack damage isn't just extra dice you roll; it's what makes your attacks different from anyone else's. How can you make it feel unique?

Level 1 Encounter Exploits

Fox's Gambit — Rogue Attack 1

A distracting stab is all you need to foil your enemy's focus and step into a better position.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you negate any marks the target has applied. The target cannot mark any targets until the end of your next turn.
Effect: You can shift 1 square.
Artful Dodger: You can instead shift a number of squares equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Guarded Attack — Rogue Attack 1

Striking quickly, you remain ready to parry.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and if the target makes a melee attack against you before the start of your next turn, you can make a secondary attack against it as an immediate interrupt.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to the triggering attack roll.

Impact Shot — Rogue Attack 1

Your shot slams your foe backward.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light thrown weapon, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you push the target 1 square.

Sly Lunge — Rogue Attack 1

You dart in to take advantage of lax defenses, and after striking, you're ready to capitalize on the same opening again.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature granting combat advantage to you
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you gain combat advantage against the target until the end of your next turn. If you don't apply your Sneak Attack damage to this attack, it deals 1d6 extra damage.
Brutal Scoundrel: The attack deals extra damage equal to your Strength modifier.

Termination Threat — Rogue Attack 1

Your attack unnerves your foe, possibly freezing it in its tracks.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier + Charisma modifier damage.
Ruthless Ruffian: If the target is already taking the attack penalty from one of your rattling attacks, the target is also immobilized until the end of your next turn.

Unbalancing Shot — Rogue Attack 1

The impact of your shot leaves your enemy wobbly.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light thrown weapon, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Level 1 Daily Exploits

Checking Jab — Rogue Attack 1

You smile callously as your attack lands, cowing your enemy into an overcautious state.

Daily ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). You have combat advantage against the target while it is slowed by this attack.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is not slowed.

Confounding Attack — Rogue Attack 1

Your attack causes your opponent to accidentally wallop his ally.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: As a free action, the target makes a melee basic attack against a creature of your choice adjacent to it. If you or the target has combat advantage against the creature and you haven't dealt your Sneak Attack damage during this round, you can deal your Sneak Attack damage against the creature.

Handspring Assault — Rogue Attack 1

Springing forward with feline agility, you lash out, cut deep, and roll away to safety.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you can shift 2 squares.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Pommel Smash — Rogue Attack 1

You pound the pommel of your blade into your enemy's face.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of its next turn.

Precise Incision — Rogue Attack 1

You target an opening in your foe's armor and make a vicious cut.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Press the Advantage — Rogue Attack 1

Having just wounded your opponent, you follow up with a finishing move.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Free Action Melee weapon
Trigger: You bloody an enemy with a melee attack
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Level 2 Utility Exploits

Adaptable Flanker — Rogue Utility 2

The mere presence of an ally gives you all the advantage you need.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You and an ally must be adjacent to the same enemy.
Effect: You gain combat advantage against the enemy until the start of your next turn.

Double Take — Rogue Utility 2

Suspecting something is hidden, you concentrate your will on spotting it.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Perception.
Effect: Make a Perception check with a bonus equal to your Charisma modifier.

Hop Up — Rogue Utility 2

Rolling with a blow that knocked you down, you hop up just a few steps away.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: You are knocked prone
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Effect: You stand up and can shift 1 square.

Marked Escape — Rogue Utility 2

Through your subtlety, you end your enemy's mark.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be marked.
Effect: The marked condition ends on you.

Reap the Rattled — Rogue Utility 2

Rattled foes are ripe fodder for your attacks.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Intimidate.
Effect: Select an enemy within line of sight that is taking the penalty from one of your rattling attacks. You gain combat advantage against that enemy until the end of your next turn.

Sneak in the Attack — Rogue Utility 2

You give your ally the advantage she needs to inflict a devastating attack.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Effect: Until the start of your next turn, the next ally who hits the target and has combat advantage against it deals extra damage against it equal to your Sneak Attack damage.

Level 3 Encounter Exploits

Blade Vault — Rogue Attack 3

You bound into the air, driving your blade home as you land.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift 2 squares. If you are trained in Athletics, ignore difficult terrain during the shift.
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. For every square you shifted as part of this power, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Strength modifier.

Defender's Cohort — Rogue Attack 3

Another warrior's vigilance is all you need to find the soft spot in your enemy's defenses.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If the target is marked by an ally of yours, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Charisma modifier.

Enforced Threat — Rogue Attack 3

Your weapon backs up your threats, extracting its toll in blood.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Ruthless Ruffian: If the target is taking the attack penalty from one of your rattling attacks, you gain combat advantage against the target for this attack.
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Flamboyant Strike — Rogue Attack 3

By distracting your foe with a colorful flourish, you manage to attack from an unexpected angle.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier + Charisma modifier damage.
Artful Dodger: You can shift 1 square.

JASON A. ENGLE

Low Slash — Rogue Attack 3

Your blade bites your enemy's legs, momentarily hobbling him.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, you slide the target 1 square, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn. If you're flanking the target, the attack deals extra damage equal to your Strength modifier or Charisma modifier.

Nasty Backswing — Rogue Attack 3

You follow a missed attack with a surprising strike and a hasty sidestep.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Free Action Melee weapon
Trigger: You miss with a melee attack
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC. You have combat advantage for this attack.
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you can shift 1 square.
Brutal Scoundrel: The attack deals extra damage equal to your Strength modifier.

Level 5 Daily Exploits

Compel the Craven — Rogue Attack 5

Your unnerving attack forces your foe to run away from you, heedless of its enemies.

Daily ✦ Fear, Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Will
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target moves away from you a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier, avoiding unsafe squares and difficult terrain if it can.
Miss: The target moves 1 square away from you, avoiding unsafe squares and difficult terrain if it can.

Downward Spiral — Rogue Attack 5

You spin about with your weapon, toppling your enemies.

Daily ✦ Martial, Rattling
Standard Action Close burst 1
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: You knock the target prone.

Driving Assault — Rogue Attack 5

The force of your rapid attacks throws your enemy from its feet.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC, two attacks
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage per attack, you push the target 1 square, and you can shift 1 square toward the target. If both attacks hit, you knock the target prone after the second push.
Miss: Half damage per attack.

Flashy Riposte — Rogue Attack 5

Under attack, you elegantly whirl and let your blade give a sharp reply, leaving your foe off balance.

Daily ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy makes a melee attack against you
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: The target grants combat advantage to you and your allies until the end of your next turn.

Staggering Assault — Rogue Attack 5

You deal a savage strike that staggers your adversary.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). If the target is not bloodied when you make this attack, the attack deals 1[W] extra damage.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, when you hit the target, it is slowed (save ends).

Surefooted Retort — Rogue Attack 5

Lessening the impact of an incoming attack, you swivel away from your foe and deliver a slash as you come about.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy attacks you
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
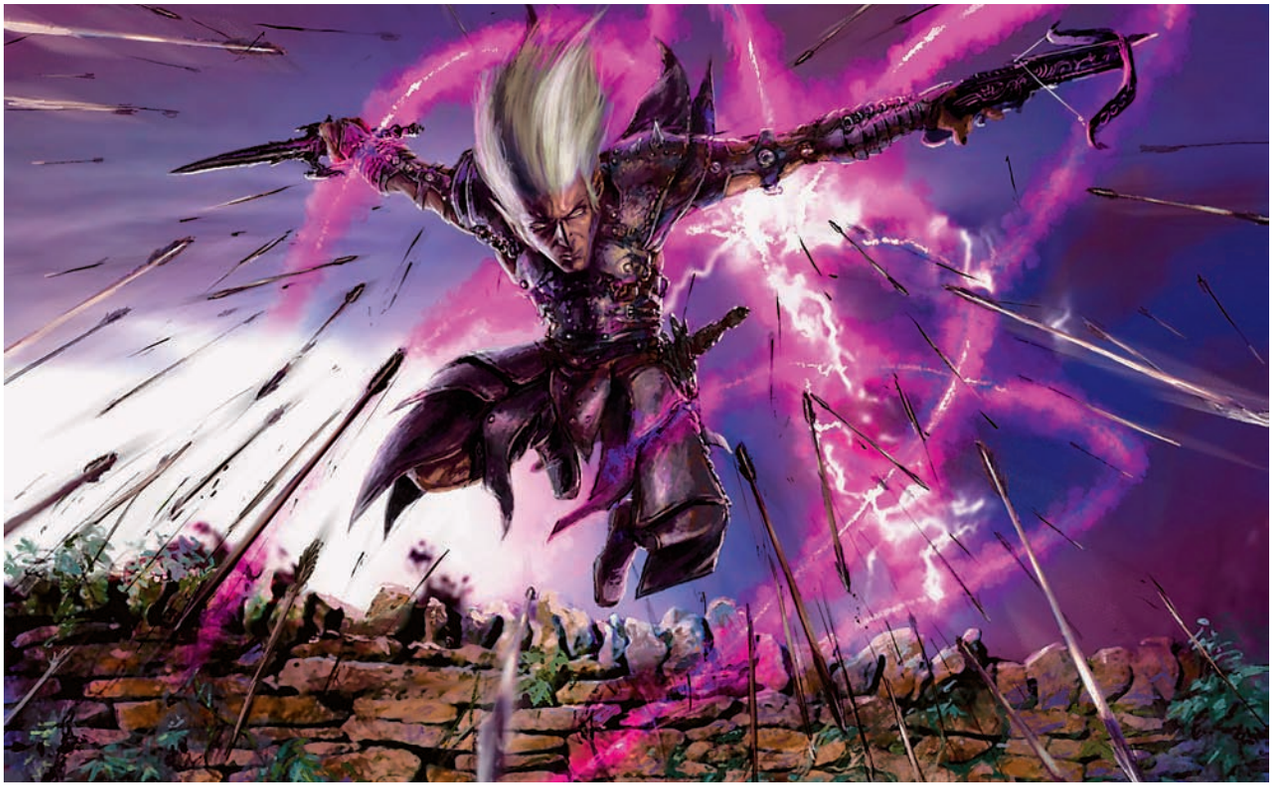
Effect: If the triggering attack would knock you prone or slow you, negate the condition. Reduce any pull, push, or slide from the triggering attack by a number of squares equal to your Dexterity modifier.



VINCENT PROCE

Level 6 Utility Exploits

Ferret Out Frailty — Rogue Utility 6

You can always spot easy prey.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Insight.
Effect: Until the beginning of your next turn, you gain combat advantage against one target within line of sight. If the target is taking the attack penalty from one of your rattling attacks, you instead gain combat advantage until the end of your next turn.

Fortuitous Dodge — Rogue Utility 6

You duck out of the way of an incoming attack, and it strikes another target.

Daily ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Melee 1
Trigger: A melee or a ranged attack misses you
Target: One creature other than the attacker
Effect: The target is also targeted by the triggering attack. You can then shift 1 square.

Sidestep Stance — Rogue Utility 6

You go on the defensive against a particular opponent, watching carefully for its attacks.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Effect: Choose one enemy within 5 squares of you that you can see. Until the stance ends, you gain a +2 power bonus to AC against that enemy's melee attacks and ranged attacks if you can see the enemy. You can choose a new enemy as a minor action.

Threatening Glare — Rogue Utility 6

Your hostile visage warns enemies to beware your wrath.

Encounter ✦ Fear, Martial
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Intimidate.
Effect: Until the end of your turn, opportunity attacks against you deal half damage, and if an enemy makes an opportunity attack against you, you gain combat advantage against that enemy until the end of your next turn.

Vault Position — Rogue Attack 6

You assume a balanced pose, ready to leap away from danger at a moment's notice.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics and Athletics.
Effect: Until the stance ends, you gain a +1 power bonus to Reflex. As a minor action, you can make an Athletics check to jump, but doing so ends the stance.

Vexing Flanker — Rogue Utility 6

Nimble feet and intense focus keep you on your foe.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: An ally enters a square adjacent to an enemy adjacent to you
Effect: You can shift to any other square adjacent to the enemy.

Level 7 Encounter Exploits

Circling Predator — Rogue Attack 7

You wheel around your foe, attacking mercilessly.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: You can shift 1 square and must end adjacent to the target. Then make a secondary attack against it.
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you gain combat advantage against the target until the end of your next turn.

Dismaying Slash — Rogue Attack 7

Your ripping strike saps your foe's determination.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws until the end of your next turn.

From the Shadows — Rogue Attack 7

You spring from the shadows to strike, and then you fade away as if you were never there.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift 2 squares. If the target could not see you before the shift, you gain combat advantage for this attack.
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you can shift 2 squares. If you have any cover or concealment after this shift, you can make a Stealth check as a free action.
Artful Dodger: Before the attack and after the hit, you can instead shift a number of squares equal to 1 + your Charisma modifier.

Hectoring Strike — Rogue Attack 7

You deliver a strong attack, dampening your opponent's fighting spirit.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier + Strength modifier damage.
Brutal Scoundrel: You slide the target 1 square, and the target grants combat advantage to you until the end of your next turn.

Snap Shot — Rogue Attack 7

You strike as quickly as a coiled viper.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light thrown weapon, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Spring the Trap — Rogue Attack 7

You're surrounded—just as you planned.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you can shift 1 square.
Ruthless Ruffian: This power gains the rattling keyword.

Level 9 Daily Exploits

Agonizing Shot — Rogue Attack 9

Your precise aim finds a weak spot.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light thrown weapon, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is slowed and takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends both).
Aftereffect: The target is slowed and takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends both).
Miss: Half damage, no ongoing damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).

Burst Fire — Rogue Attack 9

You loose missiles in an unpredictable pattern.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light thrown weapon, or a sling.
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Into Harm's Way — Rogue Attack 9

You deliver a slashing feint, causing your enemy to stumble into more danger.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Will
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares. Then an ally of yours can make a melee basic attack against the target as a free action.
Miss: Half damage.

Not It — Rogue Attack 9

Your sly attack directs your foe's attention to your ally.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and an ally adjacent to you or the target marks the target until the start of your next turn.
Miss: Half damage, and no mark.

Not Worth My Time — Rogue Attack 9

With a vicious blow and a callous shove, you judge your foe unworthy of further attention.

Daily ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you push the target 1 square. The target is then immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, no push, and the target is immobilized until the end of its next turn.

Rogue's Recovery — Rogue Attack 9

With a cunning attack, you create a new opportunity for yourself.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: If you have used all your encounter attack powers, you regain the use of a rogue encounter attack power you have used during this encounter. Or if you have combat advantage against the target, you can instead deal 2[W] extra damage with the attack.

Swift Strike — Rogue Attack 9

Your brutal efficiency makes your enemy pay for its lack of initiative.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If the target has not taken an action during this encounter, the attack deals 1[W] extra damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Vexing Escape — Rogue Attack 9

Your timely attack allows you to break away from combat, and you remain one step ahead of your foe thereafter.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon

Brisk Stride — Rogue Utility 10

Leaping across minor obstacles, you dart across the battlefield.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Athletics.
Effect: You can move your speed + 4. During this movement and until the end of your next turn, you can move across difficult terrain at your normal speed.

Combat Tumbleset — Rogue Utility 10

You deftly somersault into position.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Effect: You can shift your speed and can shift through squares occupied by enemies during this movement.

Executioner's Mien — Rogue Utility 10

Every one of your attacks exudes a murderous intent that unnerves your adversaries.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Intimidate.
Effect: Until the stance ends, all your attacks gain the rattling keyword.

Gap in the Armor — Rogue Utility 10

You take a moment to find a weak point in your opponent's defenses.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Perception.
Effect: Choose an enemy within 5 squares of you. You gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls against that enemy until the end of the encounter.

Peripheral Concealment — Rogue Utility 10

You slip away, and others briefly lose track of where you are.

Daily ✦ Martial
Standard Action Personal
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Stealth.
Requirement: No creature is within 3 squares of you.
Effect: You become hidden until you attack or until the end of your next turn.

Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: Whether or not this rattling attack deals damage, the target takes the -2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.
Sustain Minor: The penalty to attack rolls lasts until the end of your next turn, or you can end the penalty and daze the target until the end of your next turn.

Ripple Effect — Rogue Attack 15

Your tumbling swipe sends your foe headlong into another enemy, which sends it stumbling.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you slide the primary target 4 squares.
Miss: Half damage, and you slide the primary target 1 square.
Effect: Make a secondary attack after the slide.
Secondary Target: One enemy adjacent to the primary target
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d6 + Dexterity modifier damage, and you slide the secondary target 1 square.

Vicious Cooperation — Rogue Attack 15

Your attack gives your comrade the perfect opening to thump your opponent.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature you're flanking
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: An ally flanking the target with you can make a melee basic attack against it as a free action. You can deal Sneak Attack damage to the target if either you or the ally hit it.

Wounding Strike — Rogue Attack 15

You strike, intending to inflict grave injury.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If the target is not bloodied before you make this attack, the attack also deals ongoing 10 damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.

Level 16 Utility Exploits

Anticipate Attack — Rogue Utility 16

You sense the attack before it comes.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Interrupt Personal
Trigger: You are hit by an attack
Requirement: You must be trained in Insight.
Effect: You gain a +4 bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn.

Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Safe Bet — Rogue Attack 27

With an initial strike, you set yourself up to spring at your enemy if she dares to attack again.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If the target makes an attack before the start of your next turn, you can shift a number of squares equal to your Dexterity modifier and make a basic attack against the target as an immediate interrupt.

VINCENT PROCE

Skirmishing Strike — Rogue Attack 27

You move hastily to take your shot and then depart.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity - 2 vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you can shift 1 square.
Artful Dodger: You can instead shift a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier.

Stunning Assist — Rogue Attack 27

The fighter distracts him, and you shut him down.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling
Targets: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn. If the target is marked by any of your allies, it is stunned instead of dazed.

Stupefying Violence — Rogue Attack 27

Your enemy reels from your shocking belligerence.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Targets: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you slide the target 2 squares.
Ruthless Ruffian: You instead slide the target a number of squares equal to 2 + your Charisma modifier.

Level 29 Daily Exploits

Cagey Killer — Rogue Attack 29

You smile and flick your weapon; your enemy stares unmoving at the deep wound.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is stunned (save ends).
Aftereffect: The target is dazed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

Deathweaving Strike — Rogue Attack 29

Your attack sends the enemy lurching past your comrades, who take advantage by making attacks of their own.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you slide the target a number of squares equal to 1 + your Charisma modifier. Each of your allies adjacent to the target at any point during this forced movement can make a basic attack against the target as an opportunity action. Each ally's attack has combat advantage and deals extra damage equal to your Charisma modifier on a hit.

A Murder of One — Rogue Attack 29

You flip and flit, stab and slash, as if flying among your foes.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Prerequisite: You must be trained in Acrobatics.
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: You can shift 3 squares and can shift through squares occupied by enemies during this movement. Make a secondary attack.
Secondary Target: One creature other than the primary target
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If the primary attack hit, this attack deals 1[W] extra damage.
Effect: You can shift 3 squares and can shift through squares occupied by enemies during this movement. Make a tertiary attack.
Tertiary Target: One creature other than the primary and secondary targets
Tertiary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If the primary or the secondary attack hit, this attack deals 1[W] extra damage.

Sight-Stealing Shot — Rogue Attack 29

You attack your foe in the eyes, leaving him dumbfounded and temporarily unable to see.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light thrown weapon, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is blinded and dazed (save ends both).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed until the end of its next turn.

The Swashbuckler

The rogue is an ideal class for the swashbuckler famed in fiction. You could opt for cloth armor instead of leather, using a parrying dagger (see Adventurer's Vault) to help your AC. Pick a mix of acrobatic and trickster powers, relying on Dexterity and Charisma. It's worth a feat to get proficiency with the rapier, which is the best light blade.

Avandra's Luck

The swashbuckler's creed—"Luck favors the bold"—is part of Avandra's teachings. Daring rogues are more likely to thank her for good luck received than ask for it in advance. Through decisive action, they claim her luck as their own.

Cloaked Sniper

"You tell me—is it better to win with a shot from the dark or to lose up close?"

Prerequisites: Rogue, trained in Stealth

The advantage of getting the drop on an enemy is acknowledged far and wide. Equally prized is the benefit of taking out important targets with little risk. No one is better at accomplishing either task than a trained sharpshooter, and the sharpshooter's weapon of choice is the crossbow.

Nations and mercenary groups train specialized soldiers to use crossbows in this fashion. Underworld organizations do the same. Any such soldier is essentially an assassin who knows how to use a crossbow to slay from a distance without attracting notice. Dwarves in particular prize this exception to their normally straightforward battle tactics. That race produces fine snipers.

Such shooters don't shy away from a normal fight. They understand that reconnaissance and a plan, along with the ability to strike unseen from a great distance, are great advantages in a combat situation. A good ambush leaves the enemy weakened and confused, giving any follow-up assault a better chance of working.

You have chosen to hone your skills along these lines. You prefer to strike from hiding with a well-placed shot and to remain unobserved during a confrontation, aiding your allies by picking off foes without ever drawing notice. The hand crossbow is your preferred weapon.

Sniping is the ultimate tactic for you. The sound of a bolt finding its target is the sweet toll of victory. A bolt you fire might take out a sentry in a single hit, as well as sending your enemies scurrying for cover. If you miss, no matter. You can slink back into the shadows until you have a chance to shoot again.

Cloaked Sniper Path Features

Crossbow Savant (11th level): You add 5 squares to the normal range of any crossbow you wield and 10 squares to the long range. Treat a hand crossbow as an off-hand weapon, and treat any crossbow that has the load minor property as having the load free property instead.

Sniper Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to make a ranged basic attack and you have combat advantage against the target of the attack, you can add your Sneak Attack damage even if you have already dealt Sneak Attack damage during this round. If the attack hits, you can shift 1 square.

Versatile Combatant (16th level): When you are armed with a melee weapon in your main hand and a hand crossbow in your off hand, you do not provoke opportunity attacks when attacking with your hand crossbow.

Cloaked Sniper Exploits

Sudden Bolt — Cloaked Sniper Attack 11

From the edge of sight, your well-placed bolt knocks your enemy silly.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If you are hidden from the target when you make this attack, the target is dazed until the end of your turn.

Unseen Shot — Cloaked Sniper Utility 12

They saw your attack but have no idea where it came from.

At-Will ✦ Martial
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You miss with a ranged attack while hidden
Effect: You remain hidden if you have any cover or concealment. You can also shift 1 square.

Bolt from Nowhere — Cloaked Sniper Attack 20

Your bolt sails across the battlefield and sends your enemies into a panic.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Make a secondary attack, which has the fear keyword.
Secondary Target: The primary target and each enemy you can see within 3 squares of it
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. Will
Hit: Until the end of your next turn, the secondary target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls and grants combat advantage to you and your allies.

Daring Acrobat

"Agile movement is as much offensive as it is defensive."

Prerequisites: Rogue, trained in Acrobatics

Acrobatics is a widespread and popular talent. All people, from nobles to peasants, enjoy acrobatics shows, whether amid the finery of court or the debris of the street. A few venturesome religious rites, especially those that pay homage to Avandra or Kord, require the skill. Mastery of the body is part of numerous education philosophies, and acrobatics is unmatched in cultivating fitness and balance. Thieves and burglars use the skill to ply their trade. Training is easy to find and widely accepted. Some youngsters attain a level of mastery well before they reach adolescence.

Not to be underestimated is the value of such proficiency on the battlefield. A combatant who is adept at acrobatics can maneuver like no other. The adroit use of the skill opens up advantages that other warriors can't attain and allows the acrobat to avoid being pinned down. Movement becomes quicker and smoother as the acrobat uses the whole body as a tool, rather than just relying on the feet and the legs. It's obvious why some martial training includes instruction in acrobatics.

It's also clear that the adventurer has even more use for acrobatics than a warrior or a soldier does. Explorers routinely face perils that are best overcome with agility, poise, and a sense of one's body. More than one fortune seeker owes life and limb to his dedicated schooling in acrobatics.

To say that of you is a gross understatement, however. It doesn't matter if you came by your skill in a formal academy, from family tradition, or through the school of hard knocks. You have made acrobatics not only an art form, but also a martial style all your own.

You flabbergast friend and foe alike with your talent. Using it, you routinely accomplish tricks that seem beyond mortal capacity. With your flamboyant derring-do, you deliver terrible attacks and deftly capitalize on the smallest openings.

Daring Acrobat Path Features

Acrobatic Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can take a move action in addition to taking an extra action.

Tumbling Positions (11th level): You do not grant combat advantage to enemies when you are balancing, climbing, or prone.

Agile Charge (16th level): When you begin a charge, you gain a +1 bonus to AC and Reflex until the start of your next turn. Also, after completing a charge, you can take further actions (if you have any left).

Daring Acrobat Exploits

Wild Tumble Cut — Daring Acrobat Attack 11

With acrobatic flair, you rush in to deliver a vicious cut but are left momentarily off balance.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade, and you must charge and use this power in place of a melee basic attack.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target gains combat advantage against you until the start of your next turn.

Flawless Stunt — Daring Acrobat Utility 12

Your concentration and long hours of practice make all the difference in pulling off a trick.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You gain a +5 bonus to Acrobatics and Athletics checks until the end of your turn.

Dramatic Finish — Daring Acrobat Attack 20

You drive your blade deep into your wounded foe, knowing you have something in reserve as a follow-up.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, or 6[W] + Dexterity modifier damage if either you or the target is bloodied.
Effect: If this attack fails to reduce the target to 0 hit points, you can either make a melee basic attack against the target with a +5 bonus to the attack roll or spend a healing surge.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Death Dealer

"Killing's my game."

Prerequisite: Rogue

Some people are born killers. That penchant can be channeled in as many ways as there are reasons for slaughter. Some slay for religion or creed, others for power or influence, and still others for money, vengeance, glory, or just plain relief. Many who have a knack for murder take up violent professions, from soldier or town guard to gladiator or assassin. A few, whatever their reasons, make a career out of slaying monsters.

Killing is grim business, no matter who or what ends up dead. Nobody takes going to the grave lightly. Hands-off methods, such as poison, can sometimes work, as can stealthy techniques. Otherwise, direct and bloody conflict is the only way to go about butchery.

Strangely, a lot of would-be killers think that combat has rules. You know differently: In battle, fair play, honor, and mercy are for chumps. Fighting is all about dancing with death and being one of those still standing when the music ends. Maybe you came by your "philosophy" while being schooled as an assassin or hired sword. Of course, an adventurer's life has plenty of object lessons along the same lines: Kill or be killed.

When you start a fight, you take a little time to size up the competition. After that, it's all bloody business.

RON LEMEN

If someone has the nerve to attack you, you make that fool pay in such a way that anyone watching will think twice about facing you. Nobody escapes you unless they have the ability to take you out of the fight, or you want the story of your prowess to get around.

However you gained your skills, they are honed in accordance with your brutal creed. Those who go up against you risk everything. As proven by the boost you sometimes get from brutalizing our adversaries, you take at least a little pleasure in your work.

Death Dealer Path Features

No Respite (11th level): Enemies adjacent to you take a -2 penalty to saving throws.

Slaying Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain a +2 bonus to each damage die until the start of your next turn.

Unfair Advantage (16th level): When you hit a bloodied foe with a melee attack, you gain temporary hit points equal to your Strength modifier or Charisma modifier (your choice).

Death Dealer Exploits

Sizing Strike — Death Dealer Attack 11

Your attack is only probing, but what you see gives you confidence and your enemy pause.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you gain 10 temporary hit points. If you have combat advantage against the target, add your Strength modifier or Charisma modifier (your choice) to the damage roll and to the temporary hit points gained.

Gruesome Kill — Death Dealer Utility 12

You finish off your adversary with efficient butchery, and no other foe wants any part of you.

At-Will ✦ Martial
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You reduce an enemy to 0 hit points
Effect: Each enemy that can see you takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls against you until the start of your next turn.

Death Dealer Assault — Death Dealer Attack 20

The wound you open tags your foe as yours.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: The target takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends). Until the target saves against this damage, you can shift 1 square toward it as a minor action.

Dread Fang

"You're caught in my web of shadows, poor little insect. Now it's time to die."

Prerequisites: Drow, rogue

Deceive your prey into a weak tactical position. Strike without being seen. Kill without allowing a counter-attack. Don't sever a limb when you can cut off the head. Reward your enemies with death so horrifying that all others fear to oppose you. Live to fight again. All of these are drow rules of warfare, which young drow learn well just to get by in their treacherous society.

The drow are famous for slaughter, murdering all who get in their way. Countless folk have suffered the cruel kiss of a drow priestess's whip or the vile magic of a drow warlock. Innumerable slaves have lived and died as the wicked and capricious whims of their drow masters demanded. From this world you have come, and like others before you, you have found sanctuary in the arts of death. You learned the rudiments of drow warfare among your school-age peers. You mastered the blade-and-crossbow fighting style of the drow warrior to improve your station among your people. Better to be a valued killer than a slave or a sacrifice.

Maybe you smelled the deceptions and half-truths in your society, put up with the lies of the Spider Queen, until you could take no more. Perhaps the internecine warfare between drow houses left you without allies in the vast Underdark. You abandoned your past. Estranged from your homeland, you joined with other wanderers and continued your training. You have sought to become death incarnate and have succeeded well beyond the normal warriors of your people.

BETH TROTT

Dread Fang Path Features

Spider Assassin (11th level): You deal one extra die of Sneak Attack damage against a target that could not see you at the start of your turn.

Dread Sneak Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to make an attack against a target granting combat advantage to you, you can deal Sneak Attack damage even if you have already dealt Sneak Attack damage during this round.

Sinister Presence (16th level): When you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points, pick a second enemy within 5 squares of you. You gain combat advantage against the second enemy until the end of your next turn.

Dread Fang Exploits

Fang and Web Strike — Dread Fang Attack 11

With expert precision, you drive your blade through your opponent and loose a bolt at the same time.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow and a light blade.
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC (melee or ranged), two attacks
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage per attack.
Special: Using this power doesn't provoke opportunity attacks.

Spider Feint — Dread Fang Utility 12

You feint, causing your opponent to flinch as you slip past.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One creature in burst you can see
Effect: You gain a +5 bonus to AC against the target's opportunity attacks until the end of your next turn.

Venomous Sting — Dread Fang Attack 20

Using your dark fey power, you deliver a deep and toxic wound.

Daily ✦ Martial, Poison, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow or a light blade.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. Make a secondary attack against the target.
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target is weakened and takes ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends both).

Flying-Blade Adept

"Any monkey can stab someone. Now, throwing to kill—that's got style."

Prerequisites: Rogue, Quick Draw feat

Among common folk, knife and shuriken throwing are forms of entertainment and sport. Competitors throw under calm conditions at stationary targets. At the extreme, carnival throwers toss blades at a moving mark, or sport throwers have to put up with rowdy onlookers and too much drink.

It takes a special breed of warrior to specialize in throwing blades in actual combat. The clash of steel, the rush of magical forces, and the screams of the wounded and dying are far more than tap-room distractions. Moreover, the idea of tossing away a weapon seems tantamount to suicide. Still, anyone who has mastered the technique of hurling blades in battle knows that doing so helps to keep one out of harm's way.

Being such an expert takes guts, discernment, smarts, and quickness. The hurler must be brave enough to throw away a weapon, and to stand fast when the enemy recognizes the danger that he or she presents. The thrower's senses must be accurate enough to discern when to move and where. Furthermore, perception is nothing without the good judgment to exploit opportunities and to carry the right array of blades. And all this means little if the wielder lacks the agility or speed to take advantage of whatever battle situation arises.

You are such an expert with light thrown blades. Swift enough to draw weapons in rapid succession and to knock an arrow out of the air, you have little to fear when you throw a blade. Your talent allows you to hit with terrifying accuracy, to bounce your blades off one target and into another, and even to punch holes in enemy armor. You have even been known to throw so quickly that you can hit every target in your field of vision.

Flying-Blade Adept Path Features

Deadeye Blade (11th level): When you throw a light blade, it has the high crit property.

Flying-Blade Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can also make a ranged basic attack with a light blade as a free action.

Armor-Piercing Blade (16th level): The first time you score a critical hit against a target with a ranged attack using a light blade, that target takes a -2 penalty to AC until the end of the encounter.

Flying-Blade Adept Exploits

Ricochet Blade Flying-Blade Adept Attack 11

Your blade wounds, then careens off your target and into a nearby foe.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade with the light thrown property.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and an enemy within 3 squares of the target takes damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Nimble Deflection Flying-Blade Adept Utility 12

With a practiced eye, you follow a projectile's path and knock it out of the air.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Ranged weapon
Trigger: A creature hits you with a ranged attack
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade with the light thrown property.
Effect: You make a ranged basic attack, treating the attacking creature's attack roll as the target AC. If your attack hits, the triggering attack misses.

Bladed Fusillade Flying-Blade Adept Attack 20

You unleash a volley of thrown blades.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Close blast 5
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade with the light thrown property.
Target: Each enemy in blast you can see
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Guildmaster Thief

"Me and my crew, we'll get the job done. Top-story jobs to shakedowns—we're all in."

Prerequisites: Rogue, trained in Thievery

Whoever says crime doesn't pay just isn't good enough to pull it off. For the organized and resourceful, there's always an angle.

Thieves' guilds are criminal gangs that crop up mostly in urban areas. A single guild might manage or influence illegal activities such as assassination, blackmail, burglary, espionage, fencing stolen goods, grifting, smuggling, loan sharking, pickpocketing, piracy, racketeering, robbery, thuggery, and so on. A guild might also direct legal enterprises as legitimate business ventures, as cover, or as a way to control the flow of information. For instance, many thieves' guilds have their fingers in begging, bounty hunting, mercenary work, gambling, prostitution, shipping, and even street cleaning and lamp lighting.

Because a guild's business can be so varied, and because it often has trouble with legal authorities and rival gangs, it must divide its profitable interests between various centers of control. Those centers have bosses, who report to those higher in the chain of command. Thus, guilds have complicated hierarchies, clear divisions of authority, and codes of behavior that can border on downright law-abiding in some respects. A guildmaster typically leads a portion of a guild, and some guilds have a grand master who oversees a guild's entire operation.

You might be an actual guildmaster, or maybe you grew up in the criminal world and know what's what on the street and in a brawl. Your experience has left you able to run a criminal crew on jobs and in fights. You're a great skirmisher who knows how to get a job done right while helping out your pals with some "world-wise management."

Guildmaster Thief Path Features

Guildmaster's Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, instead of deducting the action point from your total you can deduct it from the total of any willing ally you can see. Similarly, as long as you are willing and conscious, any ally who can see you can deduct an action point from your total instead of from his or her total when spending an action point to take an extra action. The normal limit of action points spent during an encounter still applies.

Whenever you spend an ally's action point to take an extra action, you gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls until the start of your next turn.

Thieving Crew (11th level): Allies within 5 squares of you gain a +2 bonus to Stealth checks and Thievery checks.

Thick as Thieves (16th level): Any ally flanking with you gains a bonus to melee damage rolls equal to your Charisma modifier.

Guildmaster Thief Exploits

Guild Beatdown Guildmaster Thief Attack 11

You strike your foe, cuing your friend to take a cheap shot.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and one ally adjacent to the target can make a melee basic attack against it as a free action. If the ally hits and has combat advantage, that attack deals 1d6 extra damage.

Shifty Direction Guildmaster Thief Utility 12

With cutthroat timing, you help your ally carefully maneuver.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Close burst 5
Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you is missed by an attack
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: The target can shift a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier.

Biting Repositioning Guildmaster Thief Attack 20

Your attack creates just the right opportunity for you and your crew to back off—or to change the flow of the battle.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you and each ally within 5 squares of you can shift a number of squares equal to 1 + your Charisma modifier.
Miss: Half damage, and you or one ally within 5 squares of you can shift a number of squares equal to 1 + your Charisma modifier.

Halfling Quickblade

"I told you once, mate. I'm the fastest blade there is. Ain't braggin' if it's true."

Prerequisites: Halfling, rogue

Halflings have a long tradition of using light blades with great skill. Whether a tool of survival or an implement of battle, the simple dagger has much to recommend it. Even one as small as a halfling can hide a dagger on the body for use in a tight spot. A small body coupled with a small weapon means greater mobility and deadliness enhanced by a better chance for stealthy attacks.

Halflings also have a history of using light blades in their art and performances. Carving, acrobatic blade tricks, knife juggling, dagger throwing, and even dances that incorporate blades are common among halflings. For them, such activities are a natural meeting of physical traits and handy tools.

As with almost every other aspect of their life, halflings have a variety of stories that explain their propensity for using blades. Such yarns include the daring tales of Barras Quickblade, whose surname is probably one of convenient fiction.

Barras's legend begins when he was a lad who provided for his clan by stalking game with nothing but a knife and his wits. The legend grows into a spirited saga of an adventurous halfling who, along with a band of other intrepid characters, confronts ogres, yuan-ti, and worse with a tongue as pointed as his blade.

In the end, most stories have it that Barras sacrificed himself to save his comrades by leading a group of fomorians on a reckless chase through the Feywild. Darker versions say that Barras's spirit is still trapped, kept prisoner by the twisted fey. Halflings prefer to think that he passed from the world and that he stands at Avandra's side as her immortal companion.

You have the flair and the growing reputation to be a quickblade. Your fighting style is like that of your celebrated forebear. Perhaps, given time, your legend will be even greater.

RON LEMEN

Halfling Quickblade Path Features

First Cut (11th level): When you have combat advantage due to your First Strike class feature, add 1 to each die of Sneak Attack damage dealt by the attack.

Chancy Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to regain the use of the second chance racial power, instead of taking an extra action.

Ultimate Quickblade (16th level): You gain a bonus to initiative checks equal to your Charisma modifier.

Halfling Quickblade Exploits

Slash and Dash Halfling Quickblade Attack 11

After delivering two sharp cuts, you scamper to a safe position.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Targets: One or two creatures
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC, two attacks
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage per attack.
Effect: If you have combat advantage against every target of the attack, you can shift your speed and must end in a space that is not adjacent to a target of the attack.

Quickblade Scarper Halfling Quickblade Utility 12

Your surprising quickness makes it impossible to hit you solidly.

Daily ✦ Martial
Move Action Personal
Effect: You can shift your speed, and you take half damage from all attacks until the start of your next turn.

Quickblade Form Halfling Quickblade Attack 20

You move quickly, with your dagger poised to retaliate.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance, Weapon
Minor Action Personal
Effect: When an adjacent enemy makes an opportunity attack against you, you can make a melee basic attack with a light blade against that enemy as a free action. Until the stance ends, you can make this attack only once per round.

Master Spy

"I've seen the things you never intended me to see, heard whispers meant only for your conspirators. I know you well enough to take you down."

Prerequisite: Rogue

In halls of power, on the field of battle, and even among those who seek what is long lost, reliable information is king. Those in the know have an advantage over their allies and enemies and readily know the difference between the two. Thus have persons skilled in acquiring secrets always had ample work and reasons to hone their skills. Such agents learn how to conceal their true motives and cover their tracks while focusing on attaining their goals. Any lapse in precision can mean death.

Long ago, you learned how to sneak into places where you're not welcome. No secret is safe from your expertise and trickery. Subterfuge is your stock-in-trade. You know how best to peer into the intentions of your enemies, and you work undercover with the greatest of ease. Most of your enemies never know that you are in their midst, and you always manage to turn their ignorance against them.

Master Spy Path Features

Cover Action (11th level): Whenever you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain concealment at the end of that action. Until the end of your next turn, you have concealment and take no penalty to Stealth checks for moving more than 2 squares or for running.

Deadly Bluff (11th level): You can make a Bluff check to gain combat advantage against an adjacent enemy as a minor action instead of as a standard action (Player's Handbook, page 183). If your check beats the enemy's Insight check, the enemy grants combat advantage to you and your allies until the end of your next turn.

Double Agent (16th level): Once per encounter, when an enemy you can see targets one of its allies with a power or an ability, you can choose to gain the benefit of that power or ability as if you were one of its targets as well.

Master Spy Exploits

Lingering Revelation — Master Spy Attack 11

Your surprising attack slashes open your foe, causing the enemy to leave a trail you easily follow.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Will
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target cannot turn invisible or make Stealth checks until the end of your next turn.
Effect: You gain a +5 bonus to Insight checks and Perception checks opposed by the target until the end of the encounter.

Quick Change — Master Spy Utility 12

Your cunning actions plant a seed of doubt. Are you friend or foe?

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Effect: Make a Bluff check opposed by the target's Insight check. If you succeed, the target considers you an ally for the purpose of auras, opportunity attacks, and powers until the end of your next turn or until you attack the target or its allies.

Spymaster's Edge — Master Spy Attack 20

You slip your weapon past your enemy's defenses, using your knowledge of its tactics to stay one step ahead.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Will
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target takes a -5 penalty to attack rolls against you (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls against you (save ends).
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, whenever the target moves, you can move your speed or shift 1 square as an immediate reaction.

Rakish Swashbuckler

"With a face like that, it's no wonder your mother loves me best!"

Prerequisite: Rogue

Life is too short to take seriously. Danger lurks in every shadow, and an enemy waits behind every door. Those who spend every waking moment thinking about all the bad things that could happen never leave the house.

Instead of wringing your hands, you throw away all your worries and take a devil-may-care attitude. Sure, some say you will end up raking the coals of the Nine Hells because of your decadent living. In the end, though, who's the happier: you and your adventurous, libertine ways or the hidebound drudge shuddering under his covers?

On one hand, you're a charmer. Others find your infectious wit and bravado winsome. But you're also irreverent, irresponsible, and reckless. What's worst is that sometimes you have the hardest time keeping your mouth shut. Whether cracking a joke in the middle of a solemn funeral or shouting a barrage of insults at a demon, you can't help but stir up trouble. Deep down, you know life might be easier if you straightened up, but where's the fun in that?

When you face a serious challenge, your skill with weapons comes to the fore. Your tongue and your body language become secondary instruments of derision. You seed your exploits with cutting insults and disdain, goading your enemies into overextending or making other mistakes. When an enemy gives you an opening, you press the advantage. In the end, you stand triumphantly over a fallen foe, showing once again who the greater fool is.

Rakish Swashbuckler Path Features

Incorrigible Action (11th level): Whenever you spend an action point to take an extra action, enemies take a –2 penalty to attack rolls against you until the start of your next turn.

Vexing Foe (11th level): Enemies marked by anyone other than you take a –2 penalty to attack rolls against you (this is in addition to the penalty from being marked). Enemies marked by you grant combat advantage to your allies.

Dastardly Opportunist (16th level): Whenever an ally scores a critical hit against an enemy adjacent to you, you can make a melee basic attack against that enemy as an immediate reaction.

Rakish Swashbuckler Exploits

Abashing Stab — Rakish Swashbuckler Attack 11

With words or body language, you mock your foe as you deliver a cutting attack.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is marked until the start of your next turn. Until the start of your next turn, the target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls against you but gains a +5 bonus to damage rolls against you.

Mocking Footwork — Rakish Swashbuckler Utility 12

A derisive combat style keeps foes off balance.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, each time you hit an enemy that you have combat advantage against, you can either shift 1 square or slide the enemy 1 square.

Cutting Assault — Rakish Swashbuckler Attack 20

Your scornful manner puts your foe on the defensive, allowing you to make a sharp follow-up.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee 1
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: The target is weakened and slowed (save ends both).
Miss: The target is slowed until the end of its next turn.
Effect: Make a secondary attack against the target. The target is then marked until the end of the encounter, until you are knocked unconscious, or until another mark supersedes this one.
Secondary Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex. If the primary attack hit, you have combat advantage against the target.
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Raven Herald

"All beings come to an end. Seeing to that is my task."

Prerequisites: Rogue, must worship the Raven Queen

The transition to death is a holy road on which all living things are pilgrims. Every creature steps onto that road at birth. When fate's appointed hour comes, every creature steps off into whatever waits beyond the finite and visible path. So it has been, and so it should be. These are the truths of the Raven Queen.

Yet some do not hold to the proper path. Brazen mortals defy the natural order by avoiding that righteous hour of ending. A few do so by magic or other means, the most common of which is to become undead.

Undead aren't, in and of themselves, offensive to the Raven Queen. Still, shambling dead brought back to a mockery of life through foul magic deserve to be destroyed. So do those undead that defy true death by serving other entities, such as Orcus or Vecna. A few bold souls manage to elude death without otherwise blaspheming the Raven Queen's edicts. Still, demise must come for them in time as well.

It is the duty of any who serve the Raven Queen to bring down the proud, showing them the equality that only death provides. Within temples where the Raven Queen is esteemed above all others, the clergy offers support and training for those who would be her instruments of death. Cults form around the ideal of righteous killing, of becoming heralds of death. Common folk know of the Raven Queen's heralds and whisper of their mission when sudden loss of life visits the prideful, the wicked, or those cursed by undeath.

RON LEMEN

You have consciously devoted yourself to becoming a tool in the Raven Queen's wintry hands. Perhaps you came to this commitment on your own, or maybe you have an affiliation with the Raven Queen's hierarchy in the world. The origin of your connection to the mistress of winter makes little difference. As a harbinger of destiny, you know that every foe who falls before you has met its appropriate end.

Raven Herald Path Features

Death Rites (11th level): You gain the Ritual Caster feat and training in Religion. You also gain a +4 bonus to death saving throws.

Slaying Action (11th level): When you spend an action point to make a melee basic attack against an adjacent enemy that is bloodied or has the undead keyword, you gain a +2 bonus to the attack roll.

Radiant Striker (16th level): Each time you deal Sneak Attack damage, you can choose for that damage to be radiant damage.

Raven Herald Exploits

Unraveling Blow — Raven Herald Attack 11

You see the threads of fate tying your foe to existence, and you cut them.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If the target is bloodied when you make the attack or has the undead keyword, the attack deals 1[W] extra damage and you add one die to Sneak Attack damage dealt through this attack.

Death's Veil — Raven Herald Utility 12

With the Raven Queen's blessing and your nearness to death, you become spiritlike.

Daily ✦ Divine
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: An enemy bloodies you
Effect: You become invisible and insubstantial until the end of your next turn.

Herald the End — Raven Herald Attack 20

Your merciless strike shakes your foe to the core of its being. It then sees an end to its existence.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). If the target is bloodied or has the undead keyword, it is instead stunned (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and if the target is bloodied or has the undead keyword, it is dazed until the end of its next turn.

Strong-Arm Enforcer

"This is going to hurt you a lot more than it hurts me."

Prerequisites: Rogue, trained in Intimidate

The world has no shortage of bullies. In every town and every neighborhood roams a lout with more muscle than sense, and more bravado than backbone. Every gang has an enforcer or a leg breaker. Yet it takes more than a mean streak and a hard head to rise above mere thuggery.

Unlike such roughnecks, who are so often craven at heart, you have cold iron beneath your hardened visage. You have the skill and the mettle to make good on threats you offer. Intimidation, to you, is just fair warning, an omen foretelling the cost of crossing you.

Like most of your kind, you might have started with a criminal outfit or learned how to get along in the harsh training ground of the streets. Such unsavory surroundings taught you to survive. A reputation for handing out grim rewards to your enemies slowly enabled you to avoid fights through the use of your bladed stare. For a few of you, formal training as an interrogator or operative taught you to use fear and pain as a principal means of getting the job done. In any case, fear is as useful in battle as it is outside it.

You have set your mind to this harsh fact and have realized that most interactions are all about getting in and getting out on top. If the other guy believes you can and will hurt him if you need to, dealings are much more likely to go in your favor.

Although stealth and subterfuge have uses, combat isn't a subtle solution. You favor techniques that keep your enemies shaken. A traumatized, fearful, or angry foe is more likely to make a mistake. Encouraging such missteps—gleefully at times—you make yourself a target through your brutality. Then you and your allies capitalize on those slip-ups to win the day.

Strong-Arm Enforcer Path Features

Promise of Pain (11th level): When you spend an action point to take an extra action, attacks you make until the start of your next turn gain the rattling keyword.

Vicious Courage (11th level): When you hit with a rattling attack and have combat advantage against the target, you gain temporary hit points equal to your Charisma modifier.

Strong-Arm Mark (16th level): When you hit with a rattling attack and have combat advantage against the target, you can choose to mark the target until the end of your next turn. Until the end of your next turn, you also gain a bonus to damage rolls against the target equal to your Charisma modifier.

Strong-Arm Enforcer Exploits

Painful Reminder Strong-Arm Enforcer Attack 11

You thump your adversary one more time, in case he forgot you're top dog.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Target: One creature you hit on your previous turn
Attack: Dexterity vs. Will
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is marked until the end of your next turn.
Ruthless Ruffian: You slide the target 1 square.

Implied Threat Strong-Arm Enforcer Utility 12

Even when you manage to be polite, you have a threatening air.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, you gain a power bonus to Intimidate checks equal to your Strength modifier.

Callous Strike Strong-Arm Enforcer Attack 20

The cruelty of your attack causes other foes to withdraw from you.

Daily ✦ Martial, Rattling, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a light blade.
Primary Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. Make a secondary attack, which has the fear keyword.
Secondary Target: Each enemy within 1 square of you
Secondary Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: The secondary target moves 1 square away from you.
Miss: Half damage, and no secondary attack.

Tiefling Hellstalker

"Manifestations of the darkest flames of Hell cover me. You'll see the genuine article soon enough."

Prerequisites: Tiefling, rogue

Supernatural might comes naturally to a tiefling. Blood tied to the dark history of devils makes the reason for this obvious. In a vestigial form, this power lends vehemence to a tiefling's retaliation against attackers. History has shown that a tiefling who wishes to do so can reach inward for even more power, manifesting it in a variety of ways.

Those ways are mirrored in devils and their home. When mortals speak of the Nine Hells, they refer to fire, smoke, and the burning wrath of fiends. But the truth is more complex. The hells have ice, storms, and shadow. They even have combinations of these, the elements mixing in strange and unnatural ways to produce oddities such as lightless fire.

Some tieflings prefer to live up to expectations, displaying talent with anger and flame. They evoke terror by playing the devil's part. But they lack subtlety, which is a devil's best tool. They fail to acknowledge that mortals most fear what they can't see.

RON LEMEN

Drawing on the darkness within, a darkness that extends from the hells, a tiefling can gain uncanny advantages against enemies. Eyes can be dimmed, darkness and invisibility can be pierced, and flesh can be burned without light.

You know this, because you have learned to summon the darkness enshrouding your soul. By coupling it with your deadly martial skills, you become a terror in lightless halls under the earth, as well as on shadowed streets and in moonless wilds. Where light does find you, you snuff it in the sight of your foes. Eventually, the shadows you call up will be able to, at times, burn your enemies like extraplanar blackfire.

Tiefling Hellstalker Path Features

Hell's Shadows (11th level): When you have concealment or total concealment, you gain a +1 bonus to all defenses.

Hellstalker Action (11th level): You can spend an action point to gain concealment until the end of your next turn, instead of taking an extra action.

Gloom Wrath (16th level): Your infernal wrath racial power also grants combat advantage to you for your next attack roll against an enemy that hit you since your last turn.

Tiefling Hellstalker Exploits

Dimming Blow Tiefling Hellstalker Attack 11

To the senses of the one you strike, gloom covers you.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee or Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a crossbow, a light blade, or a sling.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and you become invisible to the target until the end of your next turn.

Devil's Sight Tiefling Hellstalker Utility 12

You tap your heritage and gain a piercing vision.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, you gain darkvision and the ability to perceive invisible creatures and objects as if they were visible.

Blackfire Wind Tiefling Hellstalker Attack 20

Shadowy blazes engulf your foes and dim your image as you strike true.

Daily ✦ Fire, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends).
Effect: You are invisible to the targets until the end of your next turn.

CHAPTER 4

Warlord

MARK TEDIN

"Recklessness is still a tactical choice, and adaptability is an asset to any leader. If putting your own skin on the line saves your friends some pain, I say recklessness is more fun."

Whether called to lead by talent or fate, or trained to lead as a soldier or a noble, a warlord must always acknowledge the importance of the team. A warlord forms the core of a squad, using martial know-how to manipulate any battle toward a favorable outcome. The notion of martial leadership includes countless techniques of command. Raw charisma can push allies to new heights, and strategic genius can create triumph where none seems possible. However, those are only two possibilities among many.

You could be the kind of leader who likes hard-hitting tactics and living on the edge. Maybe you just prefer to risk yourself rather than your friends, knowing that you have the guile and strength to pull off your style of daring leadership. Instead, you might prefer to play it fast and loose, observing the tactical situation and solving the problem with astounding ingenuity.

Rouse your allies to wrath and determination, come up with incisive tactics on the fly, create openings with your headlong rushes, or mix and match your strategies. No matter how you prefer to lead your allies to victory, this chapter is for you. In it, you'll find the following information.

- New Warlord Builds: Charge into battle as an aggressive bravura warlord, or test your creativity and battle acumen as a resourceful warlord.
- New Class Features: Two alternative choices give you the opportunity to focus your warlord even more sharply on one of the new builds.
- New Warlord Powers: Trick your enemies into overextending, and then make them pay. If you prefer more subtle methods, the exploits in this section also have you and your allies covered.
- New Paragon Paths: Channel your knack for leading into one of twelve new paths. Lead by following the example of a deity, march to traditional methods set by legendary generals, or let the law of the frontier be your guide.

NEW WARLORD BUILDS

As alternatives to the warlord builds described in the Player's Handbook, this chapter presents two types of warlords and two groups of warlord powers that explore new leadership approaches. The bravura warlord centers on one set of these powers and the resourceful warlord on the other. These new powers can be useful to any warlord, however.

Bravura Warlord

You lead through a combination of daring attacks and aggressive tactics. Using your powers is risky, but the rewards for success are great. You help your allies find the nerve to profit from bold maneuvers and punch into enemies head-on. Compared to other warlords, you're oriented more toward handling heavy fighting yourself, and your attack powers rely mainly on Strength. Charisma is your second priority, for it lets you get away with your audacious stunts yet maintain the respect of your comrades. Mental acuity and quick reflexes in battle are valuable to any warlord, so Intelligence is also important to you. The Bravura Presence class feature is designed to complement this build.

Suggested Feat: Improved Bravura* (Human feat: Action Surge)

Suggested Skills: Endurance, Heal, History, Intimidate

Suggested At-Will Powers: brash assault, furious smash*

Suggested Encounter Power: *luring focus

Suggested Daily Power: *fearless rescue

*New option presented in this book

Resourceful Warlord

You don't limit yourself to a particular set of tactics, instead adapting to the mistakes and openings your enemies provide and endeavoring to create opportunities. You lead through a diverse selection of shouted commands, ongoing stratagems, martial stances, and flexible plans. Allies can expect help in a wide variety of circumstances. As is typical for a warlord, Strength is your primary ability, but your powers make use of Intelligence and Charisma, encouraging you to pick and choose among the powers that other traditions have to offer. The Resourceful Presence class feature is designed to complement this build.

Suggested Feat: Improved Resources* (Human feat: Durable)

Suggested Skills: Athletics, Diplomacy, Endurance, Heal

Suggested At-Will Powers: *commander's strike, opening shove

Suggested Encounter Power: *hammer formation

Suggested Daily Power: *calculated assault

*New option presented in this book

NEW CLASS FEATURES

These two variants of the Commanding Presence class feature are available to any warlord. You can pick one of them instead of another version, such as Inspiring Presence or Tactical Presence.

Bravura Presence: When an ally who can see you spends an action point to take an extra action and uses the action to make an attack, the ally can choose to take advantage of this feature before the attack roll. If the ally chooses to do so and the attack hits, the ally can either make a basic attack or take a move action after the attack as a free action. If the attack misses, the ally grants combat advantage to all enemies until the end of his or her next turn.

Resourceful Presence: When an ally who can see you spends an action point to take an extra action and uses the action to make an attack, that attack gains a bonus to damage equal to one-half your level + your Intelligence modifier. If the attack hits no target, the ally gains temporary hit points equal to one-half your level + your Charisma modifier.

NEW WARLORD POWERS

A warlord commands the field with a variety of powers that bolster allies and define the warlord as a warrior and leader. The bravura style of leadership is the ultimate lead-from-the-front method, complete with brash stunts that bait your enemies to give your comrades the upper hand. A resourceful warlord is the best at adaptability and can mold exploits designed for this leadership technique. This section also expands the abilities of all warlords, with some powers focused on other warlord builds and general exploits usable by any worthy commander.

Level 1 At-Will Exploits

Brash Assault — Warlord Attack 1

Your bold lunge leaves you open to an enemy's counterattack, but that's just what you want.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Increase damage to 2[W] + Strength modifier at 21st level.
Effect: The target can make a melee basic attack against you as a free action and has combat advantage for the attack. If the target makes this attack, an ally of your choice within 5 squares of the target can make a basic attack against the target as a free action and has combat advantage for the attack.

Opening Shove — Warlord Attack 1

You knock your foe off-balance while shouting a quick command to an ally.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: You push the target 1 square. Then choose one ally you can see. That ally either shifts a number of squares equal to your Intelligence modifier or makes a melee basic attack against the target.

Level 1 Encounter Exploits

Hammer Formation — Warlord Attack 1

You signal your allies to attack with abandon, dishing out as much damage as possible.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a heavy thrown weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and each ally adjacent to you deals 1[W] extra damage on a hit with the next attack he or she makes before the start of your next turn.
Resourceful Presence: Each ally within a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier can deal the extra damage.

Luring Focus — Warlord Attack 1

Your attack wounds your adversary, and another enemy moves closer, hoping to take advantage of your concentration.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. Choose another enemy within 5 squares of you and pull it 1 square.
Bravura Presence: Pull the enemy a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Myrmidon Formation — Warlord Attack 1

Knowing that regrouping increases morale, you attack while calling for your allies to fall into line.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: At the start of your next turn, each ally adjacent to you gains 5 temporary hit points.

Nimble Footwork — Warlord Attack 1

You attack and step to one side, allowing an ally to slip closer.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you can shift 1 square. After you shift, one ally within 2 squares of you can shift 1 square as a free action.

Level 1 Daily Exploits

Calculated Assault — Warlord Attack 1

Your attack proves your superior command of the situation.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and one of your allies within 5 squares of you gains a power bonus to damage rolls against the target equal to 1 + your Intelligence modifier until the end of the encounter. You can transfer the bonus to another ally within 5 squares of you as a minor action.

Concentrated Attack — Warlord Attack 1

You and your companion combine your attacks to deliver a nasty blow.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: One ally within 10 squares of you can make a basic attack against the target as a free action. The ally gains a bonus to the attack roll and the damage roll equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Fearless Rescue — Warlord Attack 1

One of your allies falls, and without regard for your own well-being, you rush to make the attacker pay. Your bravery inspires your ally to fight on.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy within 5 squares of you reduces an ally to 0 hit points or fewer
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: Before the attack, you can move to the nearest square from which you can attack the target.
Attack: Strength + 1 vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: The ally can spend a healing surge and regains an additional 1d6 hit points for every opportunity attack you provoke while moving to the target.

Lead by Example — Warlord Attack 1

You step forward to attack, showing your allies how it's done—and whom to hit next.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift 1 square.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and your allies gain combat advantage against the target until the start of your next turn.
Miss: Two allies within 5 squares of you can each shift 1 square and make a basic attack as a free action.

Level 2 Utility Exploits

Adaptive Stratagem — Warlord Utility 2

Your companion has the ability and the will. You provide the plan and the motivation.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 10
Target: One ally in burst
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, the ally gains his or her choice of a power bonus to damage rolls equal to your Intelligence modifier or a power bonus to saving throws equal to your Charisma modifier.
Resourceful Presence: The ally gains both bonuses.

LUCIO PARRILLO

Covering Maneuver — Warlord Utility 2

Responding to your expertise, one ally steps in to cover another's recovery.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Free Action Close burst 5
Trigger: You or an ally within 5 squares of you uses second wind
Target: One ally in burst other than the triggering character
Effect: The target can shift 1 square as a free action. In addition, an enemy in the burst is marked by the target until the end of the enemy's next turn.

Heroic Effort — Warlord Utility 2

On the brink of exhaustion, you still manage to rally your allies.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 10
Requirement: You must be bloodied.
Target: Each ally in burst
Effect: The target can add your Charisma modifier to damage rolls until you are no longer bloodied. Also, you gain temporary hit points equal to your level + your Charisma modifier.

Inspired Belligerence — Warlord Utility 2

You lead your allies to use your enemies' defensive openings to deliver more punishment.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One enemy in burst granting combat advantage to you or an ally
Effect: Until the start of your next turn, all your allies gain combat advantage against the target.
Inspiring Presence: Until the start of your next turn, your allies add your Charisma modifier to damage rolls against the target.

Motivated Recovery — Warlord Utility 2

At your encouragement, an injured ally exploits an opportunity to shine.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One bloodied ally in burst
Effect: The target regains the use of second wind and gains a power bonus to his or her next attack roll equal to your Charisma modifier.

Reckless Opportunity — Warlord Utility 2

You hurl an impulsive command at an ally, hoping that he understands it properly.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 5
Targets: One enemy in burst and you or one ally in burst
Effect: The targets make opposed initiative checks. The winner gains combat advantage against the loser until the end of the winner's next turn.
Bravura Presence: You or your ally gains a power bonus to the initiative check equal to your Charisma modifier.

Repositioning Command — Warlord Utility 2

With a single word from you, your allies shift to more advantageous positions.

Daily ✦ Martial
Move Action Close burst 5
Targets: You and each ally in burst
Effect: Each target can shift 1 square.
Tactical Presence: Increase the burst to 10.

Rub Some Dirt on It — Warlord Utility 2

With a wisecrack, you give your comrade a little courage despite his wounds.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Melee touch
Target: You if you're bloodied or one bloodied ally
Effect: The target gains temporary hit points equal to 5 + your Charisma modifier.

Level 3 Encounter Exploits

Bloody Ending — Warlord Attack 3

You cunningly aim to finish off a wounded foe.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One bloodied creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier + Intelligence modifier damage.
Resourceful Presence: Your allies gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls against the enemy until the end of your next turn.

Dicey Predicament — Warlord Attack 3

Surrounded by enemies, you fake weakness and make them careless. Then you suddenly strike.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be flanked.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and all enemies adjacent to you grant combat advantage to all your allies within 5 squares of you until the end of your next turn.
Bravura Presence: The attack deals extra damage equal to your Charisma modifier.

Flattening Charge — Warlord Attack 3

The force of your hurtling attack knocks your enemy flat or leaves your defenses down.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must charge and use this power in place of a melee basic attack.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you knock the target prone.
Bravura Presence: If the attack hits, this power is not expended.
Miss: The target gains combat advantage against you until the start of your next turn.

Follow Me In — Warlord Attack 3

You rush into battle with a decisive attack, rallying a friend behind you.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and one ally within 10 squares of you gains a +2 power bonus to speed until the end of your next turn.
Tactical Presence: If the ally charges while the bonus to speed is in effect, the ally's movement during the charge does not provoke opportunity attacks.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Shielding Retaliation — Warlord Attack 3

You step in front of an attack meant for your ally and give the attacker a staggering blow. Your friend can then move to a better position.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee 1
Trigger: An adjacent enemy hits an ally with an opportunity attack
Effect: The opportunity attack hits you instead.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the ally can shift 2 squares.

Level 5 Daily Exploits

Pike Hedge — Warlord Attack 5

Setting yourself to foil enemy movement, you're ready to strike anyone who comes near.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy enters a square within your reach
Requirement: You must be wielding a reach weapon.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: Whenever an enemy enters a square adjacent to you or to an ally adjacent to you, you deal damage to that enemy equal to your Strength modifier as an opportunity action. This effect lasts until the end of the encounter.

A Rock and a Hard Place — Warlord Attack 5

You focus to work in concert with your companion, harrying your opponent with relentless blows.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance, Weapon
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, whenever an enemy adjacent to you attacks an ally of yours and misses, you deal damage to the enemy equal to your Intelligence modifier as a free action.
Tactical Presence: If the enemy is marked by an ally, deal 1[W] + Intelligence modifier damage instead.

Scent of Victory — Warlord Attack 5

As your enemies stagger from their wounds, you can smell victory. Your allies respond with a furious assault.

Daily ✦ Martial
Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: Each ally in burst
Effect: Each target can make a melee basic attack as a free action against a bloodied enemy adjacent to him or her.

Situational Advantage — Warlord Attack 5

Your attack against an unprepared enemy gives you and your allies a decided advantage.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a heavy thrown weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you and each ally within 10 squares of you deal extra damage equal to your Intelligence modifier when hitting with combat advantage.
Resourceful Presence: Your extra damage is 1[W] + Intelligence modifier instead.

Staggering Spin — Warlord Attack 5

With a wild, wheeling attack, you send your foes careening into your allies' waiting weapons.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target 1 square. If the target is then adjacent to any of your allies, those allies can make a melee basic attack against the target as an opportunity action.
Miss: Half damage, and no push.

Level 6 Utility Exploits

Encouraging Stance — Warlord Utility 6

With a daunting bearing, you unleash a litany of oaths as you attack, pushing your allies onward.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, when you hit with a melee attack, choose a bloodied ally within 5 squares of you. That ally gains temporary hit points equal to 5 + your Charisma modifier.
Bravura Presence: You can choose to grant the temporary hit points when you miss with a melee attack, but that grants the target of the attack combat advantage against you until the end of your next turn.

Forward Observer — Warlord Utility 6

Discerning the proper angle of fire, you point out concealed enemies to your allies.

At-Will ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Choose one enemy you can see. Until the end of your next turn, any ally who can see or hear you doesn't take the normal penalty to attack rolls for cover or concealment when attacking that enemy (the penalties for superior cover and total concealment still apply).

Guileful Switch — Warlord Utility 6

You spring a trap on your opponents, surprising them with your clever stratagem.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You and one ally you can see switch places in the initiative order. Your turn ends when you use this power, and the ally takes his or her next turn immediately, even if he or she has already acted during this round. You then act when your ally would have acted.

Phalanx Formation — Warlord Utility 6

You and your allies link shields for better defense.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Effect: Until the stance ends, whenever you are adjacent to any ally who is using a shield, you and the ally gain a +1 power bonus to AC and Reflex.

Rousing Words — Warlord Utility 6

As your ally's spirit wanes, you manage to pick just the right words to inspire him.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Martial
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: You or one ally in burst
Effect: The target can spend two healing surges.
Inspiring Presence: The target regains additional hit points equal to 5 + your Charisma modifier.

Tactical Supervision — Warlord Utility 6

You lend your expertise to your ally to help her strike a foe.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 10
Trigger: An ally makes a basic attack, a bull rush, or a charge within 10 squares of you
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: The target gains a power bonus to the attack roll equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Tempting Target — Warlord Utility 6

You invite attack and distract your foes in the process.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, you grant combat advantage to all enemies, but any enemies adjacent to you grant combat advantage to your allies.
Bravura Presence: When an enemy adjacent to you becomes bloodied or is reduced to 0 hit points, you regain hit points equal to your Charisma modifier.

Level 7 Encounter Exploits

Deadly Returns — Warlord Attack 7

You create an opening that allows an ally to capitalize on your foe's aggression.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you choose one ally within 5 squares of you. Until the end of your next turn, if the target makes a melee attack against you or the ally, the ally can make an opportunity attack against the target.

Phalanx Assault — Warlord Attack 7

From behind your ready shield, you pound your foe and bark an order, calling for defensive tactics.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and allies adjacent to you gain a +2 power bonus to AC and Reflex until the end of your next turn.
Resourceful Presence: Adjacent allies gain the +2 power bonus to AC and Reflex even if you miss.

Provoke Overextension — Warlord Attack 7

You goad the enemy into pressing too far, setting up your ally's counterstrike.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target must make a basic attack against you as a free action. If the basic attack misses, an ally of yours can make a basic attack against the target as a free action.
Bravura Presence: You gain a bonus to your AC against the target's basic attack equal to your Charisma modifier and your ally gains the same bonus to his or her basic attack's damage roll.

Sacrificial Lure — Warlord Attack 7

Your wild strike lands solidly and inspires a comrade, but it leaves you vulnerable.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier + Charisma modifier damage. Until the start of your next turn, one ally within 5 squares of you gains a power bonus to his or her next attack roll equal to your Charisma modifier.
Effect: You take a -2 penalty to AC until the start of your next turn.

Stirring Force — Warlord Attack 7

With a mighty strike, you spur your friends to shake off their hindrances.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and any ally within 2 squares of you can make a saving throw.
Resourceful Presence: Your allies gain a power bonus to the saving throws equal to your Intelligence modifier.

War of Attrition — Warlord Attack 7

Little by little, your allies turn the tide against the enemy.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. Until the start of your next turn, any ally who can see you gains a +1 power bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls with basic attacks and at-will powers.
Inspiring Presence: The bonus equals your Charisma modifier.

Level 9 Daily Exploits

Blood Designation — Warlord Attack 9

The blood you've drawn acts as a target for your comrades.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: The target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends). As long as the ongoing damage persists, your allies gain combat advantage against the target.
Inspiring Presence: Add your Charisma modifier to the ongoing damage.

Denying Mark — Warlord Attack 9

Your smite incites your enemy to focus on you, but only with weaker attacks.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is marked (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is marked until the end of its next turn.
Effect: The target cannot recharge its powers as long as it is marked by this power.
Bravura Presence: The target also cannot spend action points as long as it is marked by this power.

Disheartening Flurry — Warlord Attack 9

The skill you show with your series of attacks dismays your enemies.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each enemy in burst you can see
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws until the end of the encounter.

Stay on Target — Warlord Attack 9

You and your comrades train your fire on an enemy drawing near.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Reaction Ranged 3
Trigger: An enemy enters a square within 3 squares of you
Requirement: You must be wielding a heavy thrown weapon.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier + Intelligence modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Each ally within 2 squares of you can make a ranged basic attack against the target as an immediate reaction, with a bonus to the damage roll equal to your Intelligence modifier.

WAYNE ENGLAND (2)

Warlord's Recovery — Warlord Attack 9

You point out an opportunity perfect for an ally's attacks, renewing your own determination to end this fight.

Daily ✦ Martial
Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: One ally in burst
Effect: As a free action, the target can make an attack using an encounter attack power that he or she has already used during this encounter. Also, if you have used all your encounter attack powers, you regain the use of a warlord encounter attack power you have used during this encounter.

Level 10 Utility Exploits

Bolstering Shout — Warlord Utility 10

Your war cry quickly rallies your allies.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Martial
Minor Action Close burst 10
Target: Each ally in burst
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, each target regains additional hit points equal to your Charisma modifier when he or she uses second wind. Each target can also choose to use second wind as a minor action but gain no bonus to defenses from it.

Instant Planning — Warlord Utility 10

Your instinctive reactions to the situation turn the tide in your favor.

Daily ✦ Martial
Minor Action Close burst 5
Targets: You and each ally in burst
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, every target gains your choice of a power bonus to attack rolls equal to your Charisma modifier, a power bonus to speed equal to your Charisma modifier, or a power bonus to all defenses equal to your Intelligence modifier.
Resourceful Presence: You can grant a different bonus to each target.

Marked Revelation — Warlord Utility 10

With a fake command and your ally's practiced response, you identify that ally as a danger that your enemies should heed.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Standard Action Close burst 3
Target: Each unmarked enemy in burst
Effect: The targets are marked by an ally of your choice until the end of your next turn.
Tactical Presence: Increase the burst to 5.

Rallying Deflection — Warlord Utility 10

You catch the arrow on your shield and send your ally forward to meet the shooter.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Interrupt Personal
Trigger: An enemy hits you with a ranged attack
Requirement: You must be using a shield.
Effect: Reduce the attack's damage by one-half your level. One ally within 5 squares of the attacker can charge the attacker as a free action.

Strider Stance — Warlord Utility 10

You stand ready to change position quickly or to point out opportunities for your allies to do so.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, once on each of your turns you can use a move action to shift 1 square and gain a +2 power bonus to damage rolls until the start of your next turn, or you can use a move action to allow an ally within 5 squares of you to do the same as a free action.

Unintended Feint — Warlord Utility 10

As your ally misses, you spot an opening that the attack created. You point it out so that your friend can immediately take advantage of it.

Daily ✦ Martial
Immediate Reaction Close burst 5
Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you misses with an attack
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: The target can reroll the attack and has combat advantage for it.

Warlord Gods

As mentioned in the Player's Handbook, warlords favor martial gods such as Bahamut and Kord, and warlords with strong strategic leanings often follow Erathis or Ioun. Three paragon paths in this book reflect those preferences for warlord gods: the battlelord of Kord (page 118), the dujun of Erathis (page 122), and the platinum warlord (page 127), devoted to Bahamut.

Level 13 Encounter Exploits

Befuddling Cry — Warlord Attack 13

Your warning shout allows your ally to turn an opening into an advantage.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 5
Trigger: An enemy within 5 squares of you hits an ally with an opportunity attack
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: The target makes a melee basic attack against the attacking enemy as a free action. If this attack hits, the attacking enemy rerolls the opportunity attack against a different creature of your choice within its reach.
Resourceful Presence: The enemy gains a bonus to the new attack and damage rolls equal to your Charisma modifier.

Grim Mark — Warlord Attack 13

Your sidling approach belies your excruciating follow-up, which opens your opponent to attacks from your allies.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Effect: Before the attack, you can shift 2 squares.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is dazed and marked until the end of your next turn.
Resourceful Presence: While the target is marked by this power, your allies gain a power bonus to damage rolls against the target equal to your Charisma modifier.

Headstrong Bravery — Warlord Attack 13

You smite your enemy without regard for your safety, inciting the enemy against you and your allies against it.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you mark the target until the end of your next turn. Until the start of your next turn, you grant combat advantage to all enemies, and your allies gain a +2 power bonus to damage rolls against the target.
Bravura Presence: Your allies instead gain a power bonus to damage rolls against the target equal to 2 + your Charisma modifier.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Pincer Maneuver — Warlord Attack 13

At your command, two of your allies move to flank a foe.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Standard Action Close burst 5
Targets: One or two allies in burst
Effect: Each target can shift 3 squares and make a melee basic attack against an adjacent enemy as a free action. If the target is flanking the enemy, he or she gains a bonus to the damage roll equal to your Charisma modifier.
Bravura Presence: The target gains a power bonus to the attack roll equal to your Charisma modifier.

Unified in Blood — Warlord Attack 13

Rushing to defend a friend in trouble, you make a bold attack. Your friend then defends himself by your example.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee weapon
Trigger: An enemy within 5 squares of you bloodies an ally
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: Before the attack, you can move your speed.
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the bloodied ally can make a basic attack against the target as a free action.

Ventured Gains — Warlord Attack 13

Rushing to take your adversary down a notch, you ignore your defenses but allow your allies to take advantageous shots.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage. If this attack bloodies the target, two of your adjacent allies can each make a basic attack against the target as a free action.
Bravura Presence: Each ally gains a power bonus to the basic attack roll equal to your Charisma modifier.
Effect: You grant combat advantage to all enemies until the start of your next turn.

Withdrawal Gambit — Warlord Attack 13

With an interposing attack, you give your companions the determination and the space to improve the tactical situation.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and each of your allies adjacent to the target can make a saving throw and then shift 1 square as a free action.
Tactical Presence: Each ally gains a power bonus to the saving throw equal to your Charisma modifier, and each can instead shift a number of squares equal to 1 + your Intelligence modifier.

Level 15 Daily Exploits

Anticipate Attack — Warlord Attack 15

Maneuvering to make your enemy open itself up to attack, you deliver a passing blow. Your comrades follow up with strikes of their own.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Immediate Interrupt Melee 1
Trigger: An adjacent enemy hits you with a melee attack
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you can shift 1 square.
Effect: Each ally adjacent to the target can make an opportunity attack against it and has combat advantage for the attack.
Tactical Presence: Each ally gains a bonus to the damage roll equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Arkhosia's Fury — Warlord Attack 15

In a traditional dragonborn maneuver, you storm in, smite an enemy, spin away, and punish yet another foe.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you can shift 2 squares.
Miss: Half damage, and you can shift 1 square.
Effect: After you shift, you can make a basic attack against a different target.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Formidable Smash — Warlord Attack 15

Your strike leaves your foe hesitant to attack you or anyone near you.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage. Until the end of the encounter, the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls against you or any ally who is adjacent to you when it attacks (the target takes no penalty if it is immune to fear).
Miss: Half damage, and no penalty.

Grim Instruction — Warlord Attack 15

With a remarkable show of skill, you school your foe, revealing the flaws in its fighting style.

Daily ✦ Martial, Reliable, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls and grants combat advantage to you and your allies (save ends both).

Infectious Determination — Warlord Attack 15

With each strike you deliver, your allies gain more resolve to grab victory from the jaws of defeat.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Primary Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: As a free action, each ally within 5 squares of you can make a saving throw. Make a secondary attack against the target.
Resourceful Presence: Each ally gains a power bonus to the saving throw equal to your Intelligence modifier.
Secondary Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you knock the target prone. Each ally within 5 squares of you can spend a healing surge as a free action.
Resourceful Presence: Each ally adds your Charisma modifier to the hit points regained.

War Master's Assault — Warlord Attack 15

You orchestrate a devastating coordinated attack.

Daily ✦ Martial
Standard Action Close burst 3
Targets: You and each ally in burst
Effect: Each target can charge or make a basic attack as a free action, with a power bonus to the attack roll and the damage roll equal to your Charisma modifier.

Level 16 Utility Exploits

Decisive Timing — Warlord Utility 16

Practice has honed your party's maneuvering to near perfection.

Encounter ✦ Martial
No Action Close burst 5
Trigger: You and your allies make initiative checks at the beginning of an encounter
Targets: You and two allies in burst or three allies in burst
Effect: You swap the initiative check results of the targets.
Tactical Presence: Until the end of his or her first turn in the encounter, the target with the lowest initiative result gains a power bonus to damage rolls equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Encouraging Remark — Warlord Utility 16

You whisper a few words of support to a comrade heading back into the fray.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One ally
Effect: The target gains temporary hit points equal to 10 + your Charisma modifier. Until the end of your next turn, the target also gains a power bonus to damage rolls, one defense, or saving throws equal to your Charisma modifier.

Flanking Stance — Warlord Utility 16

You take up a vulnerable position that forces your enemies into disadvantageous positions as well.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the stance ends, any enemy adjacent to you gains combat advantage against you but grants combat advantage to your allies.
Bravura Presence: Allies gain a bonus to melee damage rolls against enemies adjacent to you equal to your Charisma modifier.

Side by Side — Warlord Utility 16

You and an ally form a deadly team, fighting in tandem.

Daily ✦ Martial, Stance
Minor Action Melee 1
Target: One ally
Effect: Until the stance ends, you and the target both gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls, AC, and Reflex when you're adjacent to each other.

WAYNE ENGLAND

Warning Shout Warlord Utility 16

Hearing your call of alarm, your friend leaps for cover.

Daily ✦ Martial
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 5
Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you is hit by a ranged or an area attack
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: The target can shift a number of squares equal to 1 + your Intelligence modifier.

Level 17 Encounter Exploits

Bloody Termination Warlord Attack 17

Your adversary reels from wounds, and you mean to bring that torment to an end.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One bloodied creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier + Charisma modifier damage.
Resourceful Presence: If the attack's damage doesn't reduce the target to 0 hit points, make a melee basic attack against the target, with a bonus to the attack roll and the damage roll equal to your Charisma modifier.

Deadly Inspiration Warlord Attack 17

Your bold strike inspires your allies to show off their fighting prowess.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and allies within 5 squares of you deal 1[W] extra damage with their at-will weapon attacks that hit until the start of your next turn.

Girding Strike Warlord Attack 17

You smite your enemy as you shout encouragement to your allies, imparting the vigor they need to push on.

Encounter ✦ Healing, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage, and each ally within 10 squares of you regains the use of second wind.
Resourceful Presence: Any ally who uses second wind before the end of your next turn regains additional hit points equal to your Charisma modifier.

Martial Healing

What explains your warlord's ability to heal your allies' wounds? It might seem almost magical—and certainly at the highest levels it is superhuman. But your inspiring word is fundamentally a reflection of your ability to get your allies to do their best. Under your leadership, they can draw on reserves they didn't know they had, perform heroic deeds they never thought they could, and keep fighting when the pain and terror would otherwise bring them down.

Into the Breach! — Warlord Attack 17

You leap forward boldly, shouting a battle cry that fills your allies with the same courage.

Encounter ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and one ally within 5 squares of you can charge the target as a free action.
Inspiring Presence: The charging ally gains a power bonus to the attack roll and the damage roll equal to your Charisma modifier.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Level 19 Daily Exploits

Exhorted Counterattack — Warlord Attack 19

You shout a warning to a comrade under fire, who avoids the brunt of the attack and responds with a vicious counterattack.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial
Immediate Reaction Close burst 20
Trigger: An ally within 20 squares of you is hit by an enemy
Target: The triggering ally in burst
Effect: The target regains hit points as if he or she had spent a healing surge and then makes two basic attacks against the attacking enemy as an opportunity action. If either basic attack hits, the enemy is dazed (save ends).
Inspiring Presence: The ally regains additional hit points equal to your Charisma modifier and gains a bonus to the damage rolls equal to your Charisma modifier.

Inspiring Charge — Warlord Attack 19

Giving your companions a quick signal, you charge forward to glory, inspiring them.

Daily ✦ Healing, Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Effect: As a free action, each ally within 10 squares of you can shift a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier and then spend a healing surge.
Special: When charging, you can use this power in place of a melee basic attack.

Storm of Carnage — Warlord Attack 19

For you and your comrades, every miss is just a new opportunity.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Make a melee basic attack against the target.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, each time you or an adjacent ally misses with an encounter or a daily melee attack power, that character can make a melee basic attack against the same target as a free action.

Unleash Hell — Warlord Attack 19

On your command, you and your allies unleash a ranged barrage upon your enemies.

Daily ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must be wielding a heavy thrown weapon.
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC. The attack can score a critical hit on a roll of 18-20.
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage.
